Miscellaneous Appeal No. 20 of 1937

January 30, 1941

THOMAS, C. J. BENNETT AND GHULAM HASAN, JJ.

GHULAM ABBAS AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS —APPELLANTS

PRINCE SAFDAR JAH ZAHID ALI MIRZA AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY —RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII r. 4—One of respondents dying—His legal representatives not brought on record in time — Test whether appeal abates as whole, stated — Application under s. 4, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934)—Some of creditors opposing—Application dismissed—Appeal—One of creditors respondents dying—Legal representatives not brought on record — Appeal, held abated as whole.

The question whether an appeal has or has not abated as a whole on the failure of the appellant to bring on record the legal representatives of one of the deceased respondents depends upon the nature and circumstances of each case. The test in such cases should be (1) whether the interests of the defendants in the suit are joint and indivisible so that the interest of the deceased cannot be separated from those of the rest and (2) whether in the event of the appeal being allowed as against the remaining respondents, there would or would not be two inconsistent and contradictory decrees in the same case with respect to the same subject-matter. [p. 4, col. 2.]

An application under s 4, U. P. Encum. Estates Act was opposed by some of the creditors on the ground that the applicants were not "landlords" within the meaning of the Encum. Estates Act. The Special Judge upheld this objection and dismissed the application. During the pendency of the appeal one of the creditors who opposed the application and who was one of the respondents died and his legal representatives were not brought on record within limitation :

Held, that the interests of the creditors in defeating the application of the appellants were joint and indivisible and the interests of the deceased creditor could not be separated from those of the rest and the heirs of the deceased creditor were necessary parties. The appeal therefore abated as a whole as otherwise it would lead to conflicting and inconsistent decisions with regard to the same subject-matter. 165 Ind. Cas. 45 (2) and 114 Ind. Cas. 417 (5), referred to. [p. 5, col. 2; p. 6, col. 1.]

Misc. A. against the order of the Special Judge, 1st Grade, Lucknow, dated September 30, 1936.

Mr. Mahabir Prasad Srivastava, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. S. Misra and S. N. Srivastava, for Respondents Nos. 6 to 9.

Mr. Raj Kumar Srivastava, for Respondents Nos. 10 and 11.

Order of Reference

Zia-ul-Hasan, J.—(July 19, 1940).—In this appeal we have dismissed the appellants' application for setting aside the abatement of the appeal against Pandit Brahma Dutt, respondent No. 5, and the question now is whether the appeal should proceed against the remaining respondents or should be deemed to have abated in its entirety, as is contended on behalf of the respondents.

The appeal is against an order of a learned Special Judge under the U. P. Encum. Estates Act holding that the present appellants have no locus standi to apply under the U. P. Encum. Estates Act and rejecting their application as not maintainable. The respondents are the various creditors of the appellants. We have heard the learned Counsel for the parties on the question whether or not the appeal has abated as a whole and I am clearly of opinion that it has not abated as against respondents other than Pandit Brahma Dutt deceased. It is argued by the learned Counsel for the respondents that in case the appeal is allowed by this Court there will be two conflicting decisions one of the Special Judge between the appellants and the heirs of Pandit Brahma Dutt that the appellants are not entitled to apply under the U. P. Encum. Estates Act and the other of this Court's decision between the appellants and the other respondents that they are so entitled, and reliance is placed on the cases of Fazal Mohammad Khan v.

Ali Mohammad Khan, (1934 O. W. N. 1487) (1), Ram Jas Tewari v. Ram Lal Tewari, (1935 O. W. N. 297) (2) and Mohammad Faruq v. Azizul Hasan, (1935 O. W. N. 401) (3). There is, however, nothing in these cases in my view which can reasonably be construed as supporting the view that the appeal in the present case has wholly abated. The law appears to me to have laid down clearly in Ram Jas Tewari's case (2), in which it was held that the question, whether an appeal can or cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representatives of a deceased respondent, must depend upon the nature of each case, and it is impossible to lay down a general rule applicable to all such cases. It was further said that each case must depend upon its own circumstance and that if in such a case the decree under appeal is a joint decree in favour of all the respondents the appeal abates as a whole, for if the whole appeal is allowed not to abate, the decision may result in two conflicting decisions with regard to the same subject-matter. In the present case not only is there no joint decree in favour of the respondents but the debt due to each of them or each set of them is quite separate from that due to any other creditor or set of creditors. Moreover, as far as I think the rule against the possibility of conflicting decisions coming into existence contemplates those cases in which conflicting decrees capable of execution may be passed and it may subsequently be found difficult or even impossible to execute those decrees, This can best be illustrated by an example. Supposing a suit is brought for possession of a house against four persons, who are jointly in possession of it, the suit is dismissed by the trial Court and the plaintiff brings an appeal against the dismissal. The appeal must of necessity be against all the four defendants. Now supposing one of the defendants dies and his heirs are not brought on the record within the time allowed by law, the result will be that the appeal will abate so far as the deceased defendant and his heirs are concerned, and if it is allowed to proceed against the other defendants it may possibly be decreed against them. In such a case it will be impossible to execute the Appellate Court's decree as the decree of the trial Court dismissing the entire suit of the plaintiff will have become final so far as the deceased defendant's heirs are concerned, and they can successfully resist an attempt on the part of the plaintiff to get possession of the houses. Nothing of the kind can, however, happen in the present case. All that the order of the trial Court amounts to is that the appellants are not entitled to proceed under the U. P. Encum. Estates Act and if this Court reverses this finding of the trial Court the case will go back to that Court and will proceed against the other creditors without any difficulty or any prejudice to anybody.

(3) 1935 O W N 401; 154 Ind. Cas. 897; 7 R O 515; A I R 1935 Oudh 329.

It is contended that the heirs of Pandit Brahma Dutt will have no remedy and will not be able to realise their debt from the appellants as under s. 13 of the U. P. Encum. Estates Act a creditor who does not put up a claim in the proceeding under the Encum. Estates Act loses his right to recover the debt. I cannot accept this contention. When proceedings are opened in the Court of the Special Judge, the heirs of Pandit Brahma Dutt can apply to be made parties to those proceedings and they will have to be made parties to those proceedings by the learned Judge. Of course this will mean that the abatement of the appeal against the heirs of Pandit Brahma Dutt will have no effect upon the appellants' rights under the Encum. Estates Act against them, but it is not necessary that it should have. In any case, the principle of the cases relied on by the respondents does not, in my opinion, apply at all to the present case, and I would, therefore, hold that the appeal has not abated against respondents other than Pandit Brahma Dutt.

Yorke, J.—(July 26, 1940).—I have given this matter my anxious consideration but I regret that I am unable to agree with my learned brother. So far as I am able to see the point of view which appeals to him is that although something like a contradictory position might arise from the not improbable decision of this appeal in favour of the appellants in the absence of the heirs of Pandit Brahma Dutt, it should not be held that this appeal has abated as a whole because that contradictory position is curable by the future act of the heirs of Pandit Brahma Datt. I am not satisfied in my mind that this is a decisive consideration.

Another Bench of this Court, of which I was a member had to consider the same point in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 69 of 1937 decided on May 8, 1940; (Udai Pratap Singh v. Dwarka Prasad) (4). In that case also the Special Judge had dismissed the whole application on the view that the original application made to the Collector did not comply with the provisions of s. 4 of the Act. In the present case the decision is of an analogous nature that the applicants had no locus standi to apply under the Encum. Estates Act and their application was, therefore, not maintainable. We took the view that the appeal must abate as a whole on the ground that if the appeal were to be allowed as things now stand the result would be that the application would have to proceed ab initio as against some and not as against other creditors, a procedure which would be in contravention of the whole intention of the Act.

It seems to me that in a case under the Encum. Estates Act it may well be said that the applicants landlords, that is the debtors, are ranged on one side as against the whole body of creditors on the other, and that the interests of the creditors are joint and cannot be considered to be joint and several. In case it is decided that the application as a whole does not lie, as has been decided in this case and was decided in the case which came before us in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 69 of 1937, (Udai Pratap Singh v. Dwarka Prasad) (4) I am inclined to regard the interests of the creditors in the result of the appeal as joint and think that they cannot be regarded as joint and several.

The point may be looked at in another way. I think that in order to be able to say that an appeal does not abate as a whole when it has abated against one or more of the respondents it is necessary to be able to say that that the appeal would have been properly filed even if those same respondents had not been impleaded in the appeal as respondents. I do not think it would be possible to argue in a case like the present one that the appeal of the landlord debtors would have been properly filed and could have been allowed to go forward if the landlord debtors had failed to implead as respondents in the appeal any of the creditors who were parties to the original decision. If those respondents were necessary parties to an appeal of this kind, I conceive that their representatives are necessary parties to the continuation of the appeal and as the appeal has abated against those representatives, the appeal must be taken to have abated as a whole.

In this connection, I may refer to the notes in Chitaley's Civil P. C. Vol. II (Second Edition), p. 2123 where he says, quoting of course from decisions of certain High Courts,

> "In short, therefore, the test to see whether the suit or appeal abates as a whole or only in part is to find out if the suit (appeal) could, in the first instance, have been instituted and prosecuted with the deceased defendant (respondent) left out. In other words, if separate suits (appeals) are maintainable against defendants (respondents) severally, then the abatement will be only in part in spite of the other defendants (respondents) having been impleaded in the same suit (appeal)."

Accepting this as a sound statement of the law I do not feel that it is possible to depart from the view which was expressed by the Bench in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 69 of 1937 (4), and I would hold that this appeal must abate as a whole.

Zia-ul Hasan and Yorke, JJ.—(July 30, 1940).—As we differ on the question whether or not this appeal has abated as a whole, we refer this question for decision to a Full Bench.

Jugdment of the Full Bench

Thomas, C. J., Bennett and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.—(January 15, 1940).—The three applicants-appellants filed an application under ss. 4 and 49 of the Encum. Estates Act in respect of debts due from the ancestor of the applicants, Prince Humayun Qadar Bahadur.

There were nine creditors. Creditors Nos. 5 to 9 obtained a preliminary decree on the basis of a mortgage-deed executed on January 18, 1916, by the late Prince Humayun Qadar Bahadur, which was made final on August 18, 1928. The said creditors opposed the application on the ground that the applicants were not "landlords" within the meaning of the Encum. Estates Act.

The learned Special Judge, first grade, Lucknow, decided the preliminary point against the applicants holding that they were not "landlords" as defined in the Encum. Estates Act and thus had no locus standi to apply under the Encum. Estates Act and dismissed the application.

The applicants then appealed to this Court against the said decision. During the pendency of the appeal one of the creditors, (Pandit Brahma Dat, No. 5 in the application), died, and no application was made for substitution of his legal representatives within the period of 90 days provided by law.

On September, 28, 1939, the appellants applied for setting aside the abatement, but their application was dismissed by a Bench of this Court on July 16, 1940, the question whether the whole appeal abated was left open to be decided at the hearing of the appeal.

The appeal came up for hearing before a Bench of this Court consisting of Justice Zia-ul Hasan and Justice Yorke, and a preliminary objection was taken that the whole appeal had abated. Justice Zia-ul Hasan was of opinion that the whole appeal had not abated, while Justice Yorke took the view that the whole appeal had abated, and as there was a difference of opinion, they referred the following question for decision to the Full Bench:

"Whether or not this appeal has abated as a whole."

The contention of the learned Counsel for the appellants is that there are distinct creditors and their interests are separate and as such it cannot be said that the whole appeal has abated. In support of his contention the learned Counsel has relied on the following two decisions:

Ram Jas Tewari v. Ram Lal Tewari, (1935 O. W. N. 297) (2), and

Sant Singh v. Gulab Singh, (I. L. R. 10 Lahore 7), (5),

In the case reported in 1935 O. W. N. 297 (2), it was held that "the question, whether an appeal can or cannot proceed in the absence of the legal representatives of a deceased respondent, must depend upon the nature of each case, and it is impossible to lay down a general rule applicable to all such cases. Each case must depend upon its own circumstances. If in such a case the decree under appeal is a joint decree in favour of all the respondents the appeal abates as a whole, for if the whole appeal is allowed not to abate the decision may result in two conflicting decisions with regard to the same subject-matter."

In the case reported in I. L. R. 10 Lahore 7 (5), which is a Full Bench decision, it was held that "as the interest of the deceased respondent in the subject-matter of the appeal was separate from those of the surviving respondents, and it could not, therefore, be said that the decree of the Appellate Court, if in favour of the appellant, would prove ineffective or inconsistent with that part of the lower Court's decree which had become final upon the abatement of the appeal qua the deceased, the appeal did not abate in its entirety but could proceed against the surviving respondents."

We do not doubt the correctness of either of the two decisions. In our opinion, they lay down the correct law and we reiterate what has been said in the case reported in 1935 O. W. N. 297 (2), that whether an appeal has or has not abated must depend upon the nature and circumstances of each case.

The test in such cases should be (1) whether the interests of the defendants in the suit are joint and indivisible so that the interest of the deceased cannot be separated from those of the rest and (2) whether in the event of the appeal being allowed as against the remaining respondents, there would or would not be two inconsistent and contradictory decrees in the same case with respect to the same subject-matter.

It is a matter of common sense that the Court should not be called upon to pass two inconsistent decrees about the same property, but if on the other hand the success of the appeal would not lead to such a result, there is no valid reason why the Court should not hear the appeal and adjudicate upon the dispute between the parties who are before it.

The Encum. Estates Act lays down a special scheme for liquidation of debts. Section 7 of the Act lays down the consequences of acceptance of an application by the Collector and under cl. (1) (b) no fresh suit or other proceedings other than an appeal, review or revision against a decree or order, or a process for ejectment for arrears of rent shall, except as hereinafter provided, be instituted in any Civil or Revenue Court in the United Provinces in respect of any debts incurred before the passing of the said order.

Section 8 provides for filing of written statements.

Section 9 provides for calling of claims and under s. 13 if the claim is not duly notified it shall be deemed to be discharged.

Section 14 provides for examination and determination of claims and amounts.

Section 19 provides for transmission of the decree by the Special Judge to the Collector.

In short the intention of the Act is to secure the entire property of the landlord under the control of the Court, compel all his creditors to prove their claims against him, and to disencumber his property of all debts under a special scheme laid down in the Act.

Coming to the merits of the case, it is clear that all the creditors were interested in defeating the appellants' application on the ground that they were not "landlords". It is true that only creditors Nos. 5 to 9 specifically raised the plea, but there can be no doubt that it was for the benefit of all the creditors.

There is no doubt that the appeal so far as the deceased creditor is concerned has abated and the order of the Special Judge that the appellants are not "landlords" has become final, and if the appeal of the appellants in this Court is allowed on the ground that they are "landlords" within the meaning of the Encum. Estates Act, the result will be two contradictory decrees. It is further clear that the heirs of the deceased cannot now in this Court contest the appeal, while the appellants may get a reversal of the order of the Special Judge behind their back. If the whole appeal does not abate it is to the advantage of the landlords and to the disadvantage of the heirs of the deceased creditor and the effect would be that the creditor against whom the appeal has abated would be debarred from all remedy by the provisions of the Act itself. He would be faced with the difficulty arising out of s. 13 of the Act, namely that the claim not duly notified would be deemed to have been discharged whereas the effect of dismissing the appeal as having abated as a whole be that the proceedings under the Encum. Estates Act will come to an end and those creditors would not be debarred by s. 7 of the Act from pursuing further remedies still open to them against the applicants-debtors. It has been suggested that in the event of the appeal being allowed it would be open to the heirs of the deceased creditor to present a written statement of their claims and s. 13 of the Act will not stand in their way. We do not see any reason why the heirs of the deceased creditor in whose favour a decision had been passed by reason of abatement which had become final, should be forced to resubmit their claims as if nothing had happened. This suggestion destroys the effect of finality which the law gives to the decrees of Courts.

Abatement of suits and appeals as contemplated by the Civil P. C. is based on the principle of forfeiture of rights. The law imposes a penalty upon parties guilty of laches or negligence in the shape of abatement if they fail to take prompt steps to implead the legal representatives of deceased parties on the record so as to effectually continue the proceedings. It is true that so far as the Statute is concerned, the appeal abates only qua the deceased respondent, but the question whether the partial abatement thus caused leads to an abatement of the appeal in its entirety depends upon general principles. All the creditors were jointly interested in defeating the application of the landlords and the order passed by the Special Judge on the objection of some of them was in favour of all of them, and unless the whole appeal abates, the result will be two inconsistent and contradictory orders.

Under s. 50 of the Act if a landlord with regard to whom a notice has been published under s. 9 dies before a declaration has been made in respect of him under s. 44 under cl. (a) the proceedings under this Act shall be continued as nearly as may be possible in all respects as if the landlord were still living. The Act contains no similar provision that upon the death of any of the creditors the proceedings will not abate. The learned Counsel for the appellants drew our attention to a passage at p. 25* of I. L. R. 10 Lahore (5), in which it was said that "there can be no legal objection to the so-called contradictory decrees or findings in such cases."

These observations were made with regard to an illustration which was as follows:—

"For instance, supposing there had been four sale-deeds each with regard to a one-fourth share in the property in suit and four different suits had been instituted by the plaintiff in the trial Court. it was open to the trial Court in some of them to come to the conclusion that the property was ancestral and In the others to hold that the property was not ancestral because each case had to be decided on the evidence produced therein, and it is conceivable that some of the vendees were able to produce convincing evidence as to the nature of the property and the rest were not equally fortunate."

The observations made by the learned Judge under these circumstances were perfectly justified, but we fail to see how they help the appellants. We are of opinion that in the case before us no contradictory decrees are possible and a contrary view will lead to grave injustice to the heirs of the deceased creditor.

We have carefully considered the case reported in I. L. R. 10 Lahore, 7 (5), and as far as the facts of that case are concerned it lays down good law, but it does not help the appellants as the facts are clearly distinguishable. There was no prejudice in that case to the successful party, but in the case before us, as we have shown, if the appeal is allowed, the successful party will be greatly prejudiced and he will be precluded from obtaining any remedy in regard to the debts which stand in his favour.

We are, therefore, of opinion that the interest of the creditors in defeating the application of the appellants were joint and indivisible and the interests of the deceased creditor cannot be separated from those of the rest and that the heirs of the deceased creditor were necessary parties. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that the appeal has abated as a whole otherwise it would lead to conflicting and inconsistent decisions with regard to the same subject-matter.

Our reply, therefore, to the question referred is that the appeal has abated as a whole.

Final Order of Division Bench

Yorke and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.—(January 30, 1941).—The decision of the Full Bench on the question referred to it, is that the appeal has abated as a whole. As it has not been proved on the record that the appellant was prevented by any sufficient cause from continuing the suit, there is no ground for setting aside the abatement, and it follows that the appeal having abated as a whole, it is, therefore, dismissed upon that ground. As the respondents have had to incur costs in connection with the hearing of the appeal on the question of abatement we order that one set of costs be paid by the appellant to the contesting respondents.

S. Order accordingly.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Amendment of s. 162, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), whether affects s. 27—Accused after committing murder lodging report to Police—First Information Report containing confessional matter — Conclusion of—Such matter if can be admitted under s. 27 — Such accused, if in custody of Police within the meaning of s. 47 (1), Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Criminal trial—Investigation—Sub-Inspector getting information from accused and acting on it — Whether can make him repeat that information before witnesses—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Provocation—Woman of low caste importuniting accused to instal her as his permanent mistress — Whether provocation, justifying awarding lesser sentence.

The provisions of s. 27 of the Evi. Act, are still valid and are not affected by their Lordships' judgment in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (4). Consequently the amendment of s. 162, Criminal P. C., in 1923 does not affect s. 27, Evi. Act. 168 Ind. Cas. 562 (2) and 188 Ind. Cas. 498 (3), not followed. 181 Ind. Cas. 1001 (5), 185 Ind. Cas. 310 (6) and 114 Ind. Cas. 273 (7), Cr. App. No. 121 of 1940, relied on. [p. 8, col. 2.]

Where the accused after committing murder goes to the Police Station and lodges the first information of the crime, and the report contains statements in the nature of confessions and statements having no connection with the actual narrative of the crime, the statements in the nature of confession cannot be admitted but they are not excluded for the purposes of s. 27, Evi. Act.

[Case-law discussed.]

A person who makes a statement to a responsible Police Officer, voluntarily confessing that he has committed an act which the I. P. C., regards as an offence, is submitting himself to custody within the meaning of s. 46 (1) of the Criminal P. C., and is then in the custody of a Police Officer within the meaning of s. 27 of the Evi. Act. 138 Ind. Cas. 116 (9), distinguished.

In principle it is of course objectionable for a Sub-Inspector who has received information from the accused and is proceeding to act on that information to get him to repeat that information in the presence of witnesses. A Police Officer ought to expect to be believed when he gives evidence on oath. 180 Ind. Cas. 590 (12), referred to. [p 10, cols. 1 & 2.]

It may of course also be possible that the Sub-Inspector was aware that there might be some doubt as to the admissibility of what the accused had stated at the Police Station as it was embodied in a confession made to a Police Officer, in which case, if he considered that the statement might be entirely inadmissible, he was justified in taking the statement again in circumstances where it certainly was admissible. [p. 10, col. 2.]

A man who is willing to have casual intercourse with a woman, treating her as a prostitute, may nevertheless justifiably resent any suggestion amounting to importunity—that he should instal her as a permanent mistress, which would result in heavy caste penalties. Then if on her insistence he loses control and gives a lathi blow on her head causing her immediate death, the accused is entitled to a lesser penalty and not that of death. [p. 12, col. 1.]

Cr. A. from the order of the Court of the Sessions Judge, Wardha, dated July 16, 1940.

Messrs. M. Adhikari and M. G. Ghate, for the Appellant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, Advocate General, for the Crown.

Judgment.—The appellant Bharosa has been convicted of the murder of one Mst. Gaji and has been sentenced to death. The facts, though unusual, are simple. The prosecution story is that Bharosa, who was a gardener, in the employment of one Dagaji, Malguzar of Mauza Waldhur, lived in a hut in his master's garden and had formed an illicit connection with Mst. Gaji, a widow, of a lower caste than his own, she being a Pardhan and he a Pardeshi of the United Provinces. On the night of April 3, the woman visited his hut and suggested that she should enter permanently into his keeping and live with him. He demurred as this would result in his being outcasted and he in a rage at her importunity struck her over the head with lathi killing her practically instantaneously. The medical evidence is to the effect that several blows with a lathi must have been delivered. The murder was committed not in the hut but at a nalla some 150 yards away and the accused turned her out of the hut and accompanied her part of the way, when, presumably, the importunities being renewed, he lost his temper and killed her. Early on the following morning he left Waldur for Hinganghat, where his master lives, with the intention of telling his master exactly what had happened. The master was not present at his shop, but his agent Devidas (P. W. No. 1) was, and to him the accused confessed that a woman had come to his hut at night and refused to leave and that he had struck her and killed her. Devidas then suggested that the accused ought to go to the Police Station and report, and this with the concurrence of his master Dagaji who had then arrived, was done and a first information report was recorded by the Sub-Inspector Sheomangal, in the course of which a full story was detailed. As the result of statements made in the course of this narrative namely, where the instrument with which the crime had been commited lay and where the body was to be found, the Sub-Inspector went to the village. He reached there before the accused, who had been placed in the custody of a constable, arrived, and village elders were called at the bada. When the accused arrived he was asked to show the weapon and the corpse and he did so, accompanied by the Sub-Inspector and by witnesses. A blood-stained lathi was produced from under his bed in the hut, and the body was found in the nalla where he said it would be found. In the committing Magistrate's Court the accused in his examination admitted all these facts, but he retracted them in the Court of Session, denied that he had struck the woman or killed her, denied that he had made a confession to Devidas and even denied that he had been to the Police Station at all or made a report to the Sub-Inspector in charge. Finally, and equally incredibly, he denied that he had made the statement which was recorded in his examination in the committal Court. He called no evidence in defence, but it was contended on his behalf that he had been implicated by one Kalkaprasad, a fellow-servant of his. We may here note that Kalkaprasad was called as a witness for the prosecution and although in examination-in-chief he admitted that he knew Mst. Gaji who was a day-labourer under his control, he stated that he was unaware if she had any connection with the accused Bharosa, and he was not asked a single question in cross-examination which would tend to show that he himself had any immoral relations with Mst. Gaji although such immoral connection was hinted at in Counsel's argument both in this Court and in the Sessions Court Neither was any question put to him indicating any ill-feeling between himself and the accused. It is quite obvious that any imputation against Kalkaprasad was a despairing afterthought.

The grounds taken in appeal all relate to technical points of law. The Sessions Judge, following the law as laid down in Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (1), did not allow the whole of the first information report to be proved, excluding from the proof by the Sub-Inspector, who recorded it, any such part as would include a confession. The earlier part of the report was allowed to be proved down to the words "used to come to do my master's work and I therefore knew her." We reproduce the first information report as taken down in full :

"I am a resident of Santara Mohalla, Allahabad. I do not know whether any of my relations in desh (=native country) are alive or not. I came to Pardesh (=another country) 25 years back. I served as a guard at the shop of Seth Narsinghdas for twenty years. From over 12 months from now I have been working as a gardener on Rs. 5 per month in the garden of Dagaji at Waldhur. I live in the tin hut in his garden at Waldhur. Mst. Gaji a widow by caste Pardhanin, who as the people said had two sons, used to come to do my master's work and I therefore knew her. That Mst. Gaji Pardhanin came to me in the master's garden last night at 12 or 12-30 o'clock and said that she had no husband and so I should take her into my keeping. I told her that I was a Pardeshi and she a Parihanin by caste and because of a caste diversity I could not take her as a keep and advised her to go to her own caste. Then your honour, I explained things to her at length. She did not agree and said, 'I have no husband and I shall live here only'. Then I got angry and raising my bamboo stick overhead with both hands I sturck with force. The lathi fell on the head of Mst. Gaji in front and she fell to the ground along with the stick. Fleshy material protruded out of her broken scalp and there had been bleeding. Immediately on falling down she died : it did not take half a minute (even). I then remained lying in my master's garden. I got up before 6 A. M. in the morning and took my way to the master's shop from the village. The master, Dagaji, had gone to the station and I related the fact of Mst. Gaji's murder to the senior Dewanji who was in the shop and who has accompanied me to the Police Station house. Then the master arrived and Dewanji told this incident to him. When I struck Mst. Gaji with the lathi she was standing close to me. The lathi is a bamboo stick of my desh and up to my ear in height. Only one lathi blow killed her. When Mst. Gaji approached my cot once I asked her to go away queitly. Accordingly she went a little distance outside the garden. I lay on my bed. In the meantime she came back again. Then again I said to her 'I advised you to go away and you have come again' and asked her to get out of the garden gate. She did not go. I took her out of the garden up to the nullah and told her to take her way across the nullah. She said she would not go. I then struck her. Mst. Gaji is lying dead in the nullah at the rear of my master's garden and the lathi is kept near the cot inside the hut in my master's garden. The hut is open. The report was read over to me: it has been taken down correctly.'

It is contended before us that not merely the confessional part of the first information report should have been excluded but the whole of it; It is also contended that as the first information report itself could not be admitted in evidence, no statement contained in it could be used under the provisions of s. 27 of the Evi. Act for the purpose of leading to the discovery of the blood-stained lathi or of the body. It is further urged that the whole of the accused's examination in the committing Magistrate's Court is inadmissible as the questions asked are based on the inadmissible first information report, and the examination itself is attacked intrinsically on the ground that multiple and improper questions were asked to which the accused could not give proper answers. In respect of statements made ny the accused in the bada in Mauea Waldhur after he had been taken there and met the Sub-Inspector, it is contended that the conduct of the Sub-Inspector was improper in asking him questions which he had asked him previously so as to obtain his statements in the presence of witnesses for the application of s. 27 of the Evi. Act. Finally it is urged that no statement under s. 27 of the Evi. Act is admissible since that section has been superseded by the amendment in 1923 of s. 162 of the Criminal P. C. In short the contention on behalf of the appellant is that there is no admissible evidence whatever to connect the accused with the crime.

Taking the last point of law first, namely, that s. 27 of the Evi. Act is now a dead letter since the amendment of s. 162 of the Criminal P. C. in 1923, reliance is placed on two recent decisions of the Allahabad High Court and the Lahore Court in Baldeo v. Emperor (2) and Khuda Yar v. Emperor(3), to the effect that this is the correct interpretation of the ruling of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (4). The Patna High Court, however, does not follow the interpretation which is given to this ruling by the Allahabad High Court: vide Emperor v. Mayadhar Pothal (5). The opinion of this Court has been expressed on similar lines to that of the Patna High Court: vide the Divisional Bench decision of Niyogi and Gruer, JJ. in Motilal Puransao v. Emperor (6). The view follows a decision of the Nagpur Judicial Commissioner's Court in Gola v. Emperor (7), which is anterior to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, and the Divisional Bench has pointed out that their Lordships did not specifically decide the question but left it open. A similar decision was reached even more recently by a Divisionl Bench of this Court in Sheoram v. King-Emperor, (Cri. App. No. 121 of 1940, decided on May 23, 1940) where the question has been discussed. One of us was a party to the decision in Motilal Puransao v. Emperor (6) and the other to the decision in Sheoram v King-Emperor, (Cri. App. No. 121 of 1940). We are, therefore, satisfied that the provisions of s 27 of the Evi. Act are still valid and are not affected by their Lordships' judgment in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (4).

For the proposition that the whole of the first information report should have been excluded from admission, reliance is placed on Emperor v. Harnam Kisha (8), where the partial exclusion in Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (1), was doubted. With the greatest respect we do not consider that the doubt there expressed was justified. The relevant words of Beaumont, C. J. are as follows:—

"But I doubt myself whether the principle on which the Calcutta High Court proceeded in that case can be justified. Section 25 of the Indian Evi. Act seem to be founded on the view of the Legislature that confessions made to a Police Officer are suspect, since they may have been induced by improper pressure. If that be the true underlying principle of s. 25, it is, to my mind, very difficult to see how any part of the confessional statement can be admitted in evidence."

The confessions in those cases and in the one which we are considering were made in circumstances which preclude any possibility of improper pressure, as in each case the accused person went of his own accord to the Police Station before any suspicion had been aroused and stated that he had killed someone, and in Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (1), that part of the confessional statement which was admitted had no connection with the actual narrative relating to the crime. Neither in the case before us can the part which has been admitted have any direct bearing on the fact of the fatal assault. So little bearing has it that it is really immaterial whether it is admitted or not, and the case against the accused would not lose any of its force by disallowing the whole of the first information report.

Of more serious consideration, however, is the contention that if the first information report is not admissible in evidence—and the argument of course applies to that part of it which comes within the confessional statement—then the statement cannot be used for the purpose of the discovery of the body or of the weapon under s. 27 of the Evi. Act. If this proposition is correct law, we arrive at the astonishing position that a man may kill another person in circumstances which he considers entirely justifiable and, moved either by remorse or honesty, make a report to the nearest Police Station stating the exact truth and the full circumstances of what he has done; the Police, however, would not be able to prove that such a statement was made or, if on investigation they found that the circumstances detailed were entirely true and made their discoveries as the result of what they had been told, and no other evidence was available to use it. This might result in glaring miscarriages of justice. Rankin, C. J. has pointed out the absurdity of the situation in Durlav Namasudra v. Emperor (9), and considers that the situation is the result of bad drafting of the Evi. Act and that the Act should be redrafted. The material criticism is as follows:—

"What was said in this case was said to the Police. It was, therefore, not allowed to go in evidence by s. 25 and the consequence of holding that s. 27 is not a mere exception to s. 26 is this: that in a case like the present where the confession was made to the Police, if the man was at liberty at the time he was speaking, what he said should not be admitted in evidence even though something was discovered as a result of it. That is the present case. It cannot be admitted in evidence because the man was not in custody, which of course is thoroughly absurd. There might be reason in saying that if a man is in custody, what he may have said cannot be admitted; but there can be none at all in saying that it is admissible in evidence against him because he is not in custody. Yet this is the consequence of saying that s. 27 is more than a proviso to s. 26."

It was suggested to Beaumont, C. J. in Emperor v. Harnam Kisha (8), that "confession" in s. 25 of the Evi. Act refers only to a confession made to a Police Officer in the course of an inquiry into an offence and does not cover the first information which starts the inquiry. That would be, in our opinion, on obviously desirable interpretation were it possible, since it is evident, and we consider undisputed, that the purpose of s. 25 of the Evi. Act, in the words of Garth, C. J. in Queen v. Hurribole Chunder Ghose (10), is

"to prevent confessions obtained from accused persons through any undue influence being received as evidence against them," and in confessions made in the course of a first information report it is patent that there could have been no pressure by the Police. Unfortunately s. 25 is worded in such plain and simple language namely,

"No confession made to a Police Officer shall be proved as against a person accused of any offence," as to make the salutary proviso propounded in Emperor v. Harnam Kisha (8), impossible, and until this particular section is amended, as in our opinion it should be, such confession made in a first information report must be excluded from its operation. We are not, however, satisfied that statements made in the course of such an inadmissible confession are excluded for the purposes of s. 27 of the Evi. Act. The matter has been adumbrated in Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (1), to which no reference was made in Durlav Namasudra v. Emperor (9), and the proposition that a person who makes a statement to a responsible Police Officer, voluntarily confessing that he has committed an act which the I. P. C. regards as an offence, is submitting himself to custody within the meaning of s. 46 (1) of the Criminal P. C. is, in our opinion, sound. In Santoki Beldar v. Emperor (11), a Full Bench of the Patna

High Court stated :

"when a person states that he had done certain acts which amount to an offence, he accuses himself of committing the offence; and if he makes the statement to a Police Officer, as such, he submits to the custody of the officer within the meaning of s. 46(1) of the Criminal P. C., and is then in the custody of a Police Officer within the meaning of s. 27 of the Evi. Act. This was also the opinion of Teunon and Ghosh, JJ. in Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (1)."

In both these cases and in the case before us the person making the statement had no intention of not submitting himself to the Police. There is a voluntary statement without any pressure by the Police and indeed without any previous knowledge by them of what had been done; the arrest took place immediately after the statement, but we feel no doubt that at the time the statement was made there was a submission to custody which would bring the statement made within the ambit of s. 27 of the Evi. Act as a statement made by a person in the custody of a Police Officer. The facts in Durlav Namasudra v Emperor (9), were entirely different and the statements made were in the course of a Police investigation shortly before the arrest of the accused and in circumstances which certainly could not connote any submission to Police custody; and this we presume to be the reason why no reference was made in this case to Legal Remembrancer v. Lalit Mohan Singh Roy (1) since the facts in one case could have had no application to the facts in the other. We are, then, satisfied that the statements as the result of which the Police discovered the blood-stained lathi and the body are admissible,

Arising out of this is the conduct of the Sub-Inspector at the bada where the accused was asked to repeat his statements which he had already made to the Sub-Inspector at the Police Station. In re-examination the Sub-Inspector stated that the accused had told him in the first information report that the stick was lying in the hut, and that he repeated the question as he wanted the accused to make the statement before the Panches. This question was objected to by the defence Counsel as being inadmissible; nevertheless use is sought to be made of it here. In principle it is of course objectionable for a Sub-Inspector who has received information from the accused and is proceeding to act on that information to get him to repeat that information in the presence of witnesses. As stated by Burn and Lakshmana Rao, JJ. in Public Prosecutor v. Subba Reddi (12), a Police Officer ought to expect to be believed when he gives evidence on oath. But in the case before us the stricture is certainly not so well-deserved as it was in that case where the accused person was brought out of the lock-up and examined in the presence of witnesses and where the statement was embodied in a panchnama, and he was then apparently returned to the lock-up again, since it was quite clear that the Circle Inspector knew exactly what the accused was going to say. In the present case it may be safely presumed that the Sub-Inspector had no doubt that the accused was going to take him to the place indicated and that the people had been called so as to depose to the recovery of whatever there was to be recovered, a perfectly legitimate proceeding since a seizure memorandum has to be signed by witnesses. It may of course also be possible that the Sub-Inspector was aware that there might be some doubt as to the admissibility of what the accused had stated at the Police Station as it was embodied in a confession made to a Police Officer, in which case, if he considered that the statement might be entirely inadmissible, he was justified in taking the statement again in circumstances where it certainly was admissible.

It was also urged that the statement made to the Police Officer resulting in the discoveries made could not be used under s. 27 of the Evi. Act as the discovery of the body must already have been known to numerous people. It has not been proved that anybody else had seen the body or was aware where the stick had been placed until the spot was pointed out by the accused. No evidence was led on the point neither was this elicited in cross-examination from the prosecution witnesses. Even if other people had discovered the body or the blood-stained stick after the accused had left his village to make a report at Hinganghat, that would be entirely immaterial, and the argument could only have force if it were shown that by the time the second statement was made the Police were aware from other sources that the stick and the body were actually to be found in such places. There is no evidence whatever that anyone else informed the Police where these things were or that the Sub-Inspector who had certainly arrived at Waldhur a short time before the accused, had been shown any object connected with the crime.

Turning now to the examination of the accused, the learned Sessions Judge, although he does not say so in so many words, appears to indicate that there might be some doubt as to the propriety of question No. 3 put to the accused in the committing Magistrate's Court. We reproduce the questions and answers seriatim and number them:

Q. From the statement of witnesses it appears that there was illicit intimacy between M*st.* Gaji Pardhanin and you and that she had been trying to live with you. What have you to say?

A. She used to work in my garden and at cultivation. I had no illicit connection with her.

Q. Then from the statement of witnesses it appears that she came to your hut on the night of April 3, 1940 and made an attempt for living with you, that you then turned her out and taking her to the nullah you struck her on the head with this lathi (Art. A) as a result of which she died. What have you to say?

A. Yes Sir, I gave her a blow with lathi (Art. A) on her head. She fell down in the nullah and died.

Q. On the following day in the morning you came to Hinganghat and related all this to your master's Dewanji Devidas and he brought you to the Station-house where you made this report (Ex. P-1 read over to the accused) to the Station-house Officer. What have you to say?

A. I had told this fact to my master's Dewanji and exactly the same thing to the Station-house Officer. My report which had been read over to me is true.

Q. Then you took the Station-house Officer and the Panches to your hut and produced this stick (Art. A) from under the cot. To whom does this lathi belong?

A. This lathi is mine. I produced it to the Station-house Officer.

Q. After this you pointed out the spot where the corpse lay to the Station-house Officer and the Panches. What have you to say?

A. Yes Sir.

Q. Have you to state anything else?

A. Your honour is ma-bap.

We do not consider that there is any impropriety in any of the questions. The inadmissibility of the confessional part of the first information has not the complete bearing on the question which the learned Counsel would ask us to hold that it has, since there is the admission of Devidas, and on his statements the questions could be properly put. Question No. 2 gives the circumstances leading up to the fact that he had confessed that he had struck the woman a fatal blow and he admits that he did and that she fell down in a nullah and died. Nor can we see any objection to question No. 3 on which the learned Judge has come to no definite conclusion. It cannot be disputed that the accused did go to Hinganghat that morning, and there was evidence that he had related the circumstances to Devidas. It is also obvious that he did go to the Police Station, and the question is well within the proper limits of s. 342, of the Criminal P. C., in that it is put to give him an opportunity to explain salient points in the evidence against him, points which are likely to prove fatal unless explained, and the answer of the accused is in fact an answer to every part of the question, namely, that he says that he told the fact to his master's Dewanji and told exactly the same thing to the Station-house Officer. We do not consider that anything in this examination can be said to be improper.

The learned Counsel in attacking the conviction on all the points of law to which we have referred omitted to consider, even if the propositions of law advanced were sound, the effect of the extra-judicial confession made to Devidas That extra-judicial confession is undoubtedly admissible. It was of course retracted in the Sessions Court, but the fact that it was made appears to us undisputable. It was a natural thing for an honest man to do, and his conduct in going to the Police Station accompanied by Devidas (and his conduct is of course relevant) is inexplicable on any other ground than that he had come to Hinganghat with the intention of telling his master what he had done and in his master's absence he told his representative Devidas. The subsequent discoveries fully corroborate this extra-judicial confession, and on that alone the conviction could be sustained. There is also the full confession made in the committing Magistrate's Court.

The accused has been sentenced to death.

There is no doubt from the medical evidence that he did strike more than one blow and that all the blows were delivered on the woman's head. We see no reason to disbelieve the circumstances as given by the accused, and indeed there is no evidence on the record to contradict them. Although we agree that the provocation was not sufficiently grave or sudden to take the offence outside the provisions of s. 302 of the I. P. C., there was nevertheless some provocation which can be urged for the passing of the lesser sentence which the law permits. A man who is willing to have casual intercourse with a woman, treating her as a prostitute, may nevertheless justifiably resent any suggestion—and in this case the suggestion amounted to importunity—that he should instal her as a permanent mistress, which would undoubtedly result in heavy caste penalties. That there had been importunity and argument is deducible from the fact that he undoubtedly escorted the woman from his hut to the place where the body was found, a distance of some 150 yards, and it is evident that he was trying to get rid of the woman who was doing her best to persuade him to instal her permanently. We do not consider that she was taken to the nulla with the express purpose of being killed in a secluded spot; the subsequent conduct of the accused negatives this. Taking these circumstances into consideration we consider that the punishment of transportation for life is more suitable. The appeal is accordingly dismissed, but the sentence of death is not confirmed and that of transportation for life is substituted for it.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Petitions Nos. 75 of 1938 and 7 of 1939

May 11, 1939

FAZL ALI AND MANOHAR LALL, JJ.

RADHAKRISHNA DAS AND ANOTHER —PETITIONERS

HARI NAIK—OPPOSITE PARTY

Patna High Court Rules, Chap. III, rr. 3, 13, 16, Chap. XIII, r. 10—"Affidavit", meaning of—Petitioner verifying statements in petition by solemn affirmation —Person verifying petition must appear before Commissioner for oaths to verify it—O. VI, r. 15, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), if applies to applications to High Court — Petition verified by petitioner himself, if requires court-fee under r. 10, Chap. XIII—Recasting of rules suggested.

The word "affidavit" is comprehensive enough to include both statements sworn to and affirmed and although a distinction is drawn in r. 3 of the Patna High Court Rules between the verification of a petition by solemn affirmation and its verification by an affidavit, there are several rules in Chap. III which show that where the facts stated in a petition are verified by the solemn affirmation of the petitioner the procedure should be the same as when they are verified by an affidavit and it is obvious from rr. 13 and 16 that the person verifying the petition must appear before the Commissioner for Oaths to verify it. There is nothing in Chap. III or any other Chapter of the Rules to show that O. VI, r. 15, Civil P. C., has been made applicable to applications filed in the High Court.

The rules of the High Court ought to be recast in plainer language and if in fact it is intended that a petition which is verified by the petitioner himself does not require a court-fee under r. 10 of Chap. XIII, it must be said so in clear language.

Cr. R. P. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ganjam, Puri Division, Berhampur, dated August 30, 1938.

Mr. M. S. Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. C. M. Acharya, for the Opposite Party.

Fazl Ali, J.—These two revisions may be conveniently dealt with together, but before dealing with their merit I wish to refer to two preliminary questions of some importance which arise in Criminal Revision No. 7 of 1939 (Gaji Das v. Hari Naik). These questions are (1) whether the application presented by the petitioner Gaji Das in this Court has been properly verified as required by r. 3, Chap. III of the Rules of the Patna High Court, (2) whether a court-fee of Rs. 2 is chargeable when the verification is made by the petitioner himself and not by a person other than the petitioner. Gaji Das has not filed any affidavit in support of the statements made in his petition nor did he appear before the Commissioner for Oaths at Cuttack to verify them by his solemn affirmation. He has merely signed a declaration at the end of the petition which runs as follows :

"I Gaji Das, the abovenamed petitioner, do solemnly affirm and declare that the above facts are true, to the best of my knowledge, that this my declaration is true, that it conceals nothing and that no part of it is false."

Mr. Subba Rao, who appears on behalf of Gaji Das, asks us to hold that such a verification is in order and has been made in compliance with r. 3 of Chap. III. His contention is that when a petition is verified by the petitioner himself, all that he is required to do is to verify it in the manner in which pleadings are verified in a civil suit and it is not necessary for him to verify it in the presence of a Commissioner for Oaths or any other officer. In my opinion, this contention is not borne out either by r. 3 or any of the other rules of Chap. III. Rule 3, runs as follows :

"The facts stated in every petition shall be verified either by the solemn affirmation of the petitioner or by an affidavit to be annexed to the petition."

No doubt this rule draws a distinction between verification by the solemn affirmation of the petitioner and verification by an affidavit, but there are several rules in Chap. III which show that where the facts stated in a petition are verified by the solemn affirmation of the petitioner the procedure should be the same as when they are verified by an affidavit. Rule 13 provides that :

"Every Commissioner before whom a petition is verified or an affidavit is made shall, at the end of the petition or affidavit, certify the verification of the petition or making of the affidavit in the prescribed form."

Again r. 16, states that :

"Every person verifying a petition or making an affidavit, if not personally known to the Commissioner before whom the petition is verified, or the affidavit is made, shall be identified to such Commissioner by some one known to him, and the Commissioner shall state at the foot of the petition or affidavit, as the case may be, the name, address and description of the person by whom the identification was made."

It is obvious that these provisions would have been unnecessary in so far as they relate to the verification of a petition by solemn affirmation, if it was intended that the person verifying the petition need not appear before the Commissioner for Oaths to verify it. There is also no justification for holding that the verification by solemn affirmation referred to in r. 3 should be made in the same manner as the verification of pleadings in a civil suit. So far as verification of pleadings is concerned, it is governed by a specific rule of the Civil P. C. that rule being O. VI, r. 15. There is, however, nothing in Chap. III or any other Chapter of the Rules of this Court to show that O VI, r. 15, has been made applicable to applications filed in the High Court. These applications are governed by a different set of rules and must conform to them. Besides the use of the words 'solemn affirmation' suggests that it is to be made before a Court or some person authorised to administer oaths and affirmations. I am therefore unable to hold that the petition of Gaji Das has been properly verified. At the same time it must be conceded that the points raised in this case have brought to light certain defects in the rules relating to the verification of applications. The word 'affidavit' is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as follows :

"A statement or declaration reduced to writing or sworn to or affirmed before some officer who has the authority to administer oath or affirmation."

Thus, this word is comprehensive enough to include both statements sworn to and affirmed. Notwithstanding this, r. 3 is so drafted as to suggest that there is some distinction between the verification of a petition by solemn affirmation and its verification by an affidavit. There are certain other rules in Chap. III which also seem to draw a distinction between the "verification of a petition" and an 'affidavit' : see rr. 13, 16, 17, 18 and 19. Rule 11 says that "when the petitioner in any petition or the declarant in any affidavit, speaks to any facts within his knowledge, he must do so directly and positively using the words 'I affirm (or make oath) and say'."

The language of this rule suggests that those who framed it intended to draw a distinction between a verification by a petitioner and an affidavit by a declarant, but it is not clear why it was necessary to make that distinction. Again, as I have already pointed out, on reading the various rules of Chap. III it would appear that those who framed them must have intended that where a petition is verified on oath or by solemn affirmation, the oath or affirmation should as a rule be administered by the Commissioner for Oaths, yet curiously enough there is no rule expressly requiring a petitioner to appear before the Commissioner for the purpose of verifying his petition or swearing an affidavit. In view of these defects it is difficult to reject this petition merely on the ground that it does not conform to r. 3.

The second question also is not free from difficulty. It appears that according to r. 13, Chap. XIII (Part III of the Patna High Court Rules) a fee of Rs. 2 is leviable "for swearing or affirming every affidavit intended to be used in the High Court." It is contended by the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioner that if this rule is read along with some of the rules of Chap. III where a distinction has been drawn between a verified petition and an affidavit, one must hold that the fee of Rs. 2 can be levied only when an affidavit or a declaration by a person other than the petitioner is either sworn or affirmed, and not when the petition is verified by the petitioner on solemn affirmation. It is suggested that the word 'affirming' has been used in contrast with the word 'swearing' in this rule because the Oaths Act permits the making of an affirmation where a party has some objection to taking an oath, and it is contended that where the application is verified by the petitioner himself it is only just that no fee should be charged because the petitioner is already required to pay a court-fee on the petition itself. Some of these arguments can be easily met, but it does appear to me that the rule is not clear, and I am therefore not disposed to reject the present application on the ground that it is not sufficiently stamped. In my opinion, the rules ought to be recast in plainer language and if in fact it is intended that a petition which is verified by the petitioner himself does not require a court-fee under r. 10 of Chap. XIII it must be said so in clear language.

As to the merits of these two applications there is very little indeed to be said. In both the cases the petitioners sought to prosecute one Hari Naik for making certain false statements before a Deputy Magistrate in criminal case. In Criminal Revision No. 7 of 1939 the Magistrate refused to make a complaint under s. 476, Criminal P. C., and an appeal from his order was dismissed by the Sessions Judge. Both the Magistrate and the learned Judge were of the opinion that contradictory statements were made by the opposite party in a state of confusion and that it was not expedient in the interest of justice that a complaint should be lodged. In Criminal Revision No. 75 of 1938 the trying Magistrate made a complaint to the District Magistrate, but the complaint was dismissed by the latter on a similar ground and the order of the District Magistrate was upheld on appeal. In my opinion, no case has been made out for setting aside the order of the learned Sessions Judge refusing to direct the prosecution of the opposite party under s. 193, I. P. C. The result is that both the applications are dismissed.

BURN AND LAKSHMANA RAO, JJ.

In re KARUPPAN CHETTI AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED.

Criminal trial—Confession—Divergences between confessions before Police and Magistrate—If ground for rejecting them—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 30—Confession by accused implicating co-accused—Evidentiary value of—It can be used as positive evidence.

Slight divergences between the two confessions the one made to the Police Officer and the other to the Magistrate or the omissions from the confessions of facts spoken to by the prosecution witnesses are not sufficient reasons for rejecting the confessions.

The confessions of an accused implicating the co-accused are of less evidentiary value than the testimony of an accomplice because the man in the dock cannot be cross-examined. They can only be taken into consideration under s. 30, Evi. Act, along with such other evidence as there may be. Such confessions may help the Court to decide whether the other evidence is or is not credible. It cannot, however, supply the place of positive evidence regarding the commission of the crime.

Refd. T. and Cr. As referred by the Additional Session Judge, Madura Division, in C. C. No. 119 of 1939.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, N. Krishnamurthi and C. K. Venkatanarasimham, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Burn, J.—The appellants were accused Nos. 2 and 3 in S. C. No. 119 of 1940 in which the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Madura tried them and one Pethnasami Chetti (accused No. 1) on the charge that accused Nos. 2 and 3 had murdered one Chockalingam Chetti, on June 17, 1939 and that accused No. 1 had abetted the commission of the murder by them. The learned Additional Sessions Judge considered that the evidence of abetment by accused No. 1 was insufficient and acquitted him, but accused Nos. 2 and 3, the learned Additional Sessions Judge, agreeing with the assessors, found guilty of the offence of murder.

There is no doubt about the fact that Chockalingam Chetti was murdered on the night of June 17, 1939, at Bodinaickanur. He was stabed in 24 places and his head was cut off. The case was undoubtedly one of murder. The chief evidence against the appellants consisted of confessions made by accused No 3. He was arrested on June 26, in the house of a country doctor (P. W. No. 29) to whom he had gone for treatment of a wound on his leg. When the Circle Inspector saw him, accused No. 3 made a long confession to the Inspector which has been recorded in Ex. AA. The learned Additional Sessions Judge has only admitted in evidence under s. 27, Evi. Act, certain portions of this statement which in his opinion relate distinctly to important facts discovered in consequence of the information given by accused No. 3 Accused No. 3 said that he was prepared to show the weapon which had been used by himself and accused No. 2 in killing Chockalingam Chetti. He also said that he would show the place where the head had been buried separately from the trunk. He took the Police to a place about a furlong to the north of Bodipuram and there he produced from under a bush a dagger(M.O. No. 1) and an aruval (M. O. No. 2). According to his story the dagger had been used by himself and the aruval by accused No. 2. The evidence of the doctor who made the post mortem examination showed that at least two kinds of weapons had been used, a stabbing instrument and an ordinary cutting instrument. Accused No. 3's story that M. Os. Nos. 1 and 2 were the weapons used may therefore be true but it was not confirmed by the results of chemical and serological examination. The chemical examiner was unable to find blood on the dagger (M. O. No. 1). He found blood on the aruval (M. O. No. 2) but it was in such a disintegrated condition that it was not possible to apply the test for human blood. Accused No. 3 also pointed out the place where he said the skull had been buried. Here again information was not fully corroborated by the fact discovered for the skull was not found there. It was corroborated to some extent however because the Police found a nasty smell and some human hair. A human skull was found a few days later about a furlong further off, and the lower jaw bones separated from it. The doctor was able to find that the jaw bones fitted the skull but he was not able to say that the skull was the skull of the person to whom the trunk had belonged.

Accused No. 3 was taken before the Sub-Magistrate on 28th. On July 1, he made a long and detailed confession to the Sub-Magistrate of Tirumangalam which is Ex. J. The Sub-Magistrate took all the possible precautions to ensure that he should not make a confession of any kind unless he really wanted to do so and the Sub-Magistrate was satisfied that he was making a statement voluntarily. Accused No. 3 persisted in confessing throughout the proceedings in the Court of the Magistrate who held the preliminary enquiry. When he was questioned on September 30, 1939, more than three months after the offence, he again repeated his confession and in fact added details which he had not mentioned before. The Sub-Magistrate decided to commit the three accused for trial on October 4, and even on that date when accused No. 3 was asked if he had any witnesses to be examined in the Sessions Court he said that he had none, but he did not disown his confessions. This is somewhat important because the plea of learned Counsel for accused No. 3 is that his confessions ought to be held to be irrelevant as having been made under inducement. It was alleged that the Inspector of Police had induced him to confess by promising that he should be taken as an approver.

If the confessions of accused No. 3 are true, there is no doubt about his participation in the murder of Chockalingam Chetti for he says that he stabbed him in several places. We have been asked to say that the confessions cannot be relied upon because they do not tally with all the evidence that has been given by the prosecution witnesses and because they are not idential. There are slight differences between the confessions made on July 1, and on September 30. We do not think, however, that these divergences between the two confessions or the omissions from the confessions of facts spoken to by the prosecution witnesses are sufficient reasons for rejecting the confessions. The allegation that the Police Inspector induced accused No. 3 to confess by promising to take him as an approver cannot be believed. It is clear, we think, that these confessions were made voluntarily by accused No. 3 and that, so far as concerns his participation in the murder, they are true. They are rather strongly corroborated by the discovery on information given by him of the two weapons and of the place where something dead had been buried. The confessions are strongly corroborated by the evidence given by three witnesses, P. Ws. Nos. 27, 28 and 29. As already stated, accused No. 3 was arrested in the house of P. W. No. 29 who is a country physician. Accused No. 3 had been taken to that house by his relation P. W. No 27 and by P. W. No. 28. All these three witnesses said that when he was asked to explain the wound on his legs, accused No. 3 admitted that he and accused No. 2 at the instigation of accused No. 1 had killed a Chetti in Bodinaickanur. The assessors and the learned Sessions Judge, we think, were undoubtedly right in holding that accused No. 3 was guilty of the offence of murder. We confirm his conviction for murder and also the sentence of death and dismiss his appeal.

The case of accused No. 2 is quite different. The evidence against him was that of several witnesses who said that, on three or four days before this murder was committed they had seen him in company with accused No. 3 in Bodinaickanur. Accused No. 3 belongs to Mallapuram which is a long way from Bodinaickanur. There was evidence also given by P. W. No. 26 that on the night of June 17, accused No. 2 went to Bodipuram along with accused No. 3 and both of them entered the house of accused No. 2. The evidence of P. W. No. 26 was accepted by the learned Sessions Judge. Learned Counsel for accused No. 2 has criticised the evidence of P. W. No. 26 rather severely because he was unable to explain consistently how he happened to get up and come out of doors in the middle of the night and see accused Nos. 2 and 3. In one place he said that he thought somebody was knocking at the door of the house in which he was sleeping. But in the Sessions Court he says that he got up and came out because he heard somebody knocking at the door of the house of accused No. 2. The learned Sessions Judge was apparently impressed by the demeanour of this witness and we find it difficult to reject his evidence. Besides this, the only other item of evidence against accused Nos. 2 was given by a Police foot-print expert. In the confession of accused No. 3 before the Sub-Magistrate on July 1, it was stated that, after committing the murder, accused Nos. 3 and 2 ran away in a north easterly direction and passed over some clay bricks which had been laid to dry. When these bricks were examined, marks of human feet were found on them. The foot-print expert took specimen prints from the feet of accused Nos. 2 and 3 in clay which was as nearly as possible of the same texture as that of the bricks found near the brick kiln. Having compared these test prints with the prints found on the bricks near the kiln, the expert said that in his opinion the foot-prints had been made by accused Nos. 2 and 3. We have examined the prints ourselves and find it very difficult to express any opinion.

It is quite conceivable that the eye of the expert can see a good deal more in matters of this kind than an untrained eye. But it has to be remembered that the brick kiln where these foot prints were found is about a quarter of a mile away from the place where Chockalingam Chetti was murdered. The positive evidence therefore even if it is all accepted, is simply that before the murder the 2nd accused was in the company of the third ; immediately after the murder, or very shortly after the murder, he was in company with accused No. 3 and his foot-prints have been found alongside the foot-prints of accused No. 3 on some soft bricks about a quarter of a mile away from the scene of the crime. On these facts learned Counsel for accused No. 2 asked us to say that accused No. 2 cannot be held guilty of the murder of Chockalingam Chetti. We think that this contention is well founded. Accused No. 3 implicated accused No. 2 in the crime in his confessions and if accused No. 3's confessions are true, accused No. 2 took in fact a leading part in the killing of Chockalingam Chetti. But the confessions of accused No. 3, as has frequently been held, are of less evidentiary value than the testimony of an accomplice because the man in the dock cannot be cross-examined. They can only be taken into consideration under s. 30, Evi. Act, along with such other evidence as there may be. This has been generally interpreted to mean that confessions like these given by accused No. 3 in this case may help the Court to decide whether the other evidence is or is not credible. It cannot however supply the place of positive evidence regarding the commission of the crime. In the present case, for instance, if we were in doubt as to the credibility of the evidence given by P. W. No. 26, that doubt might be resolved by taking the confessions of accused No. 3 into consideration. But since the rest of the evidence does not show that accused No. 2 took part in the crime the confessions of accused No. 3 cannot be used to supplement it and to furnish the sole evidence of the actual murder. The circumstances proved against accused No. 2 by the witnesses to whom we have referred, do not in our opinion lead inevitably to the inference that he took part in the murder of Chockalingam Chetti. For these reasons, we set aside the conviction of accused No. 2 and the sentence of death and direct that he be set at liberty.

N.-S. Order accordingly.

HARBANS—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Agra Tenancy Act (III of 1926), ss. 271, 264—Issue submitted to Civil Court under s. 271—Application to Civil Court to refer issue to arbitration—Sch. II, Civil Procedure Code, if applies to such application—S. 271, if requires personal decision by Court—Reference by Civil Court to arbitration—Decision based on award is decision of Court—Reference to Civil Court under s. 271, whether delegation of authority by Revenue Court—Revenue Court, if competent to pass decree on basis of Civil Court's judgment—Sch. II deals with procedure only—If covered by s. 141—Arbitration—Parties to reference and arbitrators aware of subject-matter of reference—Award made with respect to such subject-matter—Objection that application for reference did not specify matter of reference, if can be raised in second appeal.

The provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., clearly apply to applications in a suit. An application made to the Civil Court to whom the issue of proprietary title had been referred under s. 271 Agra Ten. Act praying that the issue be referred to Arbitration is an application in a suit and hence governed by Sch. II, Civil P. C. [p. 19, col. 1.]

There is nothing in s. 271, Agra Ten. Act from which it can be inferred that the Legislature intended that the decision of the Civil Court should not proceed upon an arbitration award. Where there has been a reference to arbitration and the award has been accepted, the decision in the suit is the decision of the Court, notwithstanding the fact that the Judge himself is not the person who has decided the question in issue between the parties. The provisions of O. XX, Civil P. C., governing the delivery of judgments and the granting of decrees, etc. relate, just as clearly as s. 274, Agra Ten. Act, to judgments and decrees of the Court. The provisions of Sch. II, of the Code however are without doubt applicable to proceedings in the Courts and decisions based upon arbitration awards are decisions of the Courts. [ibid.]

There is no delegation by the revenue Court under s. 271 Agra Ten. Act. The provisions in regard to reference of an issue to the Civil Court are mandatory. The revenue Court has no discretion in the matter. In so far as this issue is concerned, the Civil Court is a Court of original jurisdiction, and in disposing of the issue that Court is not exercising an authority delegated by the Revenue Court. The Civil Court is in fact seised of the suit in which the issue referred to it under s. 271 arises and is therefore competent to refer the issue to arbitration under Sch. II, Civil P. C. Nand Ram v. Fakir Chand (2), doubted.

Para. 16 (2) of Sch. II, Civil P. C., does not provide that the decree which is to follow upon the judgment must be the decree of the Court which granted the application to refer an issue to arbitration. Hence the Revenue Court is competent to pass a decree on the finding of the Civil Court on an issue submitted to it under s. 271 even though the finding is based on an award in arbitration. [p. 19, col. 2.]

Section 141, Civil P. C., applies to all proceedings in any Court of civil jurisdiction and is not restricted to original proceedings. The proceedings in the Civil Court after the record has been sent to that Court by the revenue Court in accordance with s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, are undoubtedly proceedings in a Court of civil jurisdiction. Hence Sch. II, Civil P. C., applies to such proceedings by virtue of s. 141. Consequently the Civil Court has jurisdiction to refer the issue submitted to him under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, to arbitration and the finding based upon the award in the arbitration is a valid finding and the decree of the Revenue Court based upon such finding is perfectly legal. Reference to arbitration by the Civil Court of the issue submitted to it under s. 271 is not inconsistent with s. 271, within the meaning of s. 264. Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (3), explained and distinguished. 103 Ind. Cas. 69 (4), and 96 Ind. Cas. 705 (5), not approved. Risal Singh v. Bhola Ram (6) distinguished 3 Ind. Cas. 904 (7), approved.

Schedule II, Civil P. C., is procedure and nothing else but procedure. The right to arbitrate is not conferred by Sch. II. This right is a common law-right which is part of the right of contract. Schedule II, merely provides for the manner in which after a suit has been instituted the right may be exercised. Schedule II, is therefore covered by s. 141. [p. 21, col. 2.]

Where in a case of a reference to arbitration by the Court, the parties as well as the arbitrators are well aware of the subject-matter of the reference and the arbitrators have passed an award with respect to that matter, an objection that the actual application for a reference to arbitration did not specify the matter to be arbitrated upon cannot be allowed to be raised for the first time is second appeal. [p. 26, col. 1.]

S. A. from the decision of the Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated November 29, 1937.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and Jagnandan Lal, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. S. Pathak, for the Respondent.

Thom, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit under s. 44, Agra Ten. Act. The plaintiff sought to eject the defendants from certain plots of land. The defendants in their defence pleaded that they were proprietors of these plots and not tenants. In these circumstances the revenue Court in which the suit was instituted referred an issue on the question of proprietary title to the Civil Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act. The record of the suit was submitted to the Civil Court as directed by s. 271, Agra Ten. Act. The parties thereupon presented a joint application to the Munsif in which they prayed that the matter in issue be referred to arbitration. The issue was referred to arbitration and in accordance with the provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., arbitrators were appointed and award was pronounced. Objections to the award which was against the defendants were dismissed by the learned Munsif who accepted the award, decided the issue submitted to him in terms of the award and sent back the record with his finding to the Court of the Assistant Collector. The Assistant Collector accepting the finding decreed the suit. The defendants appealed to the District Judge on two grounds. Firstly, they challenged the decree of the Assistant Collector upon the ground that it had proceeded upon an invalid finding. It was contended that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to refer the issue submitted to him to arbitration and that therefore his finding based upon the arbitrators' award was invalid. The decree of the learned Assistant Collector which followed the finding of the learned Munsif based upon the award was consequently invalid. The appellants also objected to the decree of the Assistant Collector upon the further ground that the Assistant Collecter had refused them leave to amend their written statement.

The District Judge rejected both contentions and dismissed the appeal. In second appeal in this Court the decision of the District Judge is challenged only upon the first ground, viz., that the finding of the Munsif, on which the revenue Court's decision is based, is invalid for the reason that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to refer to arbitration the issue referred by the revenue Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act.

Section 271 provides :

"(1) If (a) in any suit or application filed in a revenue Court against a person alleged to be the plaintiff's tenant or under s. 44, the defendant pleads that he is not a tenant, but has a proprietary right in the land, or (b) in any suit instituted under Chap. XIV, the defendant pleads that the plaintiff has not got the proprietary right entitling him to institute the suit, or (c) in any suit instituted under s. 121 a dispute as to the proprietary right in the land in suit is raised, and such question of proprietary right has not been already determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the revenue Court shall frame an issue on the question of proprietary right and submit the record to the competent Civil Court for the decision of that issue only."

For the appellants it was contended that the provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., which relate to arbitration in a suit are not applicable to proceedings in a Civil Court where as issue has been referred by the revenue Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act. Paragraph 1 of Sch. II provides :

"(1). Where in any suit all the parties interested agree that any matter in difference between them shall be referred to arbitration, they may at any time before judgment is pronounced, apply to the Court for an order of reference."

Paragraph 3 provides :

"(1). The Court shall by order, refer to the arbitrator the matter in difference which he is required to determine, and shall fix such time at it thinks reasonable for the making of the award, and shall specify such time in the order. (2) Where a matter is referred to arbitration, the Court shall not, save in the manner and to the extent provided in this schedule, deal with such matter 'in the same suit.'"

Paragraph 16 provides :

"(1). Where the Court sees no cause to remit the award or any of the matters referred to arbitration for consideration in manner aforesaid, and no application has been made to set aside the award, or the Court has refused such application, the Court shall, after the time for making such application has expired, proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award. (2) Upon the judgment so pronounced a decree shall follow, and no appeal shall lie from such decree except in so far as the decree is in excess of, or not in accordance with the award."

It was urged on behalf of the appellants that the arbitration provisions of the Civil P. C. apply to proceedings in a suit and not to proceedings which are not proceedings in a suit such as for example, proceedings in the Civil Court to which an issue has been referred under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act. A suit was a proceeding, it was maintained, which commenced with the presentation of a plaint and for this proposition the appellants relied on the case in Hansraj Gupta v. Dehra Dun Mussoorie Electric Tramway Co., Ltd (1). In that case the Privy Council held that a suit was a proceeding which commenced with the presentation of a plaint. The question raised in the appeal before the Privy Council was as to whether an application by a liquidator under s. 186, Companies Act, was a suit within the meaning of s. 3, Lim. Act. The Board held that such an application was not a suit inasmuch as it had not commenced with the presentation of a plaint. Learned Counsel for the appellants maintained that the proceedings in the Civil Court following the submission of the record under s. 271, Ten. Act, by the revenue Court had not commenced with the presentation of a plaint. They were therefore not a proceedings in the suit and consequently the Munsif had no jurisdiction to refer the issue submitted to him to arbitration. This contention in my judgment is unsound.

The provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., clearly apply to application in a suit. The application made to the Munsif to whom the issue of proprietary title had been referred praying that the issue be referred to arbitration was in my opinion an application in a suit. No doubt the suit was instituted in the revenue Court; nevertheless, the proceedings in the Civil Court were not separate and independent proceedings. They were proceedings in the suit itself. In these proceedings, in fact, the main issue in the suit was decided. It was maintained for the appellants however that it was plain from the terms of s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, that the Legislature had excluded the proceedings in the Civil Court under that section from the operation of Sch II. Civil P. C. In this connection Counsel relied upon the terms of s. 264 of the Act. Section 264 inter alia provides that "the provisions of the Civil P. C. shall not apply to provisions inconsistent with anything in the Agra Ten. Act."

Section 271, it was urged, specifically directed that the issue submitted by the revenue Court should be decided by the Judge of that Court himself and that therefore the arbitration provisions of the Civil P. C. were inconsistent with the provisions of that section. The terms of s. 271 do not support this contention. The section directs that

"the revenue Court shall frame an issue on the question of proprietary title and submit the record to the competent Civil Court for the decision of that issue only."

There is nothing in my view in this provision from which it can be inferred that the Legislature intended that the decision of the Civil Court should not proceed upon an arbitration award. Where there has been a reference to arbitration and the award has been accepted, the decision in the suit is the decision of the Court, notwithstanding the fact that the Judge himself is not the person who has decided the question in issue between the parties. It may be observed in this connection that the provisions of O. XX, Civil P. C., governing the delivery of judgments and the granting of decrees, etc. relate, just as clearly as s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, to judgments and decrees of the Court. The provisions of Sch. II of the Code however are without doubt applicable to proceedings in the Courts and decisions based upon arbitration awards are decisions of the Courts.

It was further maintained for the appellants that on the principle of delegatus non potest delegare the Munsif had no jurisdiction to refer the issue submitted to him to arbitration. In support of this contention reliance was placed on Nand Ram v. Fakir Chand (2). In that case a Bench of this Court decided that a Court to which an issue had been referred under O. XLI, r. 25 (which corresponds to s. 566 of the old Civil P. C., had no jurisdiction to refer an issue to arbitration. In my opinion, this is a somewhat doubtful decision, but it is not necessary in the present appeal to consider the question therein decided. It is sufficient to point out that there is no delegation by the revenue Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act. The provisions in regard to reference of an issue to the Civil Court are mandatory. The revenue Court has no discretion in the matter. The Legislature has in fact appointed the Civil Court as the forum to which questions of proprietary title must be taken. In so far as this issue is concerned, in short, the Civil Court is a Court of original jurisdiction, and in disposing of the issue that Court is not exercising an authority delegated by the revenue Court.

The appellants further contended that "Court" referred to in the provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., was the Court seised of the suit. The revenue Court, originally, in the present appeal was the Court which was seised of the suit and therefore it was urged the arbitration provisions were not applicable. Learned Counsel for the appellants particularly relied upon para. 16 (2) of Sch. II, which provides that upon a judgment following an award "a decree shall follow." It was contended specially that the decree must be the decree of the Court which referred the issue to arbitration. Upon a consideration of the terms of s. 271 however I am satisfied that the Civil Court was in fact seised of the suit. The section directs that the record shall be submitted to the Civil Court after an issue is framed. When the record has been received by the Civil Court it is clear in my opinion that the suit is pending in that Court. Where there is a question of proprietary title in a suit under s. 44, Agra Ten. Act, there is a divided jurisdiction. The Revenue Court may not determine the issue of proprietary title. That issue is reserved for the Civil Court. So far as that issue is concerned therefore after the record has been sent to the Civil Court that Court is seised of the suit. It is to be observed further that para. 16 (2) of Sch. II, does not provide that the decree which is to follow upon the judgment must be the decree of the Court which granted the application to refer an issue to arbitration. The Court which referred the issue to arbitration under the provisions of this paragraph "shall proceed to pronounce the judgment according to the award." The paragraph does not direct that the Court shall thereafter pass a decree in accordance with the judgment. It provides that "a decree shall follow."

In my judgment there is nothing in the provisions of Sch. II, which would justify the inference that these provisions do not apply to proceedings in Civil Courts under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act. It was contended by the respondent that even if in terms the provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., did not apply to proceedings in the Civil Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, these provisions were made applicable by s. 141 of the Code. Section 141 provides :

"The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of Civil jurisdiction."

It was urged that the proceedings in the Civil Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, were "proceedings in a Court of Civil jurisdiction" and that therefore Sch. II was applicable thereto. In my judgment if the provisions of Sch. II, are not by the terms of these provisions applicable to proceedings in the Civil Courts under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, they are certainly made applicable by s. 141 of the Code. Section 141 refers to all proceedings in any Court of Civil jurisdiction, and the proceedings in the Civil Court after the record had been sent to that Court by the Revenue Court in accordance with s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, are undoubtedly proceedings in a Court of Civil jurisdiction.

It was contended for the appellants however that s. 141 referred only to "original proceedings" and that, inasmuch as the proceedings in the Civil Court on the reference of an issue by the Revenue Court were not original proceedings s. 141 had no application. This argument was based upon a decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (3) and certain decisions which purport to follow it. Reference in particular was made to the case in Sarat Krishna Bose v. Bisheshwar Mitra (4). In my opinion the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (3) does not support the appellants' argument and it appears to me that the decisions in Sarat Krishna Bose v. Bisheshwar Mitra (4) and in the other cases to which we were referred in which the same view of the law was taken proceed on not only a misinterpretation but on a misreading of the decision of the Privy Council. In Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (3) the Privy Council decided that s. 647, Civil P. C. of 1882, which corresponds to s. 141 of the Code, 1908, did not make s. 373 of the older Code applicable to execution proceedings. The facts of the case were that an appellant first applied for execution of his decrer on August 28, 1885. He did not actually prosecute that application and on January 5, 1886 his pleader stated that the case might be struck off the list of pending cases " for the present." An order was accordingly made striking the case off the list for default." On August 24, 1888 the applicant made a second application. This was within three years from the date of his first application and was in good time if the period of limitation was to be reckoned from that time but out of time if the first application was to be treated as a nullity because it had been struck off the list.

By the Civil P. C., of 1882 it was provided under s. 373 that if a plaintiff withdraws from a suit or abandons part of his claim without the permission of the Court to bring a fresh suit he shall be precluded from bringing a fresh suit for the same matter or in respect of the same part. By s. 647 of the same Code it was enacted that the procedure therein prescribed should be followed as far as it can be made applicable in all proceedings in any Court of Civil jurisdiction other than suits and appeals. The Board held that the provisions of s. 373 were not made applicable to proceedings in execution by virtue of s. 647. In the course of the judgment of the Board it is observed :

"It is not suggested that s 373, Civil P. C., would by its own force apply to execution proceedings. The suggestion is that it is applied by force of s. 647. But the whole of Chap. 19 of the Code consisting of 121 sections is devoted to the procedure in execution and it would be surprising if the framers of the Code had intended to apply another procedure, mostly unsuitable, by saying in general terms that the procedure for suits should be followed as far as applicable. Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in s. 647 include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianship and so forth and do not exclude executions."

It is to be remarked that the Board's decision is confined to the question as to whether by virtue of s. 647, s. 373 is made applicable to proceedings in execution. Their Lordships decided that it was not. The Board did not decided however that s. 647 did not apply to proceedings in execution. It is further to be observed that the Board did not purport to give an exhaustive list of proceedings to which s. 647 applied. Nevertheless in the later cases to which we were referred, notably in Sarat Krishna Bose v. Bisheshwar Mitra (4) referred to above, and Basaratulla Mean v. Reazuddin Mean (5) it was assumed that the Board had decided that s. 647 did not apply to execution proceedings and that the Board did give an exhaustive list of the proceedings to which the section did apply which list could be extended only to proceedings ejusdem generis. In Sarat Krishna Bose v. Bisheshwar Mitra (4) for example, Mukerji, J. in interpreting the Privy Council decision observed:

"Their Lordship's decision makes it perfectly plain that this section does not apply to applications for execution, but only to original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianship and so forth."

The Board did not however decide that s. 647 applied only to such proceedings. In short, their Lordships observed that s. 647 includes original matters and not that it includes only original matters. It cannot be inferred from the decision of the Board, therefore, that s. 647, which corresponds to s. 141, Civil P. C. of 1908, did not apply to matters which were not original matters in the nature of proceedings in probates and guardianship and so forth. The decision of the Board is based upon the consideration that Chap. XIX of the Code was a self-contained chapter of 121 sections devoted to procedure in execution and further that the provisions of s. 373, Civil P. C., were inapplicable to execution proceedings. Clearly the Board did not intend to decide that s. 647 had no application at all to execution proceedings. The provisions of the Code relating to the hearing of witnesses, taking of evidence, pronouncing of judgment and passing of decrees clearly applied to Chap. XIX of the Code, but only in virtue to s. 647. In this connexion it is to be remarked that by an Amending Act in the year 1892 an explanation was added to s. 647 to the effect that this section was not applicable to execution proceedings. This explanation was omitted however from the Code of 1908 and it is permissible to conjecture that it was not repeated because it had been found in practice to be to wide in its operation. Interpreted literally, the explanation would have excluded the application of the general provisions of the Code above referred to to execution proceedings.

Now, in the present case, there is no self-contained chapter relating to proceedings under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, comparable to Chap. XIX of the 1882 Code which corresponds to O. XXI, of the 1908 Code. Furthermore, the arbitration proceedings of Sch. II are essentially applicable to the proceedings in the Civil Court when an issue has been remitted under s. 271. The question of proprietary title raised between the parties in suits under s. 44, Agra Ten. Act, is pre-eminently a question to which the arbitration provisions of Sch. II, are easily applicable and appropriate. In short the grounds upon which the Privy Council decided the case reported in Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (3) are absent in the present case.

Learned Counsel for the appellants contended finally that Sch. II, Civil P. C. contained provisions which conferred substantive rights and that it was not concerned merely with the procedure and that therefore it was not covered by s. 141 which related only to procedure. This contention in my judgment is unsound. Schedule II, is procedure and noting else but procedure. The right to arbitrate is not conferred by Sch. II. This right is a common law-right which is part of the right of contract. Its existence is recognized in other statutes, for example, in s. 28, Contract Act. The exercise of the right is encouraged as a matter of policy by statute and by the Courts, and the provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., merely provide for the manner in which after a suit has been instituted the right may be exercised. The right to arbitrate is a valuable right. In the exercise of this right parties to a dispute may, if they are so minded, avoid the expense and delay of protracted litigation. If the Legislature had intended that the right to arbitrate should be denied to parties to a dispute in which a reference has been made under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, it is reasonable to conclude that it would have made definite and specific provision to that effect. The Legislature would never have left the deprivation of this right to be inferred from certain provisions relating to procedure in which the right is not mentioned or even indirectly referred to. In the result I hold that the learned Munsif had jurisdiction to refer the issue submitted to him under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, to arbitration, and that the finding based upon the award in the arbitration is a valid finding. In my judgment the appeal should be dismissed.

Ganga Nath, J.—I concur.

Braund, J.—I agree in thinking that this appeal must be dismissed. The only question that has been argued before us is whether a Civil Court, to which an "issue on the question of proprietary right" has been submitted under s. 271 (1), Agra Ten. Act, 1926, can itself refer that issue to arbitration under para. 1 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., 1908. As a result of the long and able arguments that have been addressed to us, I have come to the conclusion that the question is not as difficult as at first sight it would appear to be. The starting point of the enquiry is, of necessary, the true construction of s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1926. If the effect of that section is that the Legislature has directed that "the issue of the question of proprietary right" is to be "decided," and a "finding" on it arrived at, by the particular Civil Court to which it is submitted, and by no one else, in the sense that it is to be what I may call the "personal" decision and the "personal" finding of the Judge of the Civil Court—then 'credit questio', because no provision of the Civil P. C., 1908, could override such a statutory direction: See s. 264 (a), Agra Ten. Act, 1906 and s. 4, Civil P. C., 1908. If, on the other hand, s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1906, contains, on its true construction, no such direction, then it will be open to us to consider to what extent, if at all, the procedure of Sch. II, Civil P. C., is in fact available to the parties to an issue submitted to the Civil Court under s. 271 of the Act. I think that it is right to approach the matter in this way because it seems to be the logical way to deal with it. Section 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1926, so far as it is relevant, runs thus:

"271 (1). If....., such question of proprietary right has not been already determined by a Court of competent jurisdiction, the revenue Court shall frame an issue on the question of proprietary right and submit the record to the competent Civil Court for the decision of that issue only.... (2) The Civil Court, after reframing the issue if necessary, shall decide that issue only and return the record together with its finding on that issue to the revenue Court which submitted it."

Those, I think, are the relevant parts of s. 271. What is said on behalf of the appellants is that the language of sub-s. (2), and particularly the words "shall....return.... its finding." require that the "decision" and the "finding" shall be what I have referred to above as being the 'personal' decision and finding of the Civil Court, and not a decision or finding which is merely adopted from some one else. The argument is an attractive one and has caused me some slight difficulty, but I am inclined to think that that is not the real meaning of the language used. The primary provision for the disposal of the issue is the one contained in sub-s. (1). It is that the revenue Court is to "submit the record to the competent Civil Court for the decision of that issue only." It is, to my mind, significant that it does not say that the decision is necessarily to be the decision of the Civil Court itself. There is nothing personal about it. It is submitted to the Civil Court merely "for the decision of that issue." And, so far as sub-s. (1) goes, I think that its provisions will be fully complied with, if the decision is arrived at by any of those procedural processes which under the Civil P. C. are applicable in the normal way to issues pending in a Civil Court. It seems to me that the issue will have been decided in the Civil Court to which it is submitted, if it is decided in accordance with the award of an arbitrator under Sch. II to the Code just as much as if it is decided as the result of a trial in Court. So far, therefore, as sub-s. (1) of s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, is concerned there is nothing in it which, in my opinion, requires the 'personal' decision of the Civil Court. Then comes sub-s. (2) which requires that

"the Civil Court.... shall decide that issue only and return.... its finding on that issue to the revenue Court...."

In view of the language of sub-s. (1), I think it would be reading too much into sub-s. (2) to construe it as meaning that the 'decision' and the 'finding' must be the personal decision and finding of the Judge of the Civil Court. It is true that the sub-section uses the words 'shall decide' and 'its finding,' but I do not think that a decision or finding is any the less a decision or finding of particular Court because, in arriving at it, that Court has adopted a certain form of procedure which the Civil P. C. gives the parties a right to have resort to in any suit or other proceedings pending before it. That, of course, touches on the second of the questions which will arise and which I intend to deal with later. I find a good deal of support for this view from O. XX,

r. 5 of Sch. I, Civil P. C., 1908, itself. Order XX, is the order which says how a Court which is seized of a suit is to proceed; and, by r. 5, where issues have been framed, it has to state "its finding or decision"—the same words, be it observed, as are to be found in s. 271 (2), Agra Ten. Act, 1926. And yet those words, notwithstanding s. 4 of the Code, afford not the least obstacle to the application to the issues in a suit of the arbitration provisions of Sch. II. The words 'its finding' and 'its decision' obviously do not mean in O. XX, r. 5 that the 'finding' and decision' of the Court has to be its personal finding and decision. I have difficulty therefore in seeing why, in s. 271 (2), Agra Ten. Act, 1926, they should be used in any stricter sense. For these reasons, I think that upon its true construction there is nothing in s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1926, which makes it intrinsically impossible to apply to an issue submitted to a Civil Court under it the procedure of arbitration sanctioned by the Civil P. C.

If therefore it is open—as I have said I think it is—to us to consider the question, the next, and only remaining, matter to consider is whether the provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., 1908, did in fact apply to an issue submitted by a Revenue Court to a Civil Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1926. But before dealing with that question, I desire to refer shortly to a decision of two Judges of this Court which has, in part, given rise to this reference. The case is Nand Ram v. Fakir Chand (2). The matter arose in that case out of the submission of certain issues by a District Judge to a Subordinate Judge under s. 566, Civil P. C., 1882—now O. XLI, r. 25 of Sch. I, Civil P. C., 1908. To that extent there may be some difference between that case and the one before us, though I do not myself perceive it. The question was whether it was open to the Subordinate Judge to refer the issue remitted to him to arbitration—the same question as in the present case. It was held that it was not. The learned Judge who delivered the longer of the two judgments puts it upon the principle that it is not open to a Court to which jurisdiction has been delegated itself to delegate it.

But, with great respect, I venture to doubt, at any rate in the case of an issue submitted under s. 271 of the Agra Ten. Act, 1926, whether any case of delegation arises. The jurisdiction which the Civil Court exercises in consequence of that section is not delegated to it from any other Court. It is an original statutory jurisdiction to try a particular issue. The Civil Court is the only Court that has that jurisdiction. All that really happens is that the record is received from another Court. But that is not "delegation" of jurisdiction. Nor do I really think that the application of the arbitration provisions of Sch. II, Civil P. C., is 'delegation' either, except in the very loosest sense. It, again, is merely the exercise of a right to obtain a decision in a particular way. The arbitrators do not decide the matter 'for' the Judge, because, once an application has been made to refer a matter to arbitration under Sch. II, (assuming it applies), the Judge has lost his jurisdiction altogether, except so far as he has ultimately to pass a judgment giving effect to the arbitration. I think therefore that it is a misuse of language, at any rate in the case before us, to regard the matter as one of 'delegation' at all. The other of the learned Judges who dealt with the case to which I am now referring put it very briefly on the ground, as I read it, that the Judges' jurisdiction was limited by s. 56, Civil P. C., 1882, to deciding the issue remitted to him and extended to nothing else. I desire to say nothing here about the true construction of O. XLI, r. 25, as it does not arise. But in the present case, as I have already pointed out, I do not take the view that the jurisdiction of the Civil Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, is limited in the same way as Oldfield, J., held the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge to be limited in Nand Lal v. Fakir Chand (2), under s. 566 of the Code of 1882. Upon the same grounds also I am prepared to distinguish Risal Singh v. Bhola Ram (6) which is also cited in the order of reference to us.

Having arrived at that point, I think that nine-tenth of the difficulty in the case is overcome. It remains to consider whether in fact there is anything in the Act or the Code which permitted resort to be had by the parties, on an issue submitted under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1926, to arbitration under Sch. II, Civil P. C., 1908. In my judgment, the effect of s. 141, Civil P. C., 1908, is to make available to the parties in such a case the provisions of Sch. II, and to render a "decision" and "finding" of a Civil Court referred to in s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, arrived at and 'returned' in pursuance of such an arbitration, a valid decision, finding and return. For myself, I prefer to put this upon the footing of the applicability of s. 241 of the Code rather than upon the footing that, in the circumstances of submission of an issue under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, the "suit" itself can be said to be pending in two Courts at once and that, therefore, para. 1 of Sch. II, Civil P. C., directly applies. If I understand it rightly, that is one of the arguments addressed to us by Mr. Pathak from which he draws the conclusion that the Court referred to in that section is, or may be, the Civil Court to which the issue is remitted. I do not wish to express a concluded view upon that proposition, which, I think, as a matter of construction of the section, presents considerable difficulty and is not necessary to the decision of this appeal. I prefer to found myself upon the direct application of s. 141, Civil P. C., 1908, rather than upon the immediate application of para. 1 of Sch. II or upon an assumption, which is to my mind before, that, after proceedings have been commenced in any Court, there exists, under the Contract Act or otherwise, anything in the nature of a common law right in the parties to go to arbitration. Section 141, Civil P. C., 1908, is in these terms :

We have to deal with the section as it stands and the only relevance of the history of it is in order to understand the authorities which have from time to time construed it. Nor do I think that we are in this appeal in the least concerned with those numerous authorities, as such, in which it seems to have been determined that execution proceedings are not 'proceedings' within the meaning of s. 141. I should myself have entertained no doubt that, according to any ordinary use of language, an issue submitted by a revenue Court to a Civil Court under s. 271, Agra. Ten. Act, 1926, was, once it had been so submitted, a "proceeding" in a "Court of Civil jurisdiction." If it is not a proceeding, what is it? I do not think it is a "suit." If it had been, para. 1, Sch. II, would have directly applied. The word "proceedings" in the section is not in any way limited or restricted and, but for certain dicta of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, I should have been contended to assume that an issue of the kind we have before us was a "proceeding in a Court of civil jurisdiction." The passage which has raised the argument upon which Mr. Banerji relies is to be found in Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (3) at p. 111* where in reference to s. 647, Civil P. C. of 1892, their Lordships say :

"Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in s 647, include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates guardianships, and so forth, and do not include executions."

A good deal of use of this passage has been made, of which a decision of a Bench of two Judges of the Calcutta High Court is an example. The learned Judges in Sarat Kriskna Bose v. Bisheshwar Mitra (4), at p. 410†, in dealing with a question whether s. 141 was applicable to a proceeding for restoration of a suit under O. IX, r. 9, say :

"An elaborate research into the history of s. 141 and an exhaustive analysis of the case law bearing on it will be found in the recent judgment of Page, J., in Basaratulla Mean v. Reasuddin Mean (5). Now amidst the hopelessly conflicting mass of judicial decisions which have clustered round s. 141 and s. 647, which stood in its place before, the solid bed-rock on which it is safe to take one's stand is the decision of the Judicial Committee in Thakur Prasad v. Fakirullah (3). Their Lordships' decision makes it perfectly plain that the section does not apply to applications for execution, but only to 'original' matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and 'so forth'. "The expression 'so forth' must, in my opinion, be read as meaning proceedings ejusdem generis with the instances that precede it, and include such proceedings as in divorce, in insolvency, for succession certificates and the like and the expression 'original matters, in my opinion confirms that view as meaning matters which originate in themselves and not those which spring up from a suit or from some other proceedings or arise in connection therewith."

With great respect I think that this passage may possibly find in the dictum of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee a good deal more than was intended by its authors. The word 'only' nowhere appears in the language used by their Lordships. They say merely that the proceedings referred to in s. 141 "include" the original matters which they specify. For myself, I doubt whether it was in their Lordships' minds to lay down that nothing that was not "original" could possibly be included in the proceedings contemplated by s. 141 of the Code and I respectfully agree with the comment to the same effect which has been made by Sir George Knox in this Court in Khushalgir v. Gobindgir (7). In any case, what they do say falls short. I think, of even a dictum that only 'original' matters fall within the 'proceedings' contemplated by the section. Even if, however, we had been bound to take the same view of the dictum of the Judicial Committee as the Calcutta High Court has taken of it, I should still have had no hesitation in holding that the issue of proprietary right in this case before the Civil Court was an "original matter." The issue in question started life as one of the issues involved in the suit in the Revenue Court. That suit was unquestionably an 'original' suit and the issues in it were 'original' issues or matters. All that has happened is that one of the issues in that suit has, because of the law, had to be transferred—'submitted' is the word used—to be heard in another Court—the Court. That issue has not changed its character on that account. It is the same issue that it was in the Revenue Court, where it was an 'original' issue. It is, I think, still an 'orinigal' issue in the Civil Court and, a fortiori, it is an 'original' matter. I think the appellant is seeking in this connection to put upon the word 'original' a meaning connoting that it must arise in the same Court as that in which the suit originated. But that, in my view, is not the meaning of the word 'original' in this context.

I think, therefore, that the hearing of this issue in the Civil Court was a 'proceeding" in the Civil Court and moreover, an 'original matter'. But then Mr. Banerji says that, even if it is, the provisions of Sch. II to the Code are not 'procedure' and cannot, therefore, be applied under s. 141. He says that the right to go to arbitration is a "substantive right" and not a matter of procedure at all. I do not agree. Schedule II provides both a right and a method by which the trial of a suit is to proceed. It provides a means for the disposal of the suit. It indicates what course the Court is to take in certain events. All this is, to my mind, 'procedure' pure and simple and none the less so because the parties are given a statutory privilege of adopting it. There are many matters of procedure which constitute 'rights' as well—the right to deliver interrogatories, to obtain particulars of pleadings, to obtain and inspect documents, and to have discovery are all 'rights' as well as matters of procedure. Finally, it is suggested that, if all else fails, then it is not procedure 'provided in this Code', because, as I understand the argument, the procedure is to be found set out, not in the body of the Code or in the rules, but in a schedule. I hardly think that this need be seriously dealt with. Schedule II is part of the Civil P. C., being introduced by s. 89, and there is nothing in the definition of the word 'Code' in s. 2 (1) which says otherwise. All that definition says is that the word 'Code' includes the rules.

There is one other matter which in deference to Mr. Banerji's careful argument, I desire to refer to. He says that, even if by virtue of s. 141, Sch. II would prima facie be applicable to the hearing of an issue in a Civil Court of the kind we have here, it ought, in the special circumstances of this kind of case, to be held to be excluded by implication because it is wholly inappropriate to the procedure under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act. That again, is an ingenious, but, I think false, argument. It rests on para. 16, Sch. II. That section provides (1) that the Court shall proceed to pronounce 'judgment' according to the award and (2) that the judgment shall be followed by a decree. What is said is that, if the provision of Sch. II, were applicable to an issue submitted to the Civil Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1926, the proceedings would not result in a judgment' at all by the Court which receives the award nor, if it were, would that judgment be 'followed' by a decree of the Court that passed it. From this we are asked, I think, to conclude that there is such an inconsistency that the provisions of Sch. II must, notwithstanding s. 141, be excluded by necessary implication. It is true, I think, that para. 16 of Sch. II, had it been drafted with special reference to proceedings such as those we are considering, might have been differently worded. But I can on a reasonable construction of s. 16 see no real inconsistency. I do not think that there is any stranining of the language in treating the 'judgment' referred to in the section as synonymous with the decision and finding which the Civil Court is enjoined to return to the Revenue Court under s. 271, Agra Ten. Act, 1926, particularly having regard to the definition of 'judgment' given in s. 2 (9) of the Code. And, if that be so, then a decree would in fact 'follow' the judgment. The section says neither that the decree shall follow it immediately nor that the decree shall be by the same Court as pronounces the judgment. The decree by the Revenue Court which finally disposes of the proceedings will, I think, satisfy the section.

A final suggestion has been made that the actual application for a reference to arbitration did not specify the matter to be arbitrated upon. It was, in fact, a carelessly drawn application. But up to this moment every one—not excluding the parties themselves and the arbitrators—has been perfectly well aware that it was the issue of proprietary right that was submitted to arbitration and that is what the arbitrators decided. This objection is taken here for the first time. It would, I think be wrong of us to entertain it. For these reasons I think that the issue of proprietary right submitted to the Civil Court was one which was capable of being submitted to arbitration under Sch. II, Civil P. C. I think that, by virtue of s. 141, Sch. II to the Code did apply to this 'proceeding' in the Civil Court and that the application for submission to aribitration was rightly made to, and granted by, the Civil Court. It follows that I agree that this appeal should be dismissed.

BHUTNATH JANAN AND ANOTHER—MORTGAGEES—PETITIONERS

GOPAL PROSAD SAHU—MORTGAGOR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Mortgage—Usufructuary—Mortgage bond containing term mentioning period after which mortgagor undertakes to redeem property on payment of principal—Whether inconsistent with usufructuary mortgage—Estoppel—Misrepresentation.

Where the mortgagee is given possession of the mortgaged property and the stipulation is that he should remain in possession till the sum advanced is paid and enjoy the usufruct in lieu of interest, the mortgage is usufructuary even if the mortgage bond mentions a period or term, after which the mortgagor undertakes to redeem the property on payment of the principal money. Such a term is quite consistent with the mortgage being a usufructuary mortgage and does not by itself import any personal liability. It simply amounts to a proviso for redemption, and fixes the minimum period within which the right of redemption can be exercised. A provision in the deed that in case of dispossession the mortgagee would be able to realise the principal and interest at certain rate, is in the nature of an indemnity clause and does not alter the nature of the mortgage. Luchmeshar Singh v. Dookh Mochan Jha (2), relied on.

If a party is fully acquainted with the actual facts of the case, there can not be in fact any misrepresentation by the other party upon which the former could have been induced to act or alter his position.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Janah, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Gopendra Nath Das, for the Opposite Party.

B. K. Mukherjea, J.—This rule is directed against an order of the Munsif, Third Court, Tamluk, dated July 29, 1939, made in a proceeding under s. 26 G (5), Ben. Ten. Act. The father of the opposite party executed a mortgage bond in favour of the petitioner's father some time in the year 1920, by which possession of the mortgaged property was delivered over to the mortgagee. More than 15 years having elapsed from the date of the registration of the deed, the opposite party presented this application under s. 26 G (5), Ben. Ten. Act, for restoration of possession of the mortgaged property. The Munsif allowed this prayer and it is against this order that the present rule has been obtained. Two points have been taken by Mr. Janah, who appears in support of the rule. It has been argued in the first place that the mortgage bond having expressly recited that the mortgaged property was held at a fixed rate of rent and was not an occupancy holding the mortgagor was estopped from saying that it was an occupancy jote, and as such the provision of s. 26 G (5) did not apply. The second point taken is that the mortgage was not a usufructuary mortgage properly so-called but it was an anomalous mortgage and the mortgagor was not entitled to claim restoration of the mortgaged property. As regards the first point, it seems to me that on the facts found no question of estoppel can possibly arise. It has been found by the Court below, that the mortgagee was fully cognisant of the fact that the lands were held by the mortgagor as an occupancy raiyat. It was so recorded in the C. S. records, and the khatian numbers were expressly given in the mortgage bond; the bond itself at one place described the land as an occupancy holding, though at the beginning they were described as a mokarari tenancy. As the plaintiff must be held on the findings of the Court below, to be acquainted with the actual facts of the case, there could not be in fact any misrepresentation by the mortgagor, upon which the mortgagee could have been induced to act or alter his position. The first contention of Mr. Janah therefore must fail.

The second point raised by him cannot also be supported. From the mortgage bond it appears to be perfectly clear that the mortgagee was given possession of the mortgaged property and the stipulation was that he should remain in possession till the sum advanced was paid and enjoy the usufruct in lieu of interest. It is true that the mortgage bond mentions a period or term, after which the mortgagor undertakes to redeem the property on payment of the principal money but as we have already held in an earlier case vide Civil Revision No. 1197 of 1939 Khoar Jamadar v. Abdul Sobhan Khan (1) the finding of such a term is quite consistent with the mortgage being a usufructuary mortgage and does not by itself import any personal liability. It simply amounts to a proviso for redemption, and fixes the minimum period within which the right of redemption can be exercised, vide Luckmeshar Singh v. Dookh Mochan Jha (2) that the Legislature contemplates such a term in a usufructuary mortgage is apparent from the pravision of s. 62 (b), T. P. Act. In present case, it is not said that the mortgage will be entitled to demand the money after the expiry of the due date and the covenant on the other hand is that the mortgagee would go on holding and enjoying the property, until the mortgagor was in position to redeem the property by paying the money. We have not been able to find out any other provision in the deed, which imposes a personal liability on the mortgagor or gives the mortgagee a right of sale. There is indeed a provision that in case of dispossession the mortgagee would be able to realise the principal and interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum. Both that as we have already held in several cases is in the nature of an indemnity clause and does not alter the nature of the mortgage. The result is that both the grounds urged by Mr. Janah fail and the Rule is discharged. There will be no order as to costs.

Mohamed Akram, J.—I agree.

Thakur ARJUN SINGH—RESPONDENT

Hindu Law—Widow—Maintenance—Husband, if can dispose of property so as to jeopardise wife's right to maintenance—Provision as to maintenance of widow in husband's will, value of—If deprives Court's power to fix reasonable maintenance—In order to claim maintenance, widow, if bound to reside in husband's house—Direction in husband's will that widow must reside at family house, if can be ignored for just cause—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 34—Suit for arrears of maintenance—Widow leaving husband's house due to strained relations with adopted son, caused by herself—No demand for payment made in writing—No damages proved to have accrued, due to withholding of maintenance—If entitled to interest on arrears—Agra Estates Act (VII of 1920), Sch. II—Suit claiming maintenance against estate—Plea that estate was governed by Act and that plaintiff was not entitled to maintenance at rate higher than as provided in Sch. II, not raised in trial Court—If can be raised in appeal.

A widow is entitled to be maintained by persons who may have inherited the estate of her husband, so long as she does not lose such right by reason of inchastity on immorality. It is not open to a husband to dispose of his property in such a manner as to jeopardise the rights of his wife. If a provision is made by a Hindu husband in his will as regards the maintenance to be granted to his widow after his death, this can only be taken as a suggestion made by the husband as to what would be a reasonable provision for her maintenance and cannot deprive the Court of its power to fix a reasonable maintenance. Even if the husband bequeathed his property ignoring the wife's claim to maintenance absolutely, the bequest will not defeat the widow's claim to maintenance and will defeat her claim. [p. 30, col. 1.]

Ordinarily a widow is not bound to remain at the residence of her deceased husband in order to claim maintenance provided she does not leave it for unchaste purposes and when there is a direction in the will that she must reside at the family house the direction can be ignored for just cause. [p. 31, col. 2.]

Held, on facts that there were sufficient grounds for the widow to leave the residential house. Mulji Bhaishankar v. Bai Ujam (1) and 116 Ind. Cas. 409 (2), relied on.

Where owing to strained relations between the widow and her husband's adopted son, the root cause of which was the widow herself, the widow left her husband's house and sued for maintenance and no demand for payment of maintenance and no damages had been proved to have accrued to her because the maintenance was withheld:

Held, that the equitable jurisdiction of the Court could not be attracted in awarding interest to widow on arrears of maintenance inasmuch as she brought the trouble on herself. Nor could she claim interest under s. 73, Contract Act merely because the money was withheld. She was, however, entitled to interest pendente lite and future, under s. 34, Civil P. C. at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit up till the date of realization.

Where in a suit claiming maintenance against an estate the defendant has not raised a plea that as the estate was governed by the Agra Estates Act and that the plaintiff under no circumstances was entitled to maintenance at a rate higher than Rs. 50 a month as provided in Sch. II, Estates Act, he cannot be allowed to raise such a plea in appeal if it results in a serious prejudice to the plaintiff. [p. 29, col. 1.]

Mr. S. B. L. Gour, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. S. Darbari, for the Respondent.

Bajpai, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff Thakurani Jamna Kunwar. She brought a suit in the Court below against Thakur Arjun Singh for the recovery of "a sum of Rs. 29,000 with costs and pendente lite and future interest to be declared a charge on the property detailed at the foot of the plaint." The allegations in the plaint were that the plaintiff's husband, Thakur Laiq Singh was a very big zamindar and talugadar and the income from his zamindari property alone was Rs. 41,000 per annum. Apart from this zamindari property he was alleged to have an orchard yielding an income of Rs. 2,000 per annum and money lending business on an extensive scale together with deposits in the bank of about Rs. 50,000 and ornaments of gold and silver. Thakur Laiq Singh died in November 1931 and it was said that the defendant entered into possession of the entire estate of Thakur Laiq Singh and the plaintiff, as the widow of the said Thakur, was entitled to maintenance and the Court could declare a charge on the property in the possession of the defendant. The sum of Rs. 29,000 was made up as follows :

	Rs.
(1) Maintenance allowance from December 1931 to January 1933 at Rs. 300 per mensem	4,200
(2) Maintenance allowance from February 1933 to May 1937 at Rs. 400 per mensem	20,800
(3) Interest at the retrogressive rate at 8 annas per cent. per mensem ...	4,000
Total ...	29,000

The Court below dismissed the plaintiff's suit and hence the present appeal before us. The pleas contained in the written statement might be mentioned in some detail. It was alleged that the plaintiff had no cause of action for the suit, that the defendant's adoptive father, the late Thakur Laiq Singh, by his will dated March 29, 1928, authorised the defendant to pay Rs. 100 per mensem to the plaintiff on the condition that she did not leave the residential place and that the same would be permissible only if the defendant refused to keep or maintain the plaintiff. The defendant alleged that he never refused to keep or maintain the plaintiff and as the plaintiff had now left the residential house and lived separately she was not entitled to any separate maintenance under the terms of the will. It was further said that the plaintiff was not entitled to file any suit for maintenance or arrears of maintenance of declaration without admitting the defendant's right and title as the adopted son of the deceased. No plea was taken to the effect that under the United Prov. Estates Act (Local Act VII of 1920) the plaintiff was in no event entitled to maintenance at a rate exceeding Rs. 50 a month.

The plaintiff went into the witness-box and several witnesses were examined on her behalf. The defendant entered the witness-box on December 13, 1937 when in answer to a question by his Counsel in examination-in-chief he stated that his estate, so far as he remembered, was under the Agra Estates Act. On December 14, 1937 a notification in the United Province Govt. Gazette dated May 23, 1930 was filed which showed that Thakur Laiq Singh of Labhua had applied to the Govt. under s. 3, United Prov. Estates Act VII of 1920, for a declaration that the provisions of Part I of the said Act should apply to him, and the Governor in Council after enquiry had decided to grant the application and therefore it was being notified that the declaration was made under s. 6 of the said Act and that the provisions of Part I of the Act had been made applicable to the applicant in respect of the immovable property in which he had a separate, permanent, heritable and transferable right at the date of the notification as entered in the schedule printed below. Then a list of the zamindari property belonging to Thakur Laiq Singh was given and the revenue thereof was put down as Rs. 26,619-10-9 and the profits were put down as Rs. 41,603-8-0. This document was admitted in evidence by the learned Civil Judge on December 17, 1937. No issue had been struck with reference to the United Prov. Estates Act, and indeed none could have been struck because, when the written statement was filed, no such plea had been taken. Even after the filing of the notification in the Govt. Gazette the defendant did not insist on any new issue being struck. It, however, appears that some argument was advanced in the Court below, but the learned Judge was of the opinion

"the amount of Rs. 50 per month would be too low and inadequate and can, by no means, suffice to meet the expenses of the plaintiff."

The learned Judge also in the beginning of his judgment says :

"This is an admitted fact that the deceased Thakur Laiq Singh was a big zamindar and was the owner of Labhua estate, and that his entire estate was governed by the provisions of the Agra Estates Act, VII of 1920."

The admission amounts only to this that the Labhua estate was governed by the provisions of the Agra Estates Act, VII of 1920, and not that every item of the property detailed at the foot of the plaint was governed by the Agra Estates Act. We have taken some pains to state at length the circumstances under which the notification in the Govt. Gazette was filed in the Court below and to mention the admissions (such as they were) made at the time of argument and the arguments (such as they were) advanced before the Court below in connection with the provisions of the Agra Estates Act.

Before us, however, it was strenuously contended on behalf of the defendant that whatever our decision might be on other points, the plaintiff under no circumstances was entitled to maintenance at a rate higher than Rs. 50 a month as provided in Sch. II, Estates Act. The Govt. revenue of the property that came under the Estates Act was stated in the notification to be Rs. 26,000 odd and therefore the plaintiff, as the senior widow of the deceased estate holder, was not entitled to more that Rs. 600 a year. Learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant has contended that we should not allow this plea to be taken at this late stage because it would seriously prejudice the plaintiff. It is said that if this plea had been taken in the Court below, then the plaintiff might well have said that, so far as the estate, which is governed by the U. P. Estates Act is concerned, the plaintiff is not entitled to more than Rs. 50 a month, but so far as that property which is not governed by the Estates Act is concerned the plaintiff is entitled to something more, which might be Rs. 100 a month or Rs. 150 a month, or even more. In this connection our attention is drawn to the list given in the Govt. Notification and to the list given at the foot of the plaint. Items Nos. 32, 33 and 34 of the plaint do not find a place in the list given in the Govt. Notification and these three items are not insignificant items because they yield an income of Rs, 2,000 per annum according to the plaintiff. Apart from that the plaintiff, when she entered the witness box, said that Thakur Laiq Singh had a money-lending business on which an income-tax of Rs. 800 was levied and further Thakur Laiq Singh had Rs. 50,000 in the bank and there were ornaments worth about Rs. 6,000. The orchard, therefore, was income-yielding property, but money-lending business was also income-yielding property and there were those deposits in the bank. It is true that the defendant in his statement does not admit the existence of money-lending business and deposits in the bank, but better evidence could have been advanced by both parties and we would have been in a better position to find out as to how much income was derived by Thakur Laiq Singh and Thakur Arjun Singh from these several items of property. There can, therefore, be no doubt that the plaintiff would be seriously prejudiced if we were to allow this plea to be taken at this late stage ; even the defendant was not quite sure if his estate was under the Agra Estates Act because the utmost to which he would commit himself on that point was that the estate 'so far as he remembered' was under the Agra Estates Act.

We have, therefore, come to the conclusion that the defendant is not entitled to rely on the Agra Estates Act and to say that the plaintiff was not entitled to maintenance at a rate higher than Rs. 50 a month. It was then said that the will contained the following provision regarding the maintenance of the widows of Laiq Singh.

"If Arjun Singh neglects the maintenance of or obedience to any of my three wives aforesaid which might be a source of displeasure and trouble to her, the three wives or the wife affected shall have power to have a sum of Rs. 100 per mensem allotted to herself by Kunwar Arjun Singh who shall have no objection. But the condition shall be that none of my wives shall have power to give up her residential house and settle at another place in which case she shall not be entitled to the maintenance allowance aforesaid."

The evidence in the present case does not show that Arjun Singh was in any way neglectful of the claims of the plaintiff or that he did anything to displease or trouble her and therefore the claim to maintenance did not arise at all and, if it did arise, it was forfeited because the plaintiff was now admittedly living at a different house and had given up her former residential home.

It may be noted that the plaintiff did not base her claim to maintenance on the will, but on the general right of a Hindu widow to be maintained by the person in possession of her husband's estate. The plaint does not contain any reference to the will nor is there any clear admission by the plaintiff that the defendant is the adopted son of Thakur Laiq Singh, but the case was argued before us by the plaintiff on the assumption that the defendant was the adopted son of Thakur Laiq Singh and reference was made to the will by learned Counsel for both parties. On the evidence that has been produced in this case, namely the adoption deed dated April 21, 1924, the will dated March 29, 1928 and the fact that the property was mutated in the name of the defendant there can be no doubt that the defendant was the adopted son of Thakur Laiq Singh, and that being so the only question which we have got to decide is whether the plaintiff is entitled to maintenance and, if so, at what rate.

There is no suggestion that the plaintiff has lost her right to maintenance by reason of unchastity or immorality, but the argument is that the will of Thakur Laiq Singh ought to be given effect to and the condition about the wdow's stay in the residential house was imperative and could not be ignored with impunity. But the wife is entitled to be maintained by her husband and a widow is entitled to be maintained by persons who may have inherited the estate of her husband. It is not open to a husband to dispose of his property in such a manner as to jeopardise the rights of his wife. If a provision is made by a Hindu husband in his will as regards the maintenance to be granted to his widow after his death, this can only be taken as a suggestion made by the husband as to what would be a reasonable provision for her maintenance and cannot deprive the Court of its power to fix a reasonable maintenance. It cannot possibly be argued that even if the husband bequeathed his property ignoring the wife's claim to maintenance absolutely, the bequest will affect the widow's claim to maintenance and will defeat her claim. The plaintiff, as we said before, did not rely on the will; it is only the defendant who relies on the will as a bar to the plaintiff's claim. We have said enough to show that we are not bound by any directions contained in the will on the point beyond the fact that the suggestions contained therein might be taken into consideration when we propose to determine the amount which, in our judgment, appears to be adequate and reasonable.

It was then said that the plaintiff lost her right of maintenance out of the estate of her hasband because she had left the residential house. As a pure proposition of law the contention is not tenable. It is not enjoined in the Hindu Shastras that a widow should remain in the residential house of her late husband under all circumstances and beset by all kinds of difficulties. In Mulji Bhaishankar v. Bai Ujam (1), the learned Judges referred to Vyavastha No. 226 quoted at p. 261 of Vol. I of Shama Charan Sarkar's "Vyavastha Chandrika" where it was stated that a widow was "not entitled to maintenance by residing elsewhere without a just cause if she was directed by her husband to be maintained in the family house".

The Vyavastha, therefore, is that even if there is a direction by the husband that the wife should be maintained in the family house, the direction can be ignorned if there was a just cause for the wjte to leave the house. There is the direction in the will that the widow should remain in the residential house and therefore we have got to see whether there was any just cause for the plaintiff to leave the residential house. This brings us to the consideration of a prior litigation between the parties. On April 8, 1933 the plaintiff brought a suit against tne defendant and others repudiating the adoption of the defendant and claiming the entire estate of Thakur Laiq Singh. The suit was brought in forma pauperis, but the Court was of the opinion that the plaintiff had sufficient means to pay the necessary court-fees and ultimately the suit was dismissed because the plaintiff did not pay the requisite court-fees. We have no doubt—and this is the view of the Court below—that the plaintiff was induced to file the suit at the instance of some interested persons and the result was that feelings between the plaintiff and the defendant became strained. On July 8, 1933 Jamuna Kunwar actually filed an application in Court, when an enquiry was being made regarding her pauperism, that the defendant Arjun Singh was threatening her to give a statement as desired by him and therefore the statement of the petitioner should be recorded by a Commissioner and the defendant Arjun Singh should be asked to allow the applicant to go to her mukhtar-i-am's place so as to enable her to give an independent statement. The plaintiff soon after July 8, 1933 left the residential house and has not come back to live with the defendant ever since then.

The question which we have got to decide is whether the plaintiff under the peculiar circumstances of the case was justified in leaving the residential house. It is pointed out that in her statement in the former suit the plaintiff admitted that she had no trouble at Thakur Arjun Singh's place and that he was providing her with all her necessities and therefore the plaintiff was herself to blame in leaving the residential house. The defendant in his statement in the present case admits that after the institution of the pauper suit relations between the plaintiff and himself were strained, that he has no personal enmity with the plaintiff because he knows that she is a very good woman, but she has been under the influence of persons who want to oust him from the estate and has been under the influence of such persons since about 1932. The plaintiff in the present case said that the defendant threatened to get her murdered, but this statement is undoubtedly an exaggeration and has been denied by the defendant. As admitted by the defendant, the house of the plaintiff, where she now resides is about two or two and a half furlongs away from the former residential house and is in the some village. We feel inclined to accept the statement of the defendant that the plaintiff has fallen into the hands of some persons not well disposed towards the defendant and they induced the plaintiff to file the former suit. The plaintiff cannot be blamed for this, but the fact remains that there was a prior litigation by which the plaintiff wanted to oust the defendant from the entire estate and the relations between the parties have become very much strained. That being so, the plaintiff felt, and rightly felt, that the former house where Arjun Singh reigned supreme was not the proper place for her to live and the plaintiff for a just cause had left the house. In Ekradeshwari Bahuasin v. Homeshwar Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that "a Hindu widow who has left the residence of her deceased husband, not for unchaste purposes, and resides with her father, is entitled to maintenance, also to arrears of maintenance from the date of her leaving her husband's residence, although she does not prove that she has incurrep debts in maintaining herself and gives no reason for the change of residence."

It is true that this case was not complicated by any direction in any will executed by the husband, but what we think to be the correct law on a matter like this is that ordinarily a widow is not bound to remain at the residence of her deceased husband in order to claim maintenance provided she does not leave it for unchaste purposes and when there is a direction in the will that she must reside at the family house the direction can be ignored for just cause, and we have held in the present case that there were sufficient grounds for the widow to leave the residential house.

This brings us to the question as to what would be the proper amount of maintenance, regard being had to the status of her husband, regard being had to the circumstances under which she was living when her husband was alive. It might be borne in mind that for several years during the husband's lifetime the plaintiff was not the favoured wife, and whereas Laiq Singh and his fourth wife were living together in one house the plaintiff was living in another house. She was however provided with all the necessities of life and now she is about 65, and although we do not think that the Archaic injunctions of the ancient Hindu lawgivers regarding the abstemious austerity of a Hindu widow's life can be or ought to be enforced in these days, we cannot lose sight of the fact that the plaintiff is an old woman who has lived all her life in a village, nor can we completely ignore the directions contained in the husband's will. He thought that Rs. 100 a month was an adequate allowance for the widow and this was the allowance which he fixed not only for the plaintiff but for his other wives as well. After having considered the case from every view point we think the plaintiff is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 100 a month.

We have now got to consider if the plaintiff is entitled to any arrears of maintenance. There can be no doubt that the plaintiff, as long as she lived with Thakur Arjun Singh, was maintained by him. This was admitted in her statement in the earlier suit and this is quite clear from the allegations in the plaint where she seems to allege that she is entitled to maintenance at the rate of Rs. 400 per mensem but she could claim only Rs. 300 per month from December 1931 to January 1933 which suggests that up till that time she was getting like Rs. 100 a month from the defendant. It may be that after January 1933, when the former litigation was contemplated, the defendant began to ignore the plaintiff's right to maintenance, but we know that she did not leave the house up till July 7, 1933, and we therefore would not be justified in giving arrears for a period prior to July 8, 1933. The defendant, even after he had heard of the contemplated litigation, might well have tried to placate the plaintiff in every possible manner in order to prevent the suit, but it is quite clear that after the plaintiff left the house the defendant has not been paying any maintenance to the plaintiff. It is so stated by the plaintiff and there is no clear denial on the point by the defendant. We think the plaintiff is entitled to arrears of maintenance from July 15, 1933 at the rate of Rs. 100 a month.

The plaintiff claimed interest at a retrogressive rate of 8 annas per cent. per mensem from the time that the arrears fell due. Interest on such arrears could be claimed only under the Interest Act or under s. 73, Contract Act, or on equitable grounds. The plaintiff did not claim under any written instrument. As a matter of fact, she ignored the direction in the will where Rs. 100 per month was fixed as her allowance and claimed as muchas Rs. 400 a month. Nor have we fixed her maintenance at Rs. 100 a month because of the will. It is clear therefore that if the plaintiff can get interest it must be because interest "it payable by law" which may include equitable grounds. There is no law which has been pointed out to us.. No demand for payment seems to have been made in writing. The only provision to which reference has been made is s. 73, Contract Act, but that can afford no justification for awarding interest merely because money has been detained. No damages have been proved to have accrued to the plaintiff because maintenance was withheld. The equitable jurisdiction of the Court is not attracted in the present case in favour of the plaintiff inasmuch as she or her supposed well-wishers have brought this trouble on herself. It appears that she was living in perfect amity with the defendant before the institution of the former suit and the suit was of her own seeking and was forced on the defendant. We think that the plaintiff is not entitled to any interest on arrears of the maintenance amount. Under s. 34, Civil P. C., we are however, entitled to give interest pendente lite and future, and we think that the plaintiff is entitled to interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit up till the date of realization.

It was contended that the plaintiff was entitled to her entire costs irrespective of the fact that the plaintiff had lost to a great extent at least so far as the amount of maintenance was concerned. It is true that the defendant denied the plaintiff's right to any maintenance whatsoever, but we connot consider the defendant's attitude in this respect as amounting to contumacy sufficient to disentitle him to such costs to which he may be entitled by reason of his success. We think the ordinary rule of proportionate costs ought to apply in the present case also. The plaintiff and the defendant will pay and receive costs in the Court below as well as in this Court according to failure and success. To the extent indicated above we allow this appeal and declare that the sum decreed, which will be at the rate of Rs. 100 a month from July 15, 1933 up to the end of May 1937 with interest pendente lite and future at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of suit up till the date of relizatien, will be a charge on the property specified at the foot of the plaint.

XXXIV, r. 6—Lessees of minerals hypothecating property to secure sums due by way of royalty—Suit for royalty against lessees and sub-lessees by sale of property—Decree passed—Sale not recovering full amount of royalty—Personal decree for balance, if can be passed against both the lessees and sublessees—Costs—Lower Court wrongly passing decree against appellant at invitation of respondent—Appeal by appellant to rectify mistake—Respondent not contesting appeal—His liability for costs of appellant.

Where the lessees of minerals had hypothecated certain property to secure sums due by way of royalty, and the lessor in his suit asks that the amount due for royalty should be recovered by sale of the properties hypothecated and impleads the sub-lessees, a mortgage decree can be passed against the sub-lessees together with the lessees because they are interested in the property sought to be sold. But where the amount recovered by the sale does not prove sufficient, a personal decree under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Civil P. C. cannot be obtained against the sub-lessees merely because they are interested in the property. They were in no way personally liable to the plaintiff and, therefore, a personal decree cannot be passed against them.

Where the fact that the Court passed the decree at the invitation of the plaintiff-respondent and has compelled the appellants to bring proceedings in appeal and to incur costs in order to have the matter rectified, it would be inequitable to make the defendants appellants, who were clearly right, liable to pay the whole of the costs of the appeal, merely on the ground that the plaintiff-respondent did not contest the appeal.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Dhanbad, dated December 18, 1937.

Mr. S. C. Majumdar, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. N. Roy, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J.—This is a defendants' appeal from a decree of the learned Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad dated December 18, 1937.

The plaintiff, Raja Shiva Prasad Singh, Raja of Jharia, brought a suit for royalty in the Court of the learned Subordinate Judge and impleaded in that suit the lessees of minerals and the sub-lessees. It appears that the lessees had hypothecated certain property to secure sums due by way of royalty, and plaintiff in his suit asked that the amount due for royalty should be recovered by sale of the properties hypothecated. The plaintiff succeeded in this suit and obtained a preliminary decree and later a final decree. The properties hypothecated were put to sale in execution of the decree, but the amount recovered by the sale did not prove sufficient to satisfy the whole decree.

The Raja then applied under O. XXXIV, r. 6, Civil P. C. for a personal decree against all the defendants, namely, the lessees and the sub-lessees, and such personal decree was given to him by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The sub-lessees have preferred the present appeal and have contended that in no circumstances whatsoever could be a personal decree be passed against them. The learned Subordinate Judge appears to have thought that as a preliminary decree for sale was made not only against the lessees but also the sub-lessees a personal decree should also be passed against them. The learned Subordinate Judge has, however, overlooked the fact that a mortgage decree was passed against the sub-lessees together with the lessees because they were interested in the property sought to be sold. It is, however, perfectly clear that no personal decree can be obtained against the sub-lessees merely because they are interested in the property. They were in no way personally liable to the plaintiff and, therefore, a personal decree should not have been passed against them.

Counsel representing the plaintiff has made it clear that he does not contest this appeal, but he has asked that no costs should be awarded against his client. It cannot be overlooked, however, that the plaintiff asked for this personal decree against the present appellants, though clearly he was not entitled to do so. The lower Court was clearly mistaken; but the lower Court acted on the invitation of the plaintiff. Had the plaintiff not asked for such a decree, the need for this appeal would never have arisen. The fact that the Court passed the decree at the invitation of the plaintiff-respondent has compelled the present appellants to bring these proceedings and to incur costs in order to have the matter rectified. That being so, it would be inequitable to make the present defendant-appellants, who are clearly right, liable to pay the whole of the costs of this appeal. However, as the plaintiff-respondent has not contested the appeal, this is clearly a case where the full hearing fee should not be granted.

For the reasons which I have given, I am satisfied that no personal decree should have been passed against defendant-appellants, the sub-lessees, and that being so, I would allow this appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below in so far as it affects the defendant-appellants and dismiss the claim against them. The defendant-appellants will have the costs in this Court and in the Court below, but I would assess the hearing-fee in this Court at one hundred and fifty rupees.

Manohar Lall, J.—I agree.

Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920), s. 83 (1)—Power house built on part of hill set apart for religious purposes—Power used for lighting temple and way leading to it and also supplied to shop-keepers at profitable rates—Power house, held not exempt from tax.

The words "places set apart for public worship .....other purpose" in s. 83 (1), Mad. District Municipalities Act read with the opening words of the section mean that there shall be exemption for places set apart for public worship and used for that purpose and for places set apart for public worship, but not actually in use. If a place is used for a purpose other than public worship, the place does not fall within the exemption, even though the intention was that it should be used for public worship. Where a power house is built on a part of a hill which is set apart for religious purposes, is used for the purpose of lighting the way upto the temple on the hill and the temple itself and the electricity is supplied to the shop and hotel-keepers within the hill at a profitable rate, the power house being used for commercial as well as religious purposes is not exempt from taxation. Municipal Council, Srirangam v. Srirangam Devasthanam (1), Overruled.

Mr. K. S. Sankara Aiyar for Mr. T. R. Venkatarama Sastri, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. M Krishnaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Leach, C. J.—The Municipal Council of Palni has assessed to the property tax leviable under s. 81, Mad. District Municipalities Act, 1920 a power house belonging to the Sri Dhandayuthapani Devasthanam. The power house is situate at the foot of the Palni-andavar Hill and within the Municipal limits. The trustees objected on the ground that this building was exempt from taxation by reason of the provisions of s. 83 (1) (a) of the Act. The property having been assessed to this tax and the tax having been paid the trustees instituted a suit in the Court of the District Munsif of Palni for the recovery of the amount. The District Munsif, found against the plaintiff and dismissed the suit but on appeal his decision was reversed and the suit was decreed. The Municipal Council now appeals to this Court.

It is common ground that the whole hill was set apart for religious purposes. On the top of the hill is a famous temple which is approached by means of a long flight of steps. At the top of the hill there are also shops and a hotel which supply the needs of the pilgrims who visit the temple. In 1929 the trustees built the power house and installed electric plant for the purpose of lighting the way upto the temple and the temple itself. Later on, they supplied electricity to the shopkeepers and the hotel-keeper for which the trustees charged profitable rates. The fact that electricity was supplied to the shops and to the hotel led the Municipal Council to assess the power house to the property tax. If the power house is to be exempt from this tax the building must come within the purview of s. 83 (1) (a) because there is no other section in the Act which can relieve the trustees from the obligation of paying the property tax. Section 83 (1) reads as follows:

"The following buildings and lands shall be exempt from the property tax—(a) place set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose, choultries buildings used for educational purposes including hostels, public buildings and places used for the charitable purpose of sheltering the destitute or animals libraries and play grounds which are open to the public and such ancient monuments protected under the Ancient Monuments Preservation Act, 1904 or parts thereof as are not used as residential quarters or as public offices."

It is not necessary to go beyond the words "places set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose." as it is clear that the power house is not a building of the nature of any of those subsequently mentioned. In our opinion the words "places set apart for public worship and either actually so used or used for no other purpose" read with the opening words of the section mean that there shall be exemption for places set apart for public worship and used for that purpose and for places set apart for public worship, but not actually in use. If a place is used for a purpose other than public worship, the place does not fall within the exemption, even though the intention was that it should be used for public worship. It has been suggested that the use of the word 'or' instead of 'and' makes a difference. It does make a difference, but not the difference suggested. If the word were 'and' not 'or' there would only be exemption when a place was set apart for public worship and actually used for that purpose, but as a result of using the word 'or' there is exemption when the place has been set apart for public worship but is not actually in use. The drafting leaves much to be desired, but it is obvious that the intention is to exempt buildings which are intended for religious purposes and are not being used for secular purposes.

What is the position here? The hill has been set apart for public worship and it cannot be disputed that if this power house were merely used for lighting the temple and the approach to it the power house would be exempted from taxation. But, inasmuch as the power house, which stands on a part of the hill, is being used for comercial purposes as well as purposes of public worship the conditions of the exemption are not fulfilled. The Municipal authorities are not suggesting that because a part of the hill, namely, the site of the power house, is being used for other purposes the whole hill and everything erected thereon should be deemed to be taken out of the section. Their case is merely confined to the power house and we considered that it is well-founded.

In the course of arguments two decisions of this Court were referred to, namely Municipal Council, Srirangam v. Srirangam Devasthanam (1) and Municipal Council, Tirupati v. Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu (2). The first case certainly supports the trustees, but we consider that it was wrongly decided. The second case is not really in point. In Municipal Council, Srirangam v. Srirangam Devasthanam (1), the Council wished to assess to property tax certain shops within the Srirangam temple. The learned Judge (K. S. Menon, J.) considered that as the word 'or' and not the word 'and' was used in s. 83 (1) (a), the shops were not taxable. We have said sufficient to indicate that in our opinion this argument cannot be accepted and that the decision of K. S. Menon, J., ought not to be followed. In Municipal Council, Tirupati v. Mahant Prayag Dossjee Varu (2), the question was whether buildings used for stabling Devasthanam horses which were employed in carrying drums in temple processions or allowed for the use of pilgrims to whom honour was shown by the Mahant were exempt from the property tax. It was held that they were exempt. This decision is not open to criticism, because the buildings were used for purposes connected with worship in a public place. If the power house with which this appeal is concerned were merely used for lighting the approach to the temple and the temple itself, there would, as I have already indicated, be no doubt, that the Municipality would not be entitled to levy the tax. But the power house is being used for commercial as well as religious purposes and this brings it within the taxing section. The appeal will be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs here and in the two Courts below.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25—Revisional powers under, extent of.

Under s. 25, Prov. Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court has wider powers of interference than those given by s. 115, Civil P. C., and it will interfere in exercise of that power on grounds similar to those which would justify interference under s. 115, Civil P. C., or, apart from those grounds, when there is reason to think that there has not been a fair trial or that a palpable injustice has been committed or even in the case of a simple error of law if it is a matter of general importance. Section 25 however, cannot, be used in such a way as to give an ordinary right of appeal on points of law. Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (1), relied on, 174 Ind. Cas. 1004 (2) and Poona City Municipality v. Ramji (3), referred to.

C. R. App. from the orders of the Joint Sub-Judge, Nadiad, in Small Cause Suits Nos. 1653 and 1241 of 1938.

Mr. J. C. Shah, for the Applicants.
Messrs. E. B. Ghaswala and A. A. Adarkar, for the Opponents.

Broomfield, J.—These are two revision applications in Small Cause Court suits. The parties are on the one hand certain inhabitants of Nadiad who have an electric motor for the purpose of irrigating their lands and therefore require electrical energy; the other party is a Nadiad Company which supplies electrical energy. In one of the cases there is a question as to the construction of an agreement between the parties. In the other case another agreement between them had to be construed. There was a question whether it was consistent with certain sections of the Electricity Act and there was also a question whether the agreement had been obtained by undue influence, which of course was a pure question of fact. They are therefore quite ordinary Small Cause Court suits. The amount of money involved is very trivial, Rs. 45 in one case and Rs. 38 in the other. Prima facie it appears therefore that these are disputes which the Legislature intended to be settled by the Small Cause Court and not by a Bench of two Judges of the High Court or by the High Court at all.

The principles according to which the High Court will exercise its extraordinary powers of revision were laid down long ago in a Full Bench case, Shiva Nathaji v. Joma Kashinath (1). It is true that the Court was there concerned directly with the provisions of s. 622, old Civil P. C., which correspond to the present s. 115. Nevertheless the principles there laid down in a very learned and exhaustive judgment are also applicable in our opinion to a very considerable extent to the exercise of the power of revision under s. 25, Prov. Small Cause Courts Act. One of the principles laid nown was (p. 372*):

"If the Court finds that the external conditions of jurisdiction of investigation, and of command, have been satisfied by the inferior Court, it will not substitute its own appreciation of evidence, or its own judgment thereon, for the determination of the inferior Court, in any matter committed by the Legislature to the discretion of such Court."

Another principle is:

"The Court will, in all cases, regard its exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction as discretional, and subject to considerations of the importance of the particular case, or of the principle involved in it."

Under s. 25, Prov. Small Cause Courts Act, this Court has no doubt wider powers of interferance than those given by s. 115 of the Code, and although the intention of the Legislature obviously was that these comparatively unimportant cases should be finally decided by the Small Cause Courts, it is no doubt right and proper that the High Court should have these powers of revision in reserve. We do from time to time interfere in exercise of that power on grounds similar to those which would justify interference under s. 115 or, apart from those grounds, when there is reason to think that there has not been a fair trial or that a palpable injustice has been committed or even in the case of a simple error of law if it is a matter of general importance. In the present cases the most that can be argued is that there has been an error of law. But it cannot possibly be argued that there is any matter of general importance. The disputes, which are not in themselves serious disputes, concern the parties to the litigation and no one else. It would be entirely wrong in our opinion and contrary to the intentions of the Legislature to allow s. 25 to be used in such a way as to give an ordinary right of appeal on points of law.

We are informed that these cases were referred to a Bench instead of being disposed of by a Single Judge of this Court because a doubt was felt as to whether certain observations of the learned Chief Justice in Bell & Co. Ltd. v. Waman Hemraj (2) were consistent with the decision of this Court. In Poona City Municipality v. Ramji (3). Mr. Shah who appears for the applicants here says that the learned Chief Justice laid it down that the High Court should only interfere in revision in cases where it appears that there has been no fair trial by the inferior Court. We do not agree, however, that the learned Chief Justice said anything of the kind. He did not attempt to give any exhaustive list of cases in which interference would be justified, and the case where there has been no fair trial was only mentioned as one of the cases in which interference would be proper. With all respect we see nothing to criticise in the observations in this case, and we see no inconsistency between them and what was held in Poona City Municipality v. Ramji (3). In the present cases, we see nothing whatever which invokes the exercise of our extraordinary jurisdiction. We do not propose therefore to go into the merits and we discharge the Rule with costs in both cases.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Second Appeals Nos. 261 and 262 of 1937

HORWILL, J.

SECRETARY OF STATE—APPELLANT
versus
MALRAJU VENKATA NARASIMHARAO BAHADUR AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Madras Survey and Boundaries Act (VIII of 1923), s. 14—Suits under—Government, if necessary or proper party—Costs—Trial Court's discretion—Interference with.

The decisions given under the Survey and Boundaries Act are by Survey Officers who, though appointed by the Govt., in no sense represent them in their actions under the Survey and Boundaries Act. They are Statutory Officers given statutory powers and they act in a quasi-judicial manner; and their decisions are binding on parties in the absence of a suit. The Govt. is not in the least interested in the result of the suits; for the Survey Officer, in making his decisions acts not as an agent of the Govt., but as a statutory officer specially empowered under the Act. Consequently the Govt. is neither a necessary nor a proper party in suits under s. 14, Mad. Survey and Boundaries Act.

The discretion exercised by the trial Court in allowing the defendant his costs on the ground that he was not necessary party cannot be interfered with in the absence of sufficient grounds.

S. As. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Ellore, in A. S. Nos. 233 and 188 of 1936.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, Govt. Pleader, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Kameswara Rao, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These appeals arise out of suits under s. 14, Survey and Boundaries Act. The porition in these two suits is a very curious one. The plaintiff was the same in the two suits and, before they were actually filed, he seems to have come to some arrangement with the two second defendants; for they filed no written statement. The common defendant No. 1 was the Secretary of State; and all the issues were framed because of the written statement of defendant No. 1. The trial Court found that the Secretary of State was not a necessary party; and while decreeing the suits, as defendant No. 2 in each case did not oppose, ordered that defendant No. 1 be given his costs on the ground that he was not a necessary party. The appeals were heard by two Judges. In A. S. No. 233 of 1936, the Judge held that the Secretary of State was not a necessary party; but that his attitude in supporting the case of defendant No. 2 and joining issue with the plaintiff disentitled him to receive costs. He thought moreover that although the Secretary of State was not a necessary party, he was a proper party. In A. S. No. 188 of 1936 (S. A. No. 262 of 1937) the Principal Subordinate Judge found that defendant No. 1 was a necessary party in each case. The appeals of the plaintiff against the orders as to costs were allowed and the Govt. was ordered to pay its own costs in both Courts in both suits.

The decisions given under the Survey and Boundaries Act are by Survey Officers who, though appointed by the Govt., in no sense represent them in their actions under the Survey and Boundaries Act. They are Statutory Officers given statutory powers and they act in a quasi judicial manner; and their decisions are binding on parties in the absence of a suit. The Govt. was not in the least interested in the result of the suits; for the Survey Officer, in making his decisions acted not as an agent of the Govt., but as a statutory officer specially empowered under the Act. The learned Principal Subordinate Judge in A. S. No. 188 of 1936 says:

"If the Govt. is not a party to the proceeding, I do not think any order passed by a Civil Court may be binding (on the Govt.)," and, later, "it is the Govt. that demarcates the survey numbers." This is incorrect. It is not the Govt. that makes the survey; but a Survey Officer specially empowered by the statute. Clearly, the lower Appellate Court was wrong in thinking that the Govt. was a necessary party. For the same reasons, the Govt. is not a proper party. The dispute was between—and only between—the two persons interested in the common boundary. Upon the decision of the Civil Court, the survey authorities would have to make the necessary changes in their registers. It is not denied in this Court that the Govt. was neither a necessary nor a proper party. The orders of the lower Appellate Courts are however supported on the ground that Govt., instead of contenting itself with merely stating that it was not a necessary party, tried to uphold the finding of the Survey Officer. The Govt. says in para. 1 of its written statement in each case:

"The allegations in the plaint are not true and this defendant puts the plaintiff to strict proof of all the allegations that are not expressly admitted herein."

Then, in para. 5:

"The allegation that defendant No. 2 encroached upon the suit lands after the inclusion of the suit lands, in his adjoining land, is also absolutely false. But this defendant submits that defendant No. 2 and his ancestors were in possession of the suit land even prior to the block survey."

Paragraph 1 set out above may be excused on the ground that allegations were made in the plaints that the changes were brought about by the collusion of defendant No. 2 with the village officers. But even if it were true that some collusion had taken place, the Govt. would still not have been either a necessary or a proper party, as no relief was asked against the Govt. by way of damages or otherwise. Paragraph 5 cannot be defended in any way. The Govt. certainly should have adopted a neutral attitude on this point. However, although the Govt. adopted an attitude which was not strictly neutral and adopted pleas which were beyond what were directly necessary for the defence of their own subordinates, yet the primary responsibility for raising all these various issues was upon the Court. In fact, the District Munsif should at the outset have realized that defendant No. 1 was not a necessary party; and if he had done that, no issue would have been framed. If there had been any doubt about it, the question whether defendant No. 1 was a necessary party could have been raised as a preliminary issue. However that may be, even if the learned Munsif had any discretion in disallowing the costs of defendant No. 1 on the ground that he had raised pleas which were not necessary, he did not do so. The lower Appellate Court, for reasons which I have held to be wrong, considered that the first Court should have disallowed defendant No. 1's costs. If the trial Court had a discretion, it exercised it in favour of defendant No. 1; and there are no sufficient grounds for interfering with that discretion. The appeals are therefore allowed with costs and that defendant No. 1 given its costs in all three Courts. Advocate's fee one set in this Court.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 63 and 73—Rateable distribution—Attachment under O. XXI, r. 48—Attachment, when complete—Assets received by Court of lower grade — Application under ss 63 and 73 to Court of higer grade — Application transferred to Court of lower grade where assets were received—Applicant whether entitled to rateable distribution from date of execution application or from date of application under ss. 63 and 73—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s. 25 — Revision, scope.*

The attachment under O. XXI, r. 48, Civil P. C., becomes complete and effective as soon as the notice of the order issued by the Court is served upon the disbursing officer, who accepts it. Where the various executions against an officer are pending in the Court of Additional Small Causes and the applicant decree-holder applies under ss. 63 and 73, Civil P. C., to the Court of Small Causes and the application is sent to the Court of Additional Small Causes where the assets were received, the applicant decree-holder is entitled to rateable distribution from the date of her execution application and not from the date of her application under ss. 63 and 73. It cannot be said that because the Office of the Accountant-General postpones the remission of the salary to a latter date there is no effective attachment. Section 73, Civil P. C. does not require the transfer of decrees to the Court where the process of realisation takes place as a condition precedent to an application under s. 63 of the Code and therefore a fortiori it is not necessary for the decree-holder seeking rateable distribution to apply for execution of his decree to the Court where the realisation takes place. If the process of realisation takes place in the Court of an inferior grade, it is the duty of such Court to send the sale proceeds to the superior Court which, under s. 63, Civil P. C., is the proper Court to distribute the assets. But where this is not done, it cannot deprive the decree-holder in the higher grade Court to his right to rateable distribution. 8 Ind. The revisional powers under s. 25 of the Prov. Small Cause Court should be exercised in exceptional circumstances to correct palpable errors and to prevent miscarriage of justice. [p. 40, col. 2.]

App. of the order of the Additional Judge of Small Cause Court, Lucknow, dated September 7, 1940.

Mr. K. P. Srivasata, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ram Nath, for Opposite Party No. 2.

Order.—This is an application under s. 25 of the Small Cause Courts Act arising out of execution proceedings.

The facts in so far as they are material for the purposes of the present application are as follows:—

It appears that Lala Kishori Lal held a decree against William Ainslie Cannon Howard, Assistant Superintendent, Govt. Central Press, Allahabad, which he had obtained from the Court of the Additional Judge, Small Causes, Lucknow. Lala Kishori Lal applied on August 31, 1939, before the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, for execution of his decree by attachment of the salary of the judgment-debtor

After a somewhat unusual delay due to the fact that the salary of the judgment-debtor had been attached at the instance of various other decree-holders, the salary was sent to the Additional Small Cause Court Judge sometime in May 1940.

Dr. Mrs. Elsie C. Griffin Edward also obtained a decree for Rs. 795-4-5 against the same judgment-debtor from the Court of the Judge Small Causes. On August 31, 1939, she applied for execution of the decree against the judgment-debtor by attachment of his salary under O. XXI, r. 48 of the Civil P. C.

In answer to this attachment the Office of the Accountant-General, United Provinces, wrote on October 9, 1939, as follows:—

"Until the money liable to attachment from the officer's monthly pay in execution of other orders of attachment previously received in this office has been correctly recovered no action can be taken on the Court's orders referred to above. The recovery in respect of the above orders will commence after the orders of attachment issued previously have been fully complied with".

Subsequently on July 22, 1940, Dr. Edward filed an application before the Judge, Small Cause Court, purporting to be under ss. 63 and 73 of the Civil P. C stating that she had got the salary of the judgment-debtor attached in her decree but since the salary had already been attached in the decree of Lala Kishori Lal, the salary attached had not been received by the Court. She, therefore, prayed that either she should be allowed to share in the rateable distribution of the salary realised in the Court of the Additional Small Cause Court Judge or that the entire salary should be sent for from that Court and distributed by the Court in which her own execution application was pending. Counsel for Dr. Edward stated before the Court that if the file was transferred to the Additional Small Cause Court Judge, it would facilitate matters. Thereupon the learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes transferred the file to the Additional Judge and the application for rateable distribution to be disposed of there. This order was passed on August 7, 1940.

The learned Additional Judge has held that Dr. Edward is no doubt entitled to share in the assets under s. 73 of the Civil P. C., but that her right to rateable distribution arose only after July 22, 1940, when she applied for rateable distribution, and that she is not entitled to share in the rateable distribution from the date of her application for execution. Aggrieved by that decision she has filed the present application, to which the judgment-debtor and the contesting decree-holder Lala Kishori Lal are parties.

The only question that arises for determination before me is whether the applicant is entitled to share in the rateable distribution from the date of her application for execution, namely August 31, 1939, or only from July 22, 1940, when she made the application purporting to be under ss. 63 and 73 of the Civil P. C. I am of opinion that this application should succeed.

Upon the facts of the case stated above it must be held that the case is covered by s. 63 read with s. 73 of the Civil P. C. The order of attachment was made under O. XXI, r. 48 of the Civil P. C., which runs as follows:—

"Where the property to be attached is the salary or allowances of a public officer or of a servant of a railway company or local authority, the Court, whether the judgment-debtor or disbursing officer is or is not within the local limits of the Court's jurisdiction, may order that the amount shall subject to the provisions of s. 60, be withheld from such salary or allowances either in one payment or by monthly instalments as the Court may direct; and upon notice of order to such officer as the Govt. may.....appoint in this behalf, the officer or other person whose duty it is to disburse such salary or allowances shall withhold and remit to the Court the amount due under the order, or the monthly instalments, as the case may be."

I do not agree with the contention raised on behalf of the opposite party that there was no attachment in this case. There is no doubt whatever that the order of attachment was actually issued by the Court in pursuance of the provisions of O. XXI, r. 48, and that the Office of the Accountant-General duly received the order of attachment but intimated to the Court that the money could not be sent until the order of attachment issued by other Courts previously had been fully complied with. It cannot be said that because the Office of the Accountant-General postponed the remission of the salary to a later date there was no effective attachment. The attachment in my opinion became complete and effective as soon as the notice of the order issued by the Court was served upon the disbursing officer, who accepted it. Section 63 of the Civil P. C. lays down:—

"(1) Where property not in the custody of any Court is under attachment in execution of decrees of more Court than one, the Court which shall receive or realise such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of highest grade, or, where there is no difference in grade between such Courts, the Court under whose decree the property was first attached."

According to s. 63 the proper course would have been to send the entire amount of attachment to the Small Cause Court Judge as he was undoubtedly higher in grade and possessed higher pecuniary jurisdiction than the Additional Small Cause Court Judge. However, the applicant's Counsel agreed to have the execution application sent to the Additional Small Cause Court Judge as he thought that it would expedite disposal. That fact, however cannot deprive the applicant of the right to share in rateable distribution under s. 73 of the Civil P. C. It may be mentioned that the money is still lying in the Court of the Additional Small Cause Court Judge and has not been withdrawn by the contesting decree-holder.

It has been held by a Bench of the Judicial Commissioner's Court in Mohan Lal v. Humayun Jah, (13 O. C. 291) (1), that the object of s. 73, Civil P. C. is twofold, firstly, to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings and to obviate the necessity of each and every decree-holder separately attaching and separately selling the property, and secondly to secure an equitable administration of the property by putting all the decree-holders upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them.

In Ram Rachhpal Shiam Lal v. Gur Narain Brothers, (1937 O. W. N. 1040) (2), it was held that where attachment of the same property has been made by different Courts at the instance of different decree-holders of the common judgment-debtor, s. 73, Civil P. C., does not require the transfer of decrees to the Court where the process of realisation takes place as a condition precedent to an application under s. 63 of the Code and therefore a fortiori it is not necessary for the decree-holder seeking rateable distribution to apply for execution of his decree the Court where the realisation takes place. If the process of realisation takes place in the Court of an inferior grade, it is the duty of such Court to send the sale proceeds to the superior Court which, under s. 63, Civil P. C. is the proper Court to distribute the assets. The case in (13 Oudh Cases 291) (1), and the case of Surendra Kumar Guha v. Jamini Kumar Guha, (A. I. R. 1936 Cal. 723) (3) were followed in this case.

Reference may also be made to a comparatively recent decision of the Lahore High Court in Simla Banking and Industrial Co., Ltd. v. Indo Swiss Trading Co, Ltd. (A. I. R. 1938 Lahore, 754) (4), in which after a discussion of the various authorities it was held that s. 73 is to be read together with s. 63. Where the property of a judgment-debtor has been attached by two Courts of the same grade but the property has been sold by one of them the proceeds so received shall be deemed to have been received by it on behalf of all the Courts in which there have been attachments in execution of the decrees, prior to the actual receipt of the assets, and the decree-holders in all such Courts are entitled to reteable distribution under s. 73. In such cases no application for execution is necessary to be made to the Court which held the assets, before the receipt of the assets.

In view of these decisions it is not necessary for me to refer to other decisions in support of the same proposition.

Learned Counsel on behalf of the opposite party has contended that this Court should not interfere with the decision of the Court below under s. 73, Civil P. C. in revision, save in very exceptional circumstances and has relied on certain cases in support of that proposition. Generally speaking, it is no doubt true that the revisional powers of this Court under s. 25 of the Small Cause Court should be exercised in exceptional circumstances to correct palpable errors and to prevent miscarriage of justice. I am, however, of opinion that the facts of this case clearly justify interference with the order of the lower Court in the ends of substantial justice.

I, therefore, hold that the applicant is entitled to rateable distribution from the date of her application for execution of the decree, namely August 31, 1939.

I allow the application, set aside the order of the lower Court and direct that the applicant should be allowed to share in the rateable distribution from August 31, 1939. The applicant will get her costs in this Court as well as in the Court below.

GANPATRAO—APPELLANT

NAGORAO AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Res judicata—Party's estate vesting in his mortgagee prior to suit to which mortgagee was not party—Decision is not binding on him—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 13, 33, 90, 35—Rights of party not in issue in previous suit—Judgment, admissibility of, in subsequent suit—Scope of s. 33—Copy not thirty years old—Presumption under s 90, if can apply—Endorsement by Sub-Registrar that executant presented document for registration and admitted execution, if relevant fact under s. 35—Registration—Sub-Registrar making endorsement that executant admitted execution, whether attesting witness—Deed—Execution—Evidence—Registration endorsement, if can be treated as sufficient proof.

The estate which has already vested in a mortgagee cannot be represented in, or adjudicated upon, in a subsequent litigation to which he is not a party; consequently the decision in the suit is not binding on the mortgagee. Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (1), 36 Ind. Cas. 443 (2), and 138 Ind. Cas. 329 (3), relied on. [p. 42, col. 1.]

Where rights of a party in a subsequent suit were not in issue in a previous suit, the judgment in the previous suit is not admissible in subsequent suit.

Section 33, Evi. Act covers not only cases of privity of estate and succession of title, but also cases where both the following conditions exist, viz. (1) the interest of the relevant party to the second proceeding in the subject-matter of the first proceeding is consistent with and not antagonistic to the interest therein of the relevant party to the first proceeding; and (2) the interest of both in the answer to be given to the particular question issue in the first proceeding is identical. What the first proviso aims at securing is that the evidence shall not be admitted unless the person who tested, or had the opportunity of testing, the evidence by cross-examination, either is himself, or represented the interests of, the party to the later proceeding against whom the evidence is tendered, i. e. that he was (in the latter case), in effect, fighting that person's battle as well as this own. 145 Ind. Cas. 216 (5), relied on. [p. 42, col. 2; p. 43, col. 1.]

The presumption contained in s. 90 of the Evi. Act cannot apply to a copy that is not itself 30 years old. 156 Ind. Cas. 864 (6), relied on. [p. 44, col. 1.]

An endorsement by the Sub-Registrar showing that the executant presented the will for registration and acknowledged execution is a relevant fact under s. 35, Evi. Act. [ibid.]

A Sub-Registrar who has signed a document in the presence of the executant after receiving from him an acknowledgment of execution, is an attesting witness. 166 Ind. Cas. 686 (7), referred to. [ibid.]

The Court is not bound to treat the registration endorsement as conclusive proof of the fact of execution but it is certainly open to the Court, to treat it as sufficient proof. 46 Ind. Cas. 279 (8), referred to [ibid.]

S. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated January 29, 1937.

Messrs. P. A. Pandit and R. G. Rau, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. P. Deo, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for possession of a 0-6-2⅔ share in Mauza Rawanwadi in the Tahsil and District of Bhandara. One Pemsha Gond once owned an estate known as the Rawanwadi zamindari consisting of 10 villages, of which Rawanwadi was one. He left three sons, each of whom inherited a 0 5-4 share in the zamindari. The genealogical tree is given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, Ganpatsha and his brothers Anantsha and Daulatsha, who represented half the eldest branch, inherited a 0-2-8 share or 10⅔ pies each. The youngest branch came to an end with the death of Mohansha in 1900, and it is the plaintiffs' case that Mohansha's share of 0-5-4 devolved on Ganpatsha by virtue of a registered will dated November 20, 1894, so that Ganpatsha thus became the owner of a 0-6-2⅔ share in the zamindari. Mohansha's share was mutated in the name of Ganpatsha. At an imperfect partition of Rawanwadi and other villages of the zamindari in 1910 Ganpatsha was held entitled to a 0-6-2⅔ share, and in the settlement that followed in 1916-17 Ganpatsha was again recorded as having a 0-6-2⅔ share in Rawanwadi. On January 21, 1915 Ganpatsha and his sons mortgaged a 0-6-2⅔ share in Rawanwadi and Tekapar, another village in the zamindari, to the plaintiffs, who brought a suit in 1930 to enforce their mortgage and purchased the mortgaged property at the ensuing Court auction in 1932. When, however, they attempted to take possession of the share in Rawanwadi they were resisted by the defendant Pande. Hence the present suit.

The defendant's case is that there was a private partition in 1897 at which the zamindari was divided as follows: Mohansha and Ganpatsha got a 0-16-0 share in Tekapar; Kisansha, Manwarsha and Pitamsha got a 0-16-0 share in Khursipar and Kodamendhi; and in the other seven villages, including Rawanwadi, Anantsha and Daulatsha got an 0-8-0 share and Dinkarsha got the other 0-8-0 share. On January 24, 1912, Anantsha and Daulatsha executed a registered sale-deed of their share in the zamindari in favour of the Jekatdar family who sold it in 1918 to the defendant Pande. In the sale-deed of 1912 Anantsha and Daulatsha purported to sell a 0-2-8 share in all the villages of the zamindari, stating that they really owned a 0-2 8 share and Ganpatsha owned a 0-5-4 share, originally Mohansha's share but that owing to the fraud of Ganpatsha he had got himself recorded as having a 0-6-2⅔ share and they were recorded as having a 0-1-9⅓ share. They went on to add that there had been a private partition at which an 0-8-0 share in seven villages, as mentioned above, had been allotted to them, and that if the co-sharers admitted this partition then the vendees would be entitled to an 0-8-0 in these seven villages instead of a 0-2-8 share in all the villages. In 1922, after the death of Ganpatsha and Anantsha, Panda successfully sued Daulatsha and the representatives of Ganpatsha for an 0-8-0 share in these seven villages including Rawanwadi and obtained possession of Rawanwadi in 1932, vide Ex. B. 29.

The lower Courts have held that there was no partition in 1897 as alleged by the defendant Pande. In the suit brought by Pande against Daulatsha and the representatives of Ganpatsha in 1922 it was held that there was such a partition, but that suit was instituted after Ganpatsha had mortgaged his share in Rawanwadi to the plaintiffs and the lower Courts have held that the plaintiffs are, therefore, not bound by the decision in that suit. That view is, in my opinion, correct on this ground that per Mahmood, J. in Sita Ram v. Amir Begam (1). This view has been followed in Ramchandra Dhondo v. Malkappa (2), where the learned Judges remarked at p. 685* that they did not understand why the plaintiff should be in any worse position because he had afterwards altered his original position of mortgagee to that of auction-purchaser, as the question would still be whether at the time of the previous suit the mortgagor possessed sufficient estate to represent and bind his mortgagee. See also Govindan Asari v. Nagayan Chettiar (3).

"The estate which has already vested in a mortgagee cannot be represented in, or adjudicated upon, in a subsequent litigation to which he is not a party; for the simple reason that a decree of Court in such cases can neither create new rights, nor take away existing ones, but can only enforce the rights as they stand between the parties, and in enforcing such rights cannot go beyond the rights of the parties to the litigation"

The matter, therefore, is not res judicata, but the appellant has contended that the judgments in that former suit are admissible to prove that there was a partition in 1897, and I have been referred to the decision in Maroti v. Jagan Nath Das (4). That decision does not help the appellant. It was held there that though the judgment in a previous case is inadmissible to prove the truth of the fact which it states, yet where the right of a party has already been concluded by a previous judgment that fact can be proved by production of the judgment since the existence of the judgment itself is relevant. In the present case, however, the plaintiffs are not bound by the decision in the former suit and the question whether the rights of Ganpatsha's representatives were concluded by that decision is immaterial. I, therefore, agree with the lower Courts that the judgments in the previous suit are inadmissible in evidence. Section 13 of the Evi. Act cannot apply because the rights of the plaintiffs were not then in issue.

The lower Courts' finding that there was no such partition as alleged in 1897 is clearly a finding of fact, but the appellant seeks to challenge that finding on the ground that certain evidence has been wrongly excluded. One such piece of evidence is the statement made by Sadasheo Rao as a witness in the previous case, Ex. D-9. Though there is no evidence to show that Sadasheo Rao is dead, it was so assumed in the lower Appellate Court without protest from the plaintiffs. Assuming he is dead his statement would be admissible under s. 33 of the Evi. Act if the previous suit was "a proceeding between the same parties or their representatives-in-interest," i.e. if the representatives of Ganpatsha can be said to have been the representatives of Ganpatsha's mortgagees. The representatives of Ganpatsha denied the partition of 1897, as the plaintiffs now deny it. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held in Krishnayya Rao v. Venkata Kumara Mahipathi Surya Rao (5), that this section

"covers not only cases of privity of estate and succession of title, but also cases where both the following conditions exist, viz (1) the interest of the relevant party to the second proceeding in the subject-matter of the first proceeding is consistent with and not antagonistic to the interest therein of the relevant party to the first proceeding; and (2) the interest of both in the answer to be given to the particular question issue in the first proceeding is identical."

They went on to say,

"What the first proviso aims at securing is that the evidence shall not be admitted unless the person who tested, or had the opportunity of testing, the evidence by cross-examination, either is himself, or represented the interests of, the party to the later proceeding against whom the evidence is tendered i. e. that he was (in the latter case), in effect, fighting that person's battle as well as his own."

On that principle the evidence given by Sadasheo Rao in the previous case would appear to be admissible in the present case.

Even however taking this evidence into consideration I agree with the lower Courts that no partition was made in 1897. Undoubtedly there was an attempt to make a partition, and a partition, on the lines alleged was proposed, as is clear from the statement of Ganpatsha in 1917-18 in Ex. D. 26, but it seems to me equally clear that such a partition was not effected. After the death of Mohansha in 1900 his 0-5-4 share in the zamindari was mutated in the name of Ganpatsha without any objection, and Ganpatsha was thereafter recorded as a 0-6-2⅔ co-sharer. In the proceedings to conciliate the debts of Anantsha and Daulatsha in 1904-05 they were shown as possessing a 0-2-8 share in each of the ten villages of the zamindari and their debts were made a charge on these shares: vide Ex. D-32. Here and there some of the partition proposals were carried out, though not for some years afterwards. In 1904-05 Manwarsha, Pitamsha and Kisansha applied to be recorded as possessing respectively 0-4-0, 0-4-0, and 0-8-0 shares in Khursipar and Kodamendhi, of which they said they had been given possession in accordance with the partition, and this was allowed in spite of the objection of Dinkarsha: vide Ex. D-12-16. In 1907 Ganpatsha asked that the 0-8-0 share recorded in the names of Kisansha, Dinkarsha, Manwarsha and Pitamsha in Tekepar should be recorded in his name, as they had exchanged their shares in this village for shares in other villages: vide Ex. D-19-24. It is however worthy of note that Anantsha and Daulatsha continued to be recorded as having a 0 1-9⅓ share in Tekepar and were so recorded at settlement in 1916-17 and that Daulatsha sold a 0-1-8⅔ share in this village in 1925: vide Ex. P 34.

The imperfect partition proceedings of 1909 10 were initiated by one Deo to whom Dinkarsha had sold a 0-4-0 share in Rawanwadi and an 0-8-0 share in Purkabodi and Mahaka. The appellant contends that in the absence of a partition Dinkarsha could not have had more than a 0-2-8 share in each of the villages. Anantsha and Daulatsha took the objection that Dinkarsha had no proprietary share at all in these villages, but the Revenue Court held that he had an 0-8-0 share in each of them before his sale to Deo, and it would seem that he obtained such a share through the various adjustments that went on from 1904 onwards. Ganpatsha from the start claimed that he had a 0-6-2⅔ share in each of these villages, but it was only towards the close of the partition proceedings that Anantsha and Daulatsha objected to this and alleged that they had a 0-2-8 share in all the villages, of the zamindari and Ganpatsha had only a 0-5-4 share which was of course quite inconsistent with the alleged partition. The revenue officer made no inquiry into the rights of the parties, as required by s. 136-G of the C. P. Land Revenue Act of 1881 then in force, but on finding that Ganpatsha was recorded in the revenue records as holding a 0-6-2⅔ share in each of these villages and Anantsha and Daulatsha as having a 0-1-9⅓ share made the partition accordingly. Anantsha and Daulatsha raised the same objection at the settlement of 1916-17 but were told they should have raised the point in the partition proceedings and were referred to the Civil Courts.

Objection has also been taken to the exclusion of Ex. D-42 a certified copy of an unregistered kabuliyat executed by Mohansha and Ganpatsha in 1897, acknowledging that they had received the entire village of Tekepar in lieu of their share in the other villages. An unregistered kabuliyat would not of course create title and the lower Appellate Court's finding that the loss of the original has not been proved must be accepted in second appeal.

After considering the evidence given by Sadasheo Rao in the previous suit with all the facts proved in the present suit I have come to the conclusion that the proposed partition was not carried out, though some of the proposals were adoped later. Evidence of the imperfect partition proceedings was apparently not given in the previous suit.

A certified copy of the will said to have been made by Mohansha in favour of Ganpatsha has been produced. Evidence was given to prove the loss of the original and that evidence was accepted by the lower Appellate Court. Secondary evidence is therefore admissible. The presumption contained in s. 90 of the Evi. Act cannot apply to a copy that is not itself 30 years old; Basant Singh v. Brij Raj Saran Singh (6). There is however an endorsement by the Sub-Registrar showing that Mohansha presented the will for registration and acknowledged execution. Under s. 57 (5) of the Regis. Act the copy is admissible to prove the contents of the original, and the above endorsement by the Sub-Registrar is a relevant fact under s. 35 of the Evi. Act. Though there is some difference of opinion on the point, the balance of authority is in favour of the view that a Sub-Registrar who has signed a document in the presence of the executant after receiving from him an acknowledgment of execution is an attesting witness: see Sarkar on Evidence, 6th Edition at pp. 593 and 594, and the cases there cited. This is the view that I followed in Kanchhedilal v. Jabbarsha (7). In Jagannath v. Dhiraja (8), Lindsay, J. C, held that the Court is not bound to treat the registration endorsement as conclusive proof of the fact of execution. With that I agree, but it is certainly open to the Court, in my opinion, to treat it as sufficient proof; see Shamsunnissa Bibi v. Ali Asghar (9) and Sri Ram v. Muhammad Abdul Rahim Khan (10). In the present case there was no specific denial that such a will was executed and there was no allegation that it was afterwards cancelled. Though there was no specific reference to the will in the mutation proceedings that followed Mohansha's death, the will was presumably the reason why Ganpatsha's claim to Mohansha's share was not challenged. Ganpatsha's right to at least a 0-5-4 share was not challenged in the imperfect partition proceedings in 1909-10, and the entry of Ganpatsha in the settlement khewat of 1916-17 as having a 0-6-2⅔ share in Rawanwadi must be presumed to be correct till the contrary is proved. That the defendant has certainly not proved.

I therefore hold that Ganpatsha was entitled to a 0-6-2⅔ share in Rawanwadi when he mortgaged his share to the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs are now entitled to this share. The question of limitation has been argued but it was not pleaded and does not form one of the grounds of appeal. I think it is clear that the plaintiff's claim is not barred by limitation.

The appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs. Counsel's fee Rs. 150.

Res judicata—Issue made subject of final order—That order cannot be ignored by succeeding Court.

Section 11, Civil P. C. is not exhaustive of the applicability of the principle of res judicata. When an issue has been made the subject of a final order by a Court, that order cannot be ignored by a succeeding Judge nor has the Court jurisdiction to alter its decision except on grounds which would justify a review: 60 Ind. Order.—In this case a former District Munsif heard arguments on the question whether the petition under Mad. Act IV of 1938 would lie under s. 19, having regard to the provisions of s. 10 (2) (ii) and he passed a considered order that there was no vendor's lien in respect of the liability and no obstacle under that section to the application. He then adjourned the matter for further enquiry. He was transferred and his successor instead of proceeding with the matter where his predecessors left it, re-opened the issue which had been decided and gave a contrary finding and dismissed the application on that finding. I am of opinion, that he had no jurisdiction to do that. Granting that the matter is not precisely covered by s. 11, Civil P. C, that section is not exhaustive of the applicability of the principle of res judicata: Hook

v. Administrator-General of Bengal (1). When an issue has been made the subject of a final order by a Court, that order cannot be ignored by a succeeding Judge nor has the Court jurisdiction to alter its decision except on grounds which would justify a review : vide Basanta Kumar v. Kusum Kumari (2). If the correctness of this order is to be attacked otherwise, it can only be done by way of appeal against the final order on the application, which remedy is still open. The petition is allowed with costs and the application is remitted to the trial Court for disposal on the merits.

Mr. M. L. Lalvani, for the Applicant.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudamal, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is a revision application against the order of the District Judge of Hyderabad in Civil Appeal No. 63 of 1937 of this Court directing a decree in terms of the compromise application filed by the Advocates of the parties, and the ground upon which we are asked to set aside this order is that the Advocates of the parties had no authority to compromise on behalf of their clients. In Sirdarkhatun v. Muradali (1), following earlier decisions of this Court it was held that a Pleader duly appointed to act for a party has authority to do all acts incidental to that general authority. He may make application referring the matter in dispute the arbitration or make admissions so as to bind his client. A presumption of such powers having been delegated to him is essential to the due conduct of the litigation. No such presumption however is necessary in the case of a power to compromise the suit. A power to compromise contained in a vakalatnama is not warranted by Form IV prescribed in the Sind Courts Civil Circulars and is inadequate to validate a compromise made by the Pleaders and proof of specific authority for the specific compromise is necessary. It should be stated here that in the present case the Pleaders were Advocates and that they had filed powers in Form IV which empowered them to appear and act. It is not suggested that they had any general or any special powers from their clients to compromise. In Ghanshamdas Lokumal Shivdasani v. Nanikram Khubchand Advani (2), it was held that "when parties do not themselves notify a compromise to the Court or give their written consent thereto and Pleaders act as agents of the parties to compromise, their authority must be clear and unequivocal. When such an authority is not contained in a vakalatnama giving power to compromise either generally or specially, or in any other writing but there is a mere statement by the Pleaders themselves at the foot of the compromise that they have special powers to compromise, this is not enough."

This was a case of Pleaders, not Advocates and the learned Judges in the course of their judgment state :

"We should make it clear that we are not concerned here with the power of Advocates either in this Court or in the mofussil, for less are we concerned with the power of barristers."

We have been referred to the case in Sourendranath Mitra v. Tarubala Dasi (3), where it was held that "an Advocate in India who derives his general authority from being briefed in a suit on behalf of his client has implied authority to settle and compromise in all matters connected solely with the action in which he has received a brief."

But their Lordships state at p. 1319* :

"Their Lordships desire to confine their decision on this point to the case of Advocates, whatever their qualifications, admitted as such by the respective appropriate Courts in India, who derive their general authority from being briefed in a suit on behalf of a client. Where the legal representative in Court of a client derives his authority from an express written authority such as a vakalatnama, different considerations may well arise, and in such cases their Lordships express no opinion as to the existtence of any implied authority of the kind under discussion."

The Lahore High Court in Ramzan v. Gopal Das (4), relying upon this Privy Council decision has extended the power of Advocates to compromise to Advocates who appear only to plead without power-of-attorney. The question decided in Sirdarkhatun v. Muradali (1), was left expressly undecided by Privy Council in Sourendranath Mitra v. Tarubala Dasi (3). The present case is on all fours with the Sind case which was decided by Bench of this Court and which we think we are bound to follow. We must therefore hold that the Advocates had no power to compromise in the present case. We must allow the application, set aside the decree of the District Judge and remand the appeal to him for disposal on its merits. We think the parties should bear their own costs in this Court. Order accordingly.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 67 (2), Rule under, promulgated by Coorg Local Government —Rule, if restrains execution of Coorg decree for money by sale of land when it is transferred for execution in British India.

The rule embodying the restriction upon sales of land in execution of decrees of Civil Courts, applies only to sales of land within the jurisdiction of the Local Govt of Coorg. It cannot be read as restraining the execution of a Coorg decree for money by the sale of lands even when the decree has been transferred for execution in British India.

A. against the appellate order of the District Court, North Malabar, dated October 29, 1936.

Messrs. O. T. G. Nambiar and C. K. Kerala Verma, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal raises the question of the effect of a special rule promulgated by the Local Govt. of Coorg to govern the execution of decree in that province, upon the execution of such decrees, when transferred to a Court in British India. The appellant is the judgment-debtor. The Subordinate Judge of Coorg passed a money decree against him and that decree was transferred for execution to the Court of the District Munsif of Cannanore. Under s. 67 (2), Civil P. C., the Chief Commissioner of Coorg has promulgated a rule to the effect that "lands, houses and other buildings and all immovable property shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution of decrees of Civil Courts in Coorg with the exception of such immovable property as shall have been mortgaged or otherwise specifically pledged as security for the debt which is the subject-matter of the decree sought to be executed."

The argument of the appellant is that this rule must be read as restraining the execution of a Coorg decree for money by the sale of lands even when the decree has been transferred for execution in British India. As the rule stands, the words 'in Coorg' might be read either as qualifying 'decrees of Civil Courts' or as qualifying the words 'shall not be liable to attachment or sale in execution'. The former interpretation is possibly the more natural reading of the English words. But I am of opinion that it cannot be the proper interpretation of the clause. The reason for the rule is doubtless the curious tenures in Coorg whereunder the person in separate enjoyment of land commonly has no power of alienation without the consent of distant relatives, who are all notionally regarded as having an interest in land given for enjoyment to each member of a large family. Sub-s. (1) of s. 67, Civil P. C., expressly restricts the power of making special local rules regarding the sale of any class of interests in land in execution of decrees for money, to those cases in which the interests are so uncertain or undetermined as, in the opinion of the Local Govt., to make it impossible to fix their value. Sub-s. (2) does not contain any such restriction but it empowers the Local Govt. to re-enact any special rule already in force before the Code came into operation in the province. It is reasonable to suppose that the object of sub-s. (2) is to deal with cases substantially similar to those dealt with in sub-s. (1).

Having regard to the language of s. 67 (2), one must, I think, read this rule as a rule merely governing the execution of decrees within the province of Coorg, for the power to re-enact such special rules seems to contemplate only the enactment of rules restricting execution of money decrees within the local area. One may even doubt whether any local rule purporting to restrict or control the execution of decreesin another province would have any validity, having regard to the provisions of s. 40 which prescribes that where the decree is sent for execution in another province, it shall be sent to such Court and executed in such manner as may be prescribed by rules in force in that province. Clearly the Code contemplates the exercise of the rule making power with reference to execution in any province by the Govt. of that province. One must therefore read this special rule in the light of the general provisions of the Civil P. C. and in so far as it is ambiguous, it must be interpreted having regard to the powers which the Local Govt. of Coorg could legally exercise under the Civil P. C. In my opinion, the Local Govt. of Coorg had not the power, nor is it likely to have intended to frame rules to restrict the execution of its decrees when transferred to a Court in the Madras Presidency.

I am therefore of opinion that the rule embodying the restriction upon sales of land in execution of decrees of Civil Courts, applies only to sales of land within the jurisdiction of the Local Govt. of Coorg. It follows therefore that the Courts below are right in holding that the decree-holder can execute his decree in the Madras Presidency by the sale of land situated there, in spite of the restrictions under the special rule upon its execution within the province of Coorg. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Revision against appellate order of District Magistrate—No revision filed before Court of Session—Chief Court, if can entertain—Wrong advice of Counsel—Effect of.

It is the uniform practice prevailing in the Chief Court to refuse to entertain an application in revision against an appellate order of the District Magistrate where the applicants have not gone in revision to the Court of Session, which has concurrent jurisdiction. The advice given by the Counsel that the application for revision would lie in the Chief Court is not "a special circumstance" which would entitle the applicants to file the application in the Chief Court. 171 Ind. Cas. 167 (1) and 147 Ind Cas. 797 (1) (8), relied on, 145 Ind. Cas. 726 (2), 102 Ind. Cas. 352 (3) and 101 Ind. Cas. 603 (4), referred to.

Cr. R. App. of the order of the District Magistrate, Hardoi, dated August 9, 1940.

Mr. Akhlaque Husain, for the Applicants.

Messrs. Raj Kumar Singh and Har Narain Das, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision against an appellate order of the learned District Magistrate of Hardoi, dated August 9, 1940, upholding the conviction of the applicants.

The applicants were convicted by a Bench of Honorary Magistrates, Second Class, Hardoi, under s. 379, I. P. C. and sentenced to a fine of Rs. 20 each.

They appealed against their conviction to the learned District Magistrate of Hardoi, who dismissed it on August 9, 1940, but reduced the sentence to a fine of Rs. 10 each.

The application for revision in this Court was filed on October 14, 1940.

A preliminary objection has been taken by the learned Counsel for the opposite side that this Court is precluded from entertaining the present application by reason of the uniform practice prevailing in this Court refusing to entertain an application in revision where the applicants have not gone in revision to the Court of Session, which has concurrent jurisdiction. In support of his contention the learned Counsel has relied on a decision of mine reported in Raja Ram v. King-Emperor, (1937 O. W. N. 1044) (1), and also on the decisions of the Allahabad High Court reported in Emperor v. Muhammad Hashim, (I. L.. R. 55 Allahabad 261) (2), Nathe Singh v. Emperor, (A. I. R. 1927 Allahabad 829) (3), and Sukhraj Singh v. Emperor, (A. I. R. 1927 Allahabad, 834) (4). These decisions undoubtedly support the objection raised by the learned Counsel for the opposite party.

On the other hand the learned Counsel on behalf of the applicants has relied on the following decisions:

(1) Emperor v. Mansur Husain, (I. L. R. 41 Allahabad 587) (5).

(2) Emperor v. Balkrishna Sharma, (I. L. R. 54 Allahabad 331) (6) and

(3) Abdul Matlab v. Nanda Lal Khatel, (I. L. R. 50 Calcutta 423) (7).

Justice Kendall in the cases reported in A. I. R. 1927 Allahabad 829 (3) and 834 (4), refused to entertain an application because the applicant had not gone in revision to the Sessions Judge even though there had been an appeal to the District Magistrate.

It is not necessary for me to discuss the cases of other High Courts in a case like this when the uniform practice of this Court is not to entertain an application in revision where the applicant has not gone in revision to the Sessions Judge.

In the case of Ajudhia Singh v. King-Emperor, (10 O. W. N. 733) (8), Justice Raza held that "the Oudh Chief Court is precluded from entertaining an application for revision by reason of the practice of the Court refusing to entertain an application in revision where the applicant has not gone in revision either to the Sessions Judge or to the District Magistrate."

In the case reported in (1937 O. W. N. 1044) (1), I observed that "no special grounds were shown to me for entertaining the application for revision."

In the present case the applicant Debi Singh has to-day filed an affidavit in which it is stated that after the dismissal of the appeal by the District Magistrate he was informed by his Counsel that the application for revision of the District Magistrate's order would lie in the Chief Court and that there was no limitation for filing such an application. I do not for a moment think that the Counsel would have told Debi Singh that "there was no limitation for filing such an application," but in any case I am of opinion that the advice given by the Counsel to Debi Singh that the application for revision would lie in the Chief Court is not "a special circumstance" which would entitle the applicants to file the application in this Court.

The objects of laying down the rule that an application in revision to the lower Court is an essential step in the procedure, are to prevent the time of the High Court from being wasted by frivolous applications and to obtain an expression of opinion by a Court of superior jurisdiction such as that of the Sessions Judge in case the matter should eventually come before the High Court.

I am, therefore, of opinion that I am precluded from entertaining the present application and I dismiss it.

Bengal Public Demands Recovery Act (III of 1913), ss. 3 (1), 7—In execution of its mortgage decree plaintiff purchasing property—Plaintiff's name mutated in Collectorate records—Certificate proceedings for recovery of cess in respect of aforesaid property—Notices under s. 7 served—Report to certificate officer that property had already been sold to plaintiff—Notices on recorded proprietors (including plaintiff) served—Plaintiff's name included in sale proclamation—Held, that the plaintiff's name was added within meaning of s. 3 (1) that consequently certificate sale was binding on plaintiff.

Certain property had been purchased by the plaintiff Bank in execution of its mortgage decree and obtained possession. Thereafter the plaintiff applied for mutation in the Collectorate records and the mutation was ordered. In the meantime a certificate had been filed against the former proprietors of this property in respect of arrears of cess. After notices under s. 7, Public Demands

Recovery Act, had been served on the persons against whom the certificate was filed a report was made to the certificate officer to the effect that the property had already been sold to the plaintiff Bank. The case again came before the certificate officer who stated that the names of two more recorded proprietors had been supplied to him and he directed that notices should issue against them. Subsequently, the usual sale proclamation was issued under r. 46 of the rules in Sch. II, to the Act, and admittedly this proclamation contained the plaintiff's name:

Held, that in a case of this sort, to nullify the effect of a certificate sale, a very heavy onus would lie on the plaintiff to show that there had been a non-compliance with the requisite formalities required under the Public Demands Recovery Act, and that the plaintiff's name had not been added within the meaning of s. 3 (1) of the Act. Having regard to the circumstances it was clear in this case that the plaintiff Bank had not discharged this onus. As the plaintiff's name actually appeared in the sale proclamation there was also a presumption to the effect that this sale proclamation was drawn up after notice to the plaintiff as required under r. 46 (2) contained in Sch. II, to the Act.

A. from the appellate decree of the Sub-Judge, 3rd Court, Chittagong dated February 22, 1935.

Messrs. A. N. Bose, Kohinibenod Rakshit, and Durgesh Prasad Das, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Gunada Charan Sen and Amalendu Sen, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The defendants are the appellants in this case and in the suit out of which this appeal arises the plaintiff, the Mahaluxmi Bank Ltd., sued for a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff's right had not been affected by a certificate sale which was held on January 8, 1934 by which the defendants purchased certain property. It appears that this property had been purchased by the plaintiff Bank on August 8, 1931 in execution of a mortgage decree and that the Bank obtained possession in the execution proceedings on November 3, 1931. Thereafter the plaintiff applied for mutation in the Collectorate records and the mutation order was made on September 23, 1932. In the meantime a certificate had been filed against the former proprietors of this property in respect of arrears of cess and at the ensuing certificate sale which was held on January 8, 1934 this property was purchased by Annada Charan Datta, the father of the principal appellant. The plaintiff Bank took the usual steps under the Public Demands Recovery Act to have the sale set aside but as these steps were unsuccessful the Bank instituted the suit out of which this appeal arises. The first Court held that the certificate sale which took place on January 8, 1934 was binding on the plaintiff Bank but this decision was reversed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the certificate sale was void. In arriving at this conclusion the learned Subordinate Judge found that there was nothing on the record to show that the plaintiff's name had been inserted in the certificate record at any place except in the sale proclamation. The learned Advocate for the respondent asks me to treat this finding as a findings of fact by which the appeal should be concluded. I am however not prepared to accept this contention, because in arriving at this finding the lower Appellate Court has not taken into consideration certain important circumstances which will presently appear. Admittedly, in a case of this nature the plaintiff Bank would be bound by the sale which took place on January 8, 1934, if the Bank was a "certificate debtor." The expression has been defined is s. 3 (1), Public Demands Recovery Act, in the following terms:

> "Certificate debtor" means the person named as debtor in a certificate filed under this Act, and includes any person whose name is substituted or added as debtor by the certificate officer."

It is not contended that the plaintiff Bank was substituted but it is argued with considerable force that the Bank was added as a debtor by the certificate officer. The circumstances upon which the learned Advocate for the appellants relies in support of this argument, have not received proper consideration in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. In the first place it is significant that on September 23, 1932, an order was passed for the mutation of the plaintiff's name in the Collectorate records. After notices under s. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act, had been served on the persons against whom the certificate was filed on September 16, 1932, it would appear that a report was made to the certificate officer on April 10, 1933, to the effect that the property had already been sold to the plaintiff Bank. Thereafter, on May 3, 1933, a note Ex. T. was recorded by the certificate officer asking the land registration officer for details with regard to the mahal and the names of the other recorded proprietors and there was a direction to the effect that the matter should be put upon May 20, 1933. On the latter date the case again came before the certificate officer who stated that the names of two more recorded proprietors had been supplied to him and he directed that notices should issue against them. It also appears that on October 26, 1933 the usual sale proclamation was issued under r. 46 of the rules in Sch. II to the Act, and admittedly this proclamation contained the plaintiff's name.

In a case of this sort, to nullify the effect of a certificate sale, a very heavy onus would lie on the plaintiff to show that there had been a non-compliance with the requisite formalities required under the Public Demands Recovery Act and that the plaintiffs name had not been added within the meaning of s. 3 (1) of the Act. Having regard to the circumstances set forth above it seems to be clear in this case that the plaintiff Bank has not discharged this onus. On the contrary, in my judgment, the above-mentioned circumstances clearly show that the plaintiff's name was added within the meaning of s. 3 (1) of the Act at any rate as far back as May 20, 1933. It is clear that the peon's report dated April 10, 1933, which drew attention to the fact that the property had been sold to the plaintiff, resulted in enquiries being made in respect to this matter in pursuance of the certificate officer's order, dated May 3, 1933. We know that the plaintiff's name had been mutated in the Collectorate records on September 23, 1932 and it is therefore almost impossible to avoid the conclusion that one of the two recorded proprietors to whom reference was made in the certificate officer's order dated May 20, 1933, must have been the plaintiff. There is a presumption to the effect that the usual notices under s. 7, Public Demands Recovery Act, were duly issued in pursuance of the order made by the certificate officer on May 20, 1933, and as the plaintiff's name actually appears in the sale proclamation dated October 26, 1933, there is also a presumption to the effect that this sale proclamation was drawn up after notice to the plaintiff as required under r. 46 (2) contained in Sch. II to the Act. These presumptions were of course rebuttable, but it is clear that they were not rebutted. In the result, I am of opinion that in view of the considerations and circumstances set forth above, the plaintiff's suit must fail. It follows that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside, and this appeal is allowed with costs throughout. The decision of the first Court is restored and affirmed. Leave to appeal under cl. 155, Letters Patent, is refused.

In r. 2 (g) of the U. P. Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, "Magistrate" means a stipendiary Magistrate. This presumably means that wherever the word "Magistrate" occurs in the rules it must be understood to mean a stipendiary Magistrate. The rules do not deal with the trial of offences under the Act. The mere fact that the offence of which the accused was convicted is made an offence by r. 79 (viii) of the Motor Vehicles Rules is no reason for holding that the Magistrate trying the case must be a Magistrate such as is defined in those rules. The accused can therefore be convicted by Honorary Special Magistrate for offences under s. 112 of the Motor Vehicles Act read with r. 79 (viii) of the Motor Vehicles Rules.

Cr. Ref. made by the District Magistrate, Gonda.

The Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—These are two references by the District Magistrate of Gonda recommending that the conviction of one Sobha Ram in two cases under s. 112 of the Motor Vehicles Act read with r. 79 (viii) of the Motor Vehicle Rules, 1940, be set aside and a re-trial by a stipendiary Magistrate ordered.

Sobha Ram was convicted by an Honorary Special Magistrate and an application in revision was filed before the District Magisteate on the ground that only a stipendiary Magistrate is empowered to try cases under the Motor Vehicles Act. This contention was based on the definition of the word "Magistrate" in the rules framed by the Local Govt. under the Motor Vehicles Act. The District Magistrate accepted the contention, considering that the Honorary Magistrate had no jurisdiction in view of this definition.

I am not satisfied that the Honorary Special Magistrate had no jurisdiction. Rule 2 (g) of the U. P. Motor Vehicles Rules, 1940, merely provides that in these rules, unless there is anything repugnant in the subject or context, "Magistrate" means a stipendiary Magistrate. This presumably means that wherever the word "Magistrate" occurs in the rules it must be understood to mean a stipendiary Magistrate. The rules do not deal with the trial of offences under the Act. Section 132 of the Act provides that no Court inferior to that of a Presidency Magistrate or a Magistrate of the second class shall try any offence punishable under the Act or any rule made thereunder. The mere fact that the offence of which Sobha Ram was convicted in each case was made an offence by r. 79 (viii) of the Motor Vehicles Rules is no reason for holding that the Magistrate trying the case must be a Magistrate such as is defined in those rules. In my opinion the definition can only mean that the word "Magistrate" means a stipendiary Magistrate where this word is used in the rules. I am not therefore prepared to accept these references. I reject them and direct the records to be returned.

Partnership Act (IX of 1932), ss. 2 (b), 4, 69—Solitary transaction of money-lending by some persons jointly—Persons, if become partners in firm—Their registration under s. 69, if essential—Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 126, 134, 2 (d)—Relative of judgment-debtor offering cheque to decree-holder in satisfaction of his claim—Relative, if surety, if can take advantage of s. 134—Consideration for the transaction—Liability of relative—Second appeal—New plea—Plea of undue influence cannot be raised for first time.

Section 2, cl. (b) read with s. 4 Partnership Act is intended to mean a continued participation of two or more persons in a trade, occupation or profession with the intention of sharing profit accruing from it. An adventure or an undertaking mentioned in s. 8 presumes the existence of a partnership as defined in s. 4 and therefore a fortiori the existence of a business mentioned in s. 2, cl. (b). A solitary transaction in which persons have jointly lent money even though entered into by more than one person would not make those persons partners in a firm so that their registration should be necessary under s. 69, Partnership Act.

Where a decree-holder has attached his judgment-debtor's property and a relative of the judgment-debtor offers a cheque to the decree-holder in satisfaction of his claim, the relative is not a surety for the judgment-debtor and if he stops payment of the cheque, the decree-holder has an independent cause of action against the relative and the relative cannot take advantage of s. 134 Contract Act.

And where the relative pays certain amount in satisfaction of the decree-holder's claim against the judgment-debtor, the consideration for the payment consists in the decree-holder not insisting on attachment of the judgment-debtor's property. If therefore the relative withholds the payment, he is liable to the decree-holder.

Where undue influence is not pleaded in the lower Courts it cannot be raised for the first time in second appeal because evidence would have been necessary to prove or disprove the exercise of undue influence if it had been taken up in the trial Court.

A from an order of the Addtional Judge, Peshawar, dated March 4, 1939.

Sheikh Mohd. Shafi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Krishan Chandra, for the Respondents.

Mir Ahmad, J.—On March 27, 1936 Anant Ram and Tara Chand the respondents before us brought a suit on a pronote against Abdur Rashid. They asked for a decree for Rs. 3,000. The principal amount was Rs. 3,500, interest Rs. 56-8-0, and miscellaneous expenses Rs. 43-8-0. An attachment before judgment was ordered on Mach 30, 1936. The bailiff went on April 10, 1936 to carry out the order by attaching the property of Abdur Rashid at Risalpur. At Risalpur one Karamdin, who is said to be a relation of Abdur Rashid, gave the plaintiffs a cheque for Rs. 4,000. The plaintiffs accepted the cheque in full satisfaction of their claim. Karamdin also gave them a covering letter. In this letter he referred to the cheque and stipulated that if the cheque was not honoured he and his property would be responsible for the payment of its value. The bailiff therefore desisted from making the attachment and returned. The cheque was payable at Lahore. It was presented but not cashed because payment was stopped by the drawer.

The plaintiffs then asked the Court in which their suit was pending that Karamdin should be impleaded. Later, however, on June 24, 1936 they presented an application to the Judge intimating that there was a new contract between them and Karamdin, that there was no use impleading him in the old suit against Abdur Rashid, and that they wished to withdraw their suit against Abdur Rashid. It was permitted to be done and the suit was dismissed. The plaintiffs filed a suit against Karamdin on May 4, 1937 for Rs. 4,000 principal and Rs. 255 interest. Several objections were raised by Karamdin but they did not prove of any avail. A decree was granted by the Sub-Judge for Rs. 4,255 with costs against the defendant. An appeal against that order was presented to the District Court at Peshawar without success. Karamdin has come up on further appeal to the Court: His Counsel has raised the objection that the plaintiffs could not bring the suit because they were a firm and had not got themselves registered as such with the Registrar of firms as required by the Partnership Act. It was admitted by him that the two plaintiffs were not doing any other business together and that they were also not related to each other. Parnership is defined in s. 4, Partnership Act as follows :

"Partnership" is the relation between persons who have agreed to share the profits of a business carried on by all or any of them acting for all. Persons who have entered into partnership which one another are called individually "partners" and collectively a "firm", and the name under which their business is carried on is called the firm name."

Section 2, cl. (b) of the Act relates to the term 'business' and says "business includes every trade, occupation and profession". Section 8 lays down "a person may become a partner with another person in particular adventures or undertakings." The question is whether the fact that these two persons jointly lent money to Abur Rashid is "business" as contemplated by s. 4 and s. 2, cl. (b) or an adventure or undertaking as laid down in s. 8. It does not require any long discussion to show that the answer should be in the negative. Section 2, cl. (b) read with s. 4 is intended to mean a continued participation of two or more persons in a trade, occupation or profession with the intention of sharing profit accruing from it. An adventure or an undertaking mentioned in s. 8 presumes the existence of a partnership as defined in s. 4 and therefore a fortiori the existence of a business mentioned in s. 2, cl. (b). A solitary transaction of this nature even though entered into by more than one person would not in our judgment make those persons partners in a firm so that their registration should be necessary under s. 69, Partnership Act. We therefore overrule this objection. Counsel next argued that the position of Karamdin was that of a surety under s. 126, Contract Act, and that the plaintiffs having withdrawn their suit against the principal debtor the surety was discharged by the operation of s. 134 of that Act. Section 126 defines a surety as follows :

"A contract of guarantee is a contract to perform the promise or discharge the liability of a third person in case of his default. The person who gave the guarantee is called the "surety"; the person in respect of whose default the guarantee is given is called the "principal debtor", and the person to whom the guarantee is given is called the "creditor". A guarantee may be either oral or written."

Section 134, Contract Act, lays down that "the surety is discharged by any contract between the creditor and the principal debtor, by which the principal is released, or by any act or omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor."

Now it is obvious that to be a surety a person should promise to pay if the principal debtor commits a default. In this case no such promise was made by Karamdin. Karamdin offered a cheque which is a legal tender and to all intents and purposes he paid of the decree-holder. It is by his subsequent act of stopping the cheque that he forced the plaintiffs to come into Court. We hold that Karamdin was not a surety. Rather we think that he made a new contract—to wit that his banker shall pay the plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 4,000. It follows that the plaintiffs had an independent cause of action to bring a suit against him alone and he cannot take advantage of s. 134, Contract Act. Counsel then adverted to the question of consideration. He said that there was no consideration for Karamdin to pay the amount and he is therefore not liable for it. We are very clear that the consideration consisted in the plaintiffs' not insisting on the attachment of the property of Abdur Rashid. If Karamdin had not offered the cheque the property would have been attached. Counsel made a feeble attempt to show that the cheque was handed over to the plaintiffs under undue influence. He did not plead undue influence in the lower Courts and we are not prepared to allow him to raise this point at this stage, because evidence would have been necessary to prove or disprove the exercise of undue influence if it had been taken up as a line of defence in the trial Court. Counsel also denied the original liability of Abdur Rashid and wanted to argue that Abdur Rashid did not owe any money to the plaintiffs. We cannot agree with him on this point also. His client gave a cheque for Rs. 4,000 to the plaintiffs and this conduct of his estops him from now saying that the amount was not due from Abdur Rashid. The points raised by Counsel have been disposed of They have all gone against him. We find ourselves in perfect agreement with the concurrent findings of the two Courts below that Karamdin is liabe for the amount for which he passed a cheque to the plaintiffs on April 10, 1936 which was not honoured. The plaintiffs have also been rightly awarded interest on this amount. We dismiss the appeal with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 150.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Civil Revision Application No. 152 of 1939
January 15, 1941
BENNETT, J.
KHAIRATI KHAN—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT
versus
MUNNEY KHAN—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 152—Decree of trial Court merging into decree of Appellate Court—Jurisdiction of trial Court to amend decree under s. 152 as to its order of costs.

In matters of amendment of the decree under s. 152, Civil P. C., the trial Court has ordinarily no jurisdiction left in cases where the decree of that Court has merged in the decree of the Appellate Court. The principle that notwithstanding the fact that the decree of the trial Court has merged in the decree of the Appellate Court, the former Court has power under s. 152 to make an amendment if the amendment is merely of a clerical or arithmetical mistake cannot be extended where amendment sought relates to costs and there is a dispute between the parties as regards the interpretation to be placed on the order of the trial Court in regard to proportionate costs, which cannot be said, to be a clerical or arithmetical mistake apparent on the face of the record. 123 Ind. Cas. 355 (1), and Asma Bibi v. Ahmad Hussain (2), Shivlal Kalidas v. Jumklal Nathiji Desai (3) and 151 Ind. Cas. 568 (4), referred to.

C. R. App. of the order of the Munsif of North Lucknow, dated September 16, 1939.

Mr. G. D. Khare, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ramapat Ram, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision under s. 115 of the Civil P. C., against the order passed by the learned Munsif, North Lucknow, on September 16, 1939, ordering the amendment of a decree on an application which was apparently made under s. 152 of the Civil P. C.

The suit brought in the Munsif's Court for arrears of rent and for ejectment. The prayer for ejectment was subsequently given up and the suit was decreed for arrears of rent and the prayer for ejectment rejected on October 17, 1938.

An appeal was filed by the defendant and this appeal was dismissed on May 18, 1939.

On August 9, 1939, the plaintiff applied for amendment of the decree so far as it related to costs. He represented that a larger sum should have been allowed to him.

The order passed by the Munsif was :

"The application is allowed. Decree should be amended as proportionate costs were ordered only as the plaintiff gave up relief for ejectment. Only the costs on relief for ejectment should not have been taxed."

It has been stated in this Court by the learned Counsel for the opposite party that there were actually two grounds on which amendment was sought, the first being the fact that subsequent to the appeal the plaintiff had been obliged to pay an expert in the case a larger fee then was allowed for in the decree, and the second that the order of the lower Court in regard to proportionate costs had been misunderstood in the preparation of the decree.

It is contended in the present application in revision that the Munsif had no jurisdiction to amend the decree as it had merged in the decree of the Appellate Court. It is also contended that the decree was prepared in accordance with the order of the trial Court.

In support of the contention that once an appeal has been heard and decided the decree of the trial Court merges in the appellate decree, I have been referred to three cases, namely, Munuswami Mudali v. Jagannadha Reddi (A. I. R. 1929 Mad. 830); (1), Asma Bibi v. Ahmad Husain (I. L. R. 30 All. 290) (2) and Shivlal Kalidas v. Jumklal Nathiji Desai (I. L. R. 18 Bom. 542) (3).

The head-note in the first case is to the effect that after the lower Court's decree has been confirmed by the Appellate Court the jurisdiction of the lower Court to amend its decree ceases.

In the Allahabad case it was similarly held that the dismissal of an appeal is a decree and supersedes the decree of the Court below. Consequently the Appellate Court is the only Court which has jurisdidiction to amend the decree. In the Bombay case an application for amendment was made to the Appellate Court, that is the Bombay High Court, and it was contended for the defendant that the application should have been made to the lower Appellate Court. The Bombay High Court held that the only decree which existed for the purposes of execution after the High Court confirmed the decree of the Court below was the decree of the High Court into which that of the lower Court became incorporated. The application was, therefore, properly made to the High Court.

For the opposite party I have been referred to a case of the Allahabad High Court, Chinta Mani v. Debi Prasad (A. I. R. 1934 All. 971) (4), in which it was held that notwithstanding the fact that the decree of the trial Court has merged in the decree of the Appellate Court, the former Court has power under s. 152 of the Civil P. C., to make an amendment if the amendment is merely of a clerical or arithmetical mistake.

It might, therefore, have been permissible on the authority of this latter ruling for the decree to have been amended by the trial Court, if the correction was merely of a clerical or arithmetical mistake. It appears to me, however, impossible to hold that the correction in the present case was of this nature. So far as the expert's fee was concerned the decree was prepared correctly so far as the facts in regard to the amount were known at the time of its preparation. There is a dispute between the parties as regards the interpretation to be placed on the order of the trial Court in regard to proportionate costs, and it cannot be said, therefore, that there was a clerical or arithmetical mistake apparent on the face of the record. The question should have been raised in the appeal I do not consider that there should be any extension of the principle laid down in Chinta Man v. Debi Prasad (4), that amendment of a decree may be made by the lower Court under s. 152 where the correction is merely of a clerical or arithmetical mistake. The trial Court has ordinarily no jurisdiction left in cases where the decree of that Court has merged in the decree of the Appellate Court. I find, therefore, that whatever may be the merits of the order passed, the Munsif had no jurisdiction to pass the order.

I accordingly allow this application with costs and set aside the lower Court's order.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Appeal No. 25 and Insolvency No. 230 of 1940

JETHMAL NARANDAS AND ANOTHER—DEBTORS—APPELLANTS

MAHADEO ANANDJI DHORIA AND ANOTHER—CREDITORS—RESPONDENTS

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 13—Court must consider whether petitioning-creditor has good debt—Mere existence of decree, if sufficient—Court, whether estopped from disputing decree.

In insolvency the question which arises is not merely one between the petitioning-creditor and the judgment-debtor. The rights of other creditors of the judgment-debtor have to be considered. If an order of adjudication is made, the rights of those creditors to recover payment independently of their own debts are taken away. Therefore, the Court must consider whether the petitioning creditor in fact has a good debt, and it is not bound by any decree as between the creditor and the debtor. The debtor may be estopped from disputing the decree, but the Insolvency Court is not estopped; the Court must be satisfied about the validity of the debt in the interests of the other creditors. Ex parte Lennox; In re Lennox (1), In re Fraser Ex parte, Central Bank of London (2), In re Hawkins; Ex parte, Troup (3) and A Debtor, In re (4), relied on.

Mr. M. C. Setalvad, Advocate-General, for the Appellants.

Sir Jamshedji Kanga, for the Respondents.

Beaumont, C. J.— This is an appeal from an order made by Somjee, J., in insolvency adjudicating the appellant an insolvent, and, in my opinion, it is perfectly clear that the order ought not to have been made. The facts are these. The appellant and his wife in the year 1935 obtained an advance of Rs. 14,000 from the respondents on the security of ornaments belonging to the wife, and a promissory note was also given for the debt. It is said that in the year 1935 one of the pledged ornaments was sold for about Rs. 3,000. In 1936 there was a further promissory note for the amount then due, which was Rs. 11,840. Then it is said that sometime after that another ornament was sold for Rs. 995. In 1939 the respondents as pledgees gave notice to the pledgor that they intended to sell the pledged goods, and an arrangement was come to on January 5, 1939, by which the pledgees were to take over the remaining ornaments, and the pledgor gave a promissory note for the balance. On that promissory note a summary suit was filed, and on February 12, 1940, there was a consent decree for the amount claimed and costs, time being given to the debtor to redeem the ornaments. But the ornaments were not redeemed. Accordingly, an insolvency notice was served on the appellant on July 2, 1940. An application was made by the appellant to set aside that notice, but that application was dismissed, and I think rightly so, because there had been no stay of the consent order, and the debtor did not bring himself within the proviso to s. 9 (i), Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. The result therefore was that there was an act of insolvency, and on August 13, the creditors presented a petition asking that the judgment-debtor be adjudicated insolvent. On that petition the debtor filed an affidavit, and in para. 4 he stated this:

"Until recently both myself and my wife honestly believed in the statement of the plaintiffs regarding the sale proceeds of the said diamond kada and the diamond bracelet."

Those are the two ornaments sold to which I have referred. Then the affidavit goes on:

"Relying on their statement made on oath in the affidavit and their assurance, I accepted their figures. Very recently, however, I came to know that the plaintiffs has caused the said jewellery to be sold through the said Mohanlal to a member of a Ruling Indian family for Rs. 9,000 but that they have failed to account to me or to my wife for the correct amount of the sale proceeds.

So that the case of the appellant is that certain of the ornaments were sold for a much higher figure than the pledgees admitted, and that if the pledgees had accounted for the true figure, there would have been no debt due; that is to say, he challenged the consent decree in effect on the ground that it was obtained by fraudulent suppression of material facts. That affidavit was not answered, but the learned Judge made the order of adjudication. Now, under s. 13, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, sub-s. (2), at the hearing of a petition the Court shall require proof of (a) the debt of the petitioning creditor, and (b) the act of insolvency. Sub-section (5) provides that the Court may make an order of adjudication if it is satisfied with the proof above referred to. So that the Court must be satisfied as to the validity of the debt of the petitioning-creditor.

One has to remember that in insolvency the question which arises is not merely one between the petitioning-creditor and the judgment-debtor. The rights of other creditors of the judgment-debtor have to be considered. If an order of adjudication is made, the rights of those creditors to recover payment independently of their own debts are taken away. Therefore, the Court must consider whether the petitioning creditor in fact has a good debt, and it is not bound by any decree as between the creditor and the debtor. The debtor may be estopped from disputing the decree, but the Insolvency Court is not estopped. That principle has been established in many cases. The leading case is Ex parte Lennox; In re Lennox (1). That was a very strong case. The debtor had been sued for a sum of £ 1,500 due on two promissory notes, and he had obtained unconditional leave to defend and had put in a defence alleging that there never was any consideration for the notes. Subsequently he withdrew his defence and consented to judgment. On that judgment a bankruptcy notice was served, which was not complied with, and a petition was presented to have the debtor adjudicated bankrupt. The Court of appeal held that the debtor was entitled on the hearing of that petition to challenge the debt on the very grounds which he had set up and abandoned in the suit, the principle being that, however much the debtor might be estopped by his conduct as against the petitioning-creditor, the Court must be satisfied about the validity of the debt in the interests of the other creditors. That case has been followed in In re Fraser; Ex parte Central Bank of London (2), In re Hawkins; Ex parte Troup (3) and in A Debtor In re (4). The basis of the decision is most clearly stated by Lord Esher, M. R, in In re Fraser; Ex parte, Central Bank of London (2) where he says (p. 636*):

"The decision in Ex parte Lennox; In re Lennox (1) is based upon the highest ground—viz., that in making a receiving order, the Court is not dealing simply between the petitioning creditor and the debtor, but it is interfering with the rights of his other creditors, who, if the order is made will not be able to sue the debtor for their debts, and that the Court ought not to exercise this extraordinary power unless it is satisfied that there is a good debt due to the petitioning-creditor.

In this case it seems to me that, on the materials before the learned Judge, is was wrong for him to hold that he was satisfied as to the validity of the debt. In the affidavit of the debtor the point it made that pledged ornaments had been sold at a much higher price than that admitted to a Ruling Prince through a named agent, and it was for the learned Judge to be satisfied, before making the order, that that allegation was not true. If the Insolvency Judge thinks that prima facie the debtor's defence to the debt is not bona fide, he can, under s. 13 (6), put the debtor on terms requiring him to give security, and on those terms stand the petition over. But, in my opinion, having regard to the fact that the petitioning-creditors put in no answer at all in answer to the debtor's allegation, it is impossible to say that a prima facie case is made out. The judgment by itself does not make out such a prima facie case, and I think that the learned Judge should have required evidence as to this alleged sale of ornaments for Rs. 9,000. If the respondents had produced their books and an affidavit by the agent disclosing the name of the purchaser, it may be that that would have been sufficient prima facie evidence, but at the moment there is nothing of that sort.

We must, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the order of adjudication, and remit the petition to the Insolvency Judge with a direction to him to satisfy himself as to the validity of the petitioning creditors' debt. Respondents to pay to the appellant his costs of the appeal, but to be at liberty to set off those costs against any costs which they may incur in obtaining an order of adjudication against the appellant.

Kania, J.—The relevant facts and dates are stated in the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice. Two points arise for consideration. In an application for adjudication under s. 13, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act the petitioning creditor has to prove (1) that there is a debt of the petitioning creditor and (2) an act of insolvency. By reason of the petitioning creditors obtaining a decree and serving a notice as provided by s. 2 of Bom. Act XV of 1939, which notice was made absolute, it may be held that an act of insolvency was proved. When the Court however has to make an order under s. 13, the first requirement, namely, that the debt of the petitioning creditor was proved, still remains to be satisfied. A petitioning creditor may rely on the decree which he has obtained, but it is not conclusive. As held in Ex parte Lennox; In re Lennox (1) the Insolvency Court has to be satisfied in spite of prima facie evidence contained in the decree that the debt of the petitioning creditor exists. In this case we have not the benefit of the judgment of the lower Court and therefore we do not know whether the learned Judge made the order holding that by reason of the decree the debt was proved. We are told the relevant passage from William's "Law of Bankruptcy" was cited to the Judge. It appears more probable therefore that he held that while it was the duty of the Court to inquire and determine whether a debt of the petitioning creditors existed, on the affidavits, in his view, the same was proved.

The question therefore is whether on the materials before the Court it could come to the conclusion that the debt was proved. In that connection it has to be remembered that para. 4 of the affidavit of the debtor distinctly stated the ground on which he challenged the consent decree obtained between the parties. No affidavit in reply was filed, and throughout the record it does not appear that the names of the parties and the exact price realised from the parties are mentioned at any place. It was argued that the learned Judge considered that the allegations in the affidavit of the debtor were vague as the source of information was not disclosed. If so, the source of information may be required to be stated. I do not think under the circumstances of the case it would be proper to say that because the source of information was not disclosed the affidavits should be discarded and it should be held that the debt was proved. Holding therefore that it was the duty of the trial Court to inquire whether the debt of the petitioning creditors was proved, I am not satisfied that the affidavits as made were sufficient to come to the conclusion at which the learned trial Judge reached. It was pointed out here in the course of arguments that the ornaments in question were sold by Mohanlal. It is disputed that Mohanlal was the agent of the petitioning creditors. It was argued that the petitioning creditors gave credit for the full amount which they had received and therefore there was no fraud. We are not determining any of those questions which the learned trial Judge ought to have inquired into. The judgment pronounced here is not a decision for or against any of those arguments which are advanced on behalf of the petitioning creditors. The only thing which is held here is that it was the duty of the trial Court to determine whether the debt of the petitioning creditors was proved, and on affidavits alone the question should not have been decided in this case. I agree therefore that the appeal should be allowed, and the matter should be remanded to the trial Court for inquiring whether the petitioning creditors had proved their debt within the meaning of s. 13, Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Civil Reference No. 2 of 1940

April 22, 1940

DERBYSHIRE, C. J. AND B. K. MUKHERJEA, J.

THE DEPENDENTS OF RAHIM BUX

JAMES FINLAY & Co., LTD.

Workmen's Compensation Act (VIII of 1923), s. 8 (8)—Mother, widow and minor son of deceased Muhammadan awarded compensation—Minor's share put in Post office by the direction of the Commissioner—Mother and minor dying—Commissioner, if can order minor's share to be transferred to widow and open account in widow's name—Widow remarrying, effect of—Jurisdiction of Civil Court in the matter of distribution of minor's share.

The mother, widow and a minor son of deceased Muhammadan were awarded compensation as dependents. The minor's share of the compensation was deposited in the post office by the Commissioner. After the death of the mother and the minor the Commissioner ordered the minor's share to be allotted to the widow and directed the postal authorities to cancel the minor's account and open a fresh account in the name of the widow.

Held, that the order was perfectly valid, as the alteration of the widow's circumstances by the death of the other dependents amounted to a variation of circumstances within the meaning of s. 8 (8) Workmen's Compensation Act. The fact that the widow had remarried was immaterial.

Held, also under s. 8 (8) of the Act the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation was the proper authority to make a re-distribution of the money which had been allotted to the share of the deceased minor. Consequently, the Civil Court of the Munsif had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter at all. Hence as far as the Commissioner of Workmen's Compensation was concerned, the decree of the Civil Court (though a consent decree) in such a suit was of no effect.

C. Ref. by the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Bengal.

Mr. Phanindra Kumar Sanyal, for the Gulbahar.

Derbyshire, C. J.—This case has been referred to us by the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Bengal, for our opinion. The facts are that on November 30, 1934, the employers, Messrs. James Finlay & Co., Ltd., deposited with the Commissioner a sum of Rs. 1,387-8-0 as compensation payable to the dependants of the deceased workman, Rahim Bux. On March 23, 1935 the Commissioner made a distribution under s. 8 (5) of the Act and apportioned the money as follows: to the widowed mother, Rasulan, Rs. 300, to the widow of the deceased, Gulbahar, Rs, 300 to the minor son of the deceased, Muhammad Sahaban, then 2¼ years old, the balance of Rs. 787-8-0. The sums awarded to the widowed mother and to the widow were paid to them in full in May 1935. The sums awarded to the minor son, Sahaban, was invested by the Commissioner in the Post Office Savings Bank under s. 8 (7). In 1936, the Commissioner ascertained that the widowed mother and the minor son, Sahaban, were dead. The only surviving dependant was the widow, Gulbahar. Shortly afterwards the Commissioner received petitions from Syed Mia and Serajul Huq, who were Sahaban's deceased father's brothers, who claimed as heirs of the deceased minor Sahaban 5/6 of the money lying with the Commissioner in the name of Sahaban. On November 12, 1936, the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation considered these claims and also the rights of the widow. His order was as follows:

"Perused the report of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate, Sandwip. Defendants Nos. 1 and 3, that is, the minor son and the mother of the deceased are reported to be dead. The widow only exists. She is reported to have remarried, but I do not consider her remarriage as any reason at all for depriving her of the residuum of the money. The balance left here in the name of Sahaban is accordingly awarded to to her (Gulbahar). The Post Office Savings Bank account for Sahaban may be closed and a new account opened in the name of Gulbahar."

Accordingly Rs. 815-14-11 was withdrawn from the account of the deceased minor son and was invested under s. 8 (7) in the Post Office Savings Bank in a fresh account in the name of the widow Gulbahar. In May 1938, Rs. 40 out of this was paid to Gulbahar at her request in order to enable her to pay expenses in connection with the purchase of land. In the meantime after the Commissioner's order of variation of the award mentioned by which he rejected the claim of the minor son Sahaban's uncles, Syed Mia and Serajul Huq, the said Syed Mia and Serajul Huq instituted a suit in forma pauperis (i. e., Suit No. 164 of 1937) against Gulbahar in the Court of the Munsif at Sandwip in the District of Noakhali, the parties being residents of that locality. On January 11 1938, that Court passed a compromise.

decree by which the Court ordered that the plaintiffs Syed Mia and Serajul Huq were entitled to two-thirds of the amount of Rs. 787-8-0 and that Gulbahar, that is, the deceased's widow, was entitled to the remaining one-third. The Govt. would be entitled to recover Rs. 59-10-0 for court-fees in the pauper suit from the shares of the plaintiffs and the defendant. These proceedings in the Court of the Munsif at Sandwip took place entirely behind the back of the Commissioner who knew nothing about them till he received a letter on June 29, 1938, from the Collector of Noakhali who stated that he intended to realise the Govt. dues of Rs. 59-10-0 on account of court-fees in the pauper suit. In the meantime Gulbahar alleged that the compromise decree was obtained by fraud. Then there was correspondence about the matter with the result that six questions of law have been put to us by the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation, Bengal under s. 27 of the Act for our decision by way of opinion.

The first of these questions is :

"Is the order of the Commissioner dated November 12, 1936, under s. 8 (8) of the Act by which he varied the original order of distribution in favour of the sole surviving dependent Gulbahar (deceased workman's widow) good in law, on its merits ?"

In my opinion it was. The deceased's mother was dead. The deceased's minor son had died. The result was that the circumstances of the widow when varied. Whether she had married again or not does not matter; she may be a widow again. What does matter is that when her son died she could no longer look forward to his support in the future if she should need it. In my opinion, her circumstances had varied. The minor son also was dead. The question arose what shall be done with his share of the compensation ? Such an alteration of the circumstances is, in my view, a variation of the circumstances within the meaning of s. 8 (8) of the Act, and the Commissioner was entitled to make an order varying the former order of the allocation of compensation in order to meet the new circumstances that had arisen. It seems to me that the order that he made was fair and equitable. It gave the compensation which Sahaban was entitled, to his mother, who was the remaining dependent of the deceased workman. In my opinion it was a perfectly good and valid order.

The next question the Commissioner asks is: "Was that order appealable ?" There was no appeal from it and, as far as I can see, no question of law was involved. It was a question entirely within the Commissioner's discretion and no appeal could under the circumstances have been brought. The result is that the order was good in law. The next question the Commissioner asks is :

"If that order is good in law, was a civil suit by the uncles of the deceased dependant (minor son) Sahaban in the Court of the Munsif of Sandwip in Noakhali barred by s. 19 (2), Workmen's Compensation Act ?

Section 19 (2) provides :

"No Civil Court shall have jurisdiction to settle, decide or deal with any question which is by or under this Act required to be settled, decided or dealt with by a Commissioner or to enforce any liability incurred under this Act."

This suit which was brought in the Court of the Munsif at Sandwip was brought to obtain distribution of the money which had formerly been allotted under the Act to Sahaban. Under s. 8 (8) of the Act the Commissioner for Workmen's Compensation was the proper authority to make a re-distribution. Consequently, the Civil Court of the Munsif in Noakhali had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter at all.

The next question is :

"If the suit was so barred, is the decree dated January 11, 1938 passed by the Court of the Munsif, a nullity ?"

The answer is that it is invalid. As far as the Commissioner of Workmen's Compensation is concerned, it is of no effect. The fifth question is "if that decree is a nullity, can the plaintiffs (uncles of Sahaban) or the Collector of Noakhali execute the decree"? The answer is plainly 'no.'

The last question is :

"Should payments be made to the sole surviving dependent Gulbahar at the discretion of the Commissioner in accordance with the Workmen's Compensation Act ? "

There can only be one answer to that which is 'yes'. We direct that the costs of Gulbahar be paid by the Commissioner out of the fund to which she is entitled and we assess the costs in this case at two gold mohurs.

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. 33—Debtor whether must be agriculturist at date of loan and suit.

For the purpose of s. 33, U. P. Agri. Relief Act, an agriculturist debtor must be an agriculturist at the date of the loan as well as at the date when the suit is brought. 168 Ind. Cas. 655 (1) and 183 Ind. Cas. 517 (2), referred to.

S. C. A. against the order of the 1st Civil Judge, Kheri, dated June 3, 1937.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Messrs. R. B. Lal and M. M. Lal, for Respondent No. 2.

Judgment.—This is a second civil appeal from the judgment and decree passed by the learned First Civil Judge of Kheri, on June 3, 1937, setting aside in first appeal the order passed by the learned Additional Munsif of Kheri decreeing the suit brought by a debtor for accounts under s. 33, of the Agri. Relief Act.

The suit was brought by Khan Sahib Syed Kazim Husain against two brothers, Seth Pearey Lal and Seth Ram Swarup for a settlement of account in respect of a loan transaction evidenced by a mortgage-deed dated June 21, 1928, executed by him in their favour. The defendants contested the suit, alleging that the plaintiff was not an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act.

Seth Pearey Lal died during the pendency of the appeal and his widow Mst. Mangala Devi has been brought on the record in his place. Orders relating to the substitution of Seth Pearey Lal's representatives were passed by Mr. Justice Hamilton in March and October, 1939. There has been some argument by Counsel on the construction to be placed upon these orders, but they were construed by the office to mean that Mst. Mangala Devi should be substituted for her deceased husband Seth Pearey Lal, and I can see no reason to think that this was not Mr. Justice Hamilton's intention. From his order of October 3, 1939, this is, I consider, quite clear.

The only questions that fall to be determined in this second appeal are firstly whether for the purpose of s. 33 an agriculturist debtor must be an agriculturist at the date of the loan as well as at the date when the suit is brought; and secondly whether the appellant was assessed to an amount of income-tax for the years 1927-28 and 1928-29, which debarred him from taking advantage of the Agri. Relief Act as an agriculturist.

The Munsif found that the appellant was an agriculturist both when the loan was advanced and also when the suit was brought, though he held that it was not necessary that he should have been an agriculturist when the loan was advanced.

The Civil Judge on the other hand held that it was necessary that the appellant should have been an agriculturist at the time when the loan was advanced, and that he was not an agriculturist at that time because in the years stated he was assessed to an amount of income-tax which exceeded the local rate payable on the land held by him. The Civil Judge accordingly set aside the Munsif's order decreeing the appellant's suit and dismissed it with costs.

The Civil Judge thought that it would be very anomalous if a debtor who was taking advantage of the provisions of s. 33 was not an agriculturist at the date when the money was lent. He pointed out that under the provisions of Chap. V of the Act a creditor has to maintain regular accounts in respect of loan transactions and that under s. 34 penalties are imposed upon the creditor who fails to maintain such accounts. If it was not necessary for a debtor to be an agriculturist at the time of the transaction the creditor would be in a difficult position. He might advance money to a person who was not at the time of the loan an agriculturist and in that case he would not be required to maintain regular accounts under s. 32. But the debtor might subsequently at any time become an agriculturist and then the maintenance of regular accounts would at once become necessary.

I agree with the Court below that difficulties might ensue on any other view being taken, but I think, quite apart from this aspect of the matter that it is implied in the Act that the debtor must be an agriculturist at both dates. It is true that there is an express provision to this effect only in Chaps. II and III of the Act. In s. 8 (Chap. II) it is provided that no person shall be deemed to be an agriculturist for the purposes of this chapter unless he was an agriculturist both at the time of the advance of the loan as well as at the date of the suit. In s. 24 (Chap. III) it is provided that no application under ss. 11 and 12 shall be filed unless the applicant is an agriculturist at both these dates. It has been argued that the absence of any such provision in Chaps. IV and V suggests that the Legislature did not intend that the same principle should be applied to cases falling under these chapters. Chapter IV relates to rates of interest and Chap. V to maintenance of accounts. It has been held by the Allahabad High Court in Bireshwar Das Bapuli v. Uma Kant Panday, (I. L. R. (1937) All. 514) (1), and by this Court in Phool Chand v. Shyam Behari Misra, (1939 O. W. N. 752) (2), that for the purpose of s. 30 the loan must have been taken by a person who was an agriculturist at the time of the loan. This in my opinion is also clear from the reference to the word "loan" in that section and in ss. 28 and 29 which also fall in Chap. IV. According to the definition in s. 2 "loan" means an advance to an agriculturist. The word "loan" is not specifically used in s. 33, but the section provides that an agriculturist debtor may sue for an account of money lent or advanced to, or paid for, him by any person, and this implies a loan transaction. There is no reason, therefore, why the same principle should not be applied in the case of s. 33 as in the case of s. 30.

The other question for consideration is whether the appellant should be held debarred from the benefits of the Agri. Relief Act by reason of the fact that he was assessed to an amount of income-tax at the time of the loan which would preclude his being deemed to be an agriculturist, when actually there is some reason to think that he was not assessed to income-tax in his personal capacity, but only in the capacity of manager of the estate of his sister-in-law and minor son. It is not disputed that the appellant was assessed to such income-tax and paid the income-tax assessed in the years 1927-28 and 1928-29, and that if such assessment and payment were made in his personal capacity he would be debarred by the definition of "agriculturist". It is contended, however, that he paid this income-tax not in respect of his personal liability, but in respect of the liability of the estate of which he was manager. This contention is based on an order passed by the Income-tax Officer on the appellant's application in 1935. Admittedly this application was made in view of the suit brought the following year under s. 33 of the Agri. Relief Act, it being realised that for the purpose of this Act it was necessary to show that the income-tax had not been paid by the appellant in his personal capacity. The order of the Income-tax Officer shows that some enquiry was made and that some property was recorded in the names of the sister-in-law and minor son under the guardianship of the appellant. It was ordered that the appellant's name should be removed from the general index register and notice should be issued to the lady and minor son. The Civil Judge considered the argument advanced before him that this order of the Income-tax Officer cancelled all previous assessments on the appellant in his personal capacity. He considered also the argument advanced on the other side that s. 35 of the Income Tax Act fixes a period of one year for rectification of mistakes in assessment. He was of opinion that there had been no rectification of the mistake made in the year 1927-29 and that there could be no rectification of the mistake. The order of the Income-tax Officer merely showed how the appellant was to be dealt with in future. The Civil Judge also thought that it was not conclusively proved that the income which had been returned by the appellant did not relate to him personally, as a witness whom he himself produced admitted that he carried on money-lending business.

Learned Counsel for the appellant argued first of all from the provisions of ss. 22 and 38 of the Income Tax Act of 1922 under which notices were issued by the Income-tax Officer. Under s. 38 (2) the Income-tax Officer may require any person whom he has reason to believe to be a trustee, guardian, or agent to furnish him with a return of the names of the persons for or of whom he is trustee, guardian or agent and of their addresses. He suggests that the Income-tax Officer must have known of the appellant's position as he sent him a notice under this section. I do not think that such an inference can be drawn or that it would show that the appellant was actually assessed to income-tax not in his personal but in a fiduciary capacity. Admittedly he did not furnish the Income-tax Officer with any return under s. 38 (2). He merely furnished a return of his income, and admittedly did not indicate in any manner that the income was not his personal income. The Income-tax Officer in these circumstances naturally concluded that the income was his personal income and assessed him accordingly. There can be no doubt whatever, therefore, that whether the income was derived from his personal property or from other property, the appellant was personally assessed to income-tax on it. Apart from this, as the Civil Judge pointed out, it is not conclusively proved that the income declared could not have related to the appellant. A portion of the income declared by him represented interest on War Bonds of a value of Rs. 6,000. Learned Counsel could not say whether this property was his own or that of his sister-in-law and minor son. It is also clear from the mortgage on which the suit was brought that he was engaged in his personal capacity in transactions of some magnitude. The mortgage-deed in respect of which accounts were sought under s. 33 was executed by the appellant for Rs. 20,000 on June 21, 1923. I am not altogether satisfied on these facts that the appellant acted in good faith in making a return solely on his own account, and subsequently several years later claiming that he had made it in another capacity.

I see no reason, therefore, to dissent from the view taken by the learned Civil Judge and I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

A corporation cannot be a servant of the Crown, although the members of the corporation may well be. Section 124 Govt. of Burma Act refers to natural persons only and not to artificial persons. Under s. 6, Official Trustees Act, the Official Trustee is a corporation sole with a perpetual succession and therefore is not a servant of the Crown. Nor is an Official Trustee acting under s. 7 (1) (a), Official Trustees Act, as an ordinary trustee, a servant of the Crown. [p. 63, col. 2; p. 64, col. 1.]

Seemingly contradictory provisions of s. 3, Limi. Act and O. VIII, r. 2, Civil P. C., are easily reconcilable. Section 3 makes the question of limitation a material question although not raised by the parties; but a Court is not bound to raise and decide a question of fact of its own motion. Hence where the question of limitation is purely one of law capable of determination on the facts admitted or proved before the Court, the Court is bound under the provisions of s. 3 to raise the question suo motu and decide it. 155 Ind. Cas. 205 (1), relied on. [p. 64, col. 1.]

But where the question of limitation raises issues of fact not arising from the plaint, the defendant is bound under O. VIII, r. 2, to raise such question in his written statement; if he fails to do so thereafter it is within the discretion of the Court to allow the question to be raised or not. Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bashyakarla Naidu (2), and 154 Ind. Cas. 153 (3), relied on. [p. 64, col. 2.]

Section 10, Lim. Act has no application to a claim for an account of moneys which ought, but for the default of the trustee, to have come into his hands, but in actual fact never became vested in him. It does apply to a claim for an account on the footing of wilful default. Such a claim is liable to be barred by limitation, and Art. 120, Sch. I is the Article applicable. Hence the claim for an account of the corpus of the trust funds which became vested in the trustee falls within the ambit of s. 10, and is not barred by limitation; but a claim for an account of the interest which the trustee ought to have earned for the trust funds, but failed to earn is governed by Art. 120. [p. 65, col. 1]

[Case-law relied on]

It is the duty of a trustee to confine himself to the class of investments which are permitted by the trust, and likewise to avoid all investments of that class which are attended with hazard. If a surveyor or valuer is appointed for the purpose of enabling a trustee to obtain a true valuation, the only question is whether in all the circumstances of the case the trustee has appointed a person whose advice he can with prudence take into account in arriving at his decision. [p. 66, col. 2.]

Where a trustee in respect of separate and distinct trusts mixes up the trusts funds he is guilty of breach of trust.

For the purposes of s. 20, Trusts Act, the value of the property does not mean what would be obtained at a forced sale of it, the risk of a forced sale, though an element to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the security is one upon which a trustee might wisely advance money, is something which does not and cannot affect the actual value of the property at the time of the advance. [p. 67, col. 2.]

A person making an advance upon his own account upon the security of immovable property may no doubt be influenced to do so partly by the value of the security itself and partly by his estimate of the solvency and character of borrower. But a trustee may not blend these considerations together. He must not allow the character or solvency of the borrower to weigh with him so as to make his advance, in effect, an advance not upon the security offered, but upon a consideration of other matters which seems to make it safe not to rely upon the security alone. Fry v. Tapson (10), distinguished. Learoyd v. Whiteley (9), Ingle v. Partridge (11), and In re Somerset: Somerset v. Earl Poulett (12), relied on." [p. 68, col. 1.]

Where the matters arising in several suits are substantially the same and all the suits are heard together, the Court should allow one set of costs for the three cases together in fixing the special Advocate's fee. [p. 71, col. 1.]

F. As. from the judgments of the High Court in Civil Reg. Suits Nos. 265, 266 and 267 of 1937.

Mr. U Thein Maung, Advocate-General, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. N. Paget, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These appeals arise out of three suits against the Official Trustee of Burma, brought by Mrs. Diana Raeburn, her son David H. Raeburn, and her daughter Rachel Raeburn. The three suits were heard together, one set of evidence only was recorded, and they were decided by a preliminary judgment (which decided the question of limitation), dated November 7, 1938, and a final judgment, dated March 30, 1939. Consequently, we are able to dispose of these appeals in a single judgment. The suits, which had a protracted hearing in the Court below, involved a multiplicity of points; side issues were raised of varying degrees of relevance, not to say importance. It appears to us to be important to resist with care any temptation to undue prolixity, since we have reached the conclusion that the broad question of whether the Official Trustee has committed breaches of trust and whether in consequence thereof he ought to be removed and ought to make good to the beneficiaries the loss occasioned to them is susceptible of a comparatively ready answer. Since the documents in the file are so voluminous and the judgment delivered in the Court below was so exhaustive, it is, in our opinion, desirable to restate the main issues and our conclusions upon them as concisely as may be.

The Official Trustee, under the provisions of s. 7 (1) (a), Official Trustees Act, 1913, undertook the duties of an ordinary trustee in respect of four separate and distinct trusts. The earliest trust was a marriage settlement in favour of Mrs. Diana Raeburn. It was created on September 13, 1906. The original trustees were Albert Meyer and S. E. Solomon and the trust fund was Rs. 17,800. Under the deed of trust the income of this sum was to be accumulated for five years, and thereafter the income of the accumulated fund was to be paid to Mr. Raeburn for her life for her sole and absolute use and benefit, and there was a remainder over in favour of her children. The trustees were empowered to invest the trust fund and accumulated income

"either in purchase or mortgage of immovable property in the towns of Calcutta or Rangoon or in Govt. paper or any authorized securities of the Govt. of India or to place the same with a Chetty or Chetties on their furnishing such securities as to the Trustees in their unfettered discretion seems adequate and reasonable."

By the year 1923 the amount of this trust fund and the accumulated income had risen to Rs. 26,500, and S. E. Solomon being dead the surviving trustee, Albert Meyer by a deed dated September 28, 1923, appointed the Official Trustee to be the sole trustee of this fund in his stead. The powers of investment conferred on the Official Trustee by this deed were the same as those conferred on the original trustees. By a deed dated February 1, 1921, Mrs. Raeburn appointed the Official Trustee as sole trustee of a trust created for the benefit of David H. Raeburn, the amount of the fund being Rs. 14,750. The income of the fund was to be paid by the trustee to Mrs. Raeburn for David's maintenance and education until he attained the age of 21 years, and the trustee was further authorized to pay out of the capital a sum not exceeding Rs. 5,000 to Mrs. Raeburn for the completion of David's education in Europe. After he reached the age of 21 years the income of the trust fund was to be paid to David for his life. There was a remainder over in favour of his heirs. The powers of investment conferred on the Official Trustee were :

"to invest the same in the purchase of or upon mortgage of immovable property or in such other manner as the Trustee is by law allowed."

By another deed of the same date (February 1, 1921), Mrs. Raeburn appointed the Official Trustee as sole trustee of a trust created for the benefit of Rachel Raeburn, the amount of the fund being Rs. 28,750. Out of this fund a sum of Rs. 5,000 was to be paid to Rachel on the day on which her engagement to marry was publicly announced, and subject to this payment the income of the fund was to be paid to Mrs.

Raeburn for the maintenance and education of Rachel until the latter attained the age of 21 years, and thereafter the income was to be paid to Rachel for life, with remainder over to her children or failing children, to her heirs. The powers of investment were exactly the same as in David's trust deed. A further trust in favour of Rachel was created by a deed executed on May 8, 1922. The appointers were two persons named S. Zillka and N. Sadka. The sole trustee appointed was the Official Trustee of Burma. The trust fund was a sum of Rs. 6,000. The income of the fund was to be paid to Rachel for life, with remainder over to her children or, failing children, to a school at Baghdad. The powers of investment conferred on the Official Trustee were the same as those in the two deeds of February 1, 1921. The Official Trustee accepted all these four trusts, under the provisions of s. 8 (1) (a), Official Trustees Act, and the trust funds were in the case of all four trusts, duly handed over to and received by him.

Now David B. Raeburn was born on March 4, 1909, and Rachel Raeburn was born on November 1, 1907. These are important dates, and it is significant, as evidence of the negligent manner in which the Official Trustee has performed his duties, that he failed to inform himself of them, and although he was bound by three of the trusts to pay the income thereof direct to these two persons after they attained the age of 21 years, he continued to pay the income of all four trusts to Mrs. Raeburn long after the children had come of age. The amended plaints in the three suits are in similar terms. The reliefs claimed are the removal of the Official Trustee and the appointment of some other competent person as trustee in his place, and an account of all sums due and payable by the Official Trustee to the different trusts. Various breaches of trust on the part of the Official Trustee are alleged. The principal are :

(1) Mixing up together of the trust funds of all four trusts, and failure to keep proper and separate accounts of the trust funds; (2) payment to Mrs. Raeburn of the sum of Rs. 5,000 for David's education, due under David's trust, out of the capital of Rachel's trust fund; (3) failure to invest the trust fund and earn an income therefrom between August 1928 and February 1929; (4) improper investment on contributory mortgages; (5) improper investments in December 1928, amounting to negligence and breach of trust, on mortgage by deposit of title deeds of two properties known as No. 82, Hermitage Road, Rangoon, and "Manorama," No. 20-22, Golden Valley, Rangoon; and (6) negligence by allowing the interest on these two mortgages to fall into arrears and by not taking the necessary steps within a reasonable time to recover the amount due thereon.

In Rachel's suit it is further alleged that the Official Trustee committed breach of trust by not obtaining her consent in writing to these investments on mortgage, as required by the provisions of the proviso to s. 20, Trusts Act, 1882. In each plaint the cause of action is said to have "arisen in the month of August 1928, and thereafter from time to time as the various breaches of trust set out herein occurred."

The plaints were filed on September 3, 1937. For the defendant-appellant two objections in bar of the suits have been taken. It is urged that the suits are incompetent on the ground that the consent of the Governor to the institution thereof has not been obtained, as required by the provisions of s. 124, Govt. of Burma Act, 1935. Secondly, it is urged that the suits are barred by limitation in respect of all breaches of trust which are alleged to have occurred prior to September 3, 1931. Dealing first with the defence based on the provisions of s. 124, Govt. of Burma Act, 1935, the part of the section on which reliance is placed in sub-s. (1). This subsection is in the following terms :

"No proceedings civil or criminal shall be instituted in Burma against any person in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown in India or Burma before the commencement of this Act, except with the consent of the Governor in his discretion."

In order to attract the provisions of this section, the suit must be brought against a person in respect of an act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown. Now, under s. 6, Official Trustees Act, the Official Trustee is a corporation sole with a perpetual succession. It is urged that by s. 19, Interpretation Act, 1889, the word 'person' includes a corporation, but this interpretation is subject to the context and subject-matter of the statute, and we cannot understand how a corporation can be a servant of the Crown, although the members of the corporation may well be.

Section 124 appears among a number of ss. 123 and 125 to 129, which deal with the special rights of persons who are servants of the Crown and plainly refer to natural persons only and not to artificial persons. The intention that s. 124 shall also refer only to natural persons therefore clearly appears. Moreover, the acts of the Official Trustee of which complaint is made were not done or purported to be done "in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown," for in administering these trusts the Official Trustee was acting as an ordinary trustee under s. 7 (1) (a), Official Trustees Act, and not as a servant of the Crown. These considerations suffice to dispose of this point against the appellant. Turning now to the question of limitation admittedly, this question is not raised in the pleadings, and was not mentioned on behalf of the defendant appellant until the 25th day of the hearing of the suits, when all the evidence had been recorded and the arguments of Counsel had begun. For the plaintiffs-respondents it is urged that the point ought not to have been allowed to be raised at that stage, and reliance is placed on the provisions of O. VIII, r. 2, Civil P. C. which, so far as it is material reads as follows:

"The defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which show the suit not to be maintainable .....as, for instance.....limitation..."

The defendant-appellant, on the other hand, relies on the provisions of s. 3, Lim. Act, which runs as follows:

"Subject to the provisions contained in ss. 4 to 25 (inclusive), every suit instituted ..after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by Sch. I shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence."

These at first sight seemingly contradictory provisions are easily reconcilable. Section 3 makes the question of limitation a material question although not raised by the parties; but a Court is not bound to raise and decide a question of fact of its own motion. Hence where the question of limitation is purely one of law capable of determination on the facts admitted or proved before the Court, the Court is bound under the provisions of s. 3 to raise the question suo motu and decide it: Maqbul Ahmad v. Onkar Pratab Narain Singh (1), at p. 250. But where the question of limitation raises issues of fact not arising from the plaint, the defendant is bound under O. VIII, r. 2, to raise such question in his written statement; if he fails to do so thereafter it is within the discretion of the Court to allow the question to be raised or not: Venkata Narasimha Naidu v. Bashyakarlu Naidu (2), at p. 378. The law was briefly stated in this sense in M. S. Chettyar Firm v. S. E. Bholat (3), at p. 46. Now, in these suits the question of limitation was raised by the facts alleged in the plaints themselves, and the Court was therefore bound, under the provisions of s. 3, Lim. Act, to decide the question on the facts stated in the plaints, at whatever stage of the hearing it was raised, or even if it was not raised at all by the parties themselves.

Section 3 lays down that every suit instituted after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by Sch. I shall be dismissed, with a saving clause in regard to the provisions of the succeeding sections of the Act. Hence the normal periods of limitation are those prescribed by Sch. I, and ss. 4 to 27 provide exceptions to or qualifications of the ordinary provisions of the law. Consequently, it is necessary, first, to decide what Article of Sch. I, Lim. Act, is applicable to these suits and to apply it, and then to see whether ss. 4 to 25 of the Act contain any exception or qualification which modifies the ordinary law in its application to these cases. It is common ground that the Article applicable is Art. 120, and this prescribes a period of limitation of six years and lays down that time begins to run when the right to sue accrues. Now the plaints set out that the cause of action arose in August 1928, and on certain subsequent dates, and the plaints were filed on September 3, 1937. Hence, under Art. 120 all rights of action based upon alleged breaches of trust occurring prior to September 3, 1931, were prima facie barred by limitation. Two such breaches of trust are alleged in the plaint, namely (1) failure to invest the trust funds between August 1928, and February 1929, and (2) improper investments on mortgage in December 1928. The suits, so far as they are based on these alleged breaches of trust, were therefore prima facie barred by limitation; and, as we have said, the facts necessary for this decision are not out in the plaints themselves, and the Court was therefore bound by the provisions of s. 3 to decide the question of limitation, although it was not raised in the written statements of the defendant-appellant. Section 10, Lim. Act, however provides an exception to the ordinary law in the case of breach of trust by an express trustee. This section, so far as it is material, reads as follows :

"Notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained, no suit against a person in whom property has become vested in trust for any specific purpose ..for the purpose of following in his ..hands such property, or the proceeds thereof, or for an account of such property or proceeds, shall be barred by any length of time."

Consequently, the provisions of s. 10 are applicable to an express trust, such as the trusts which form the subject-matter of these suits; and in our opinion, the provisions of the section are plain and scarcely open to misconstruction. The section says in terms that when a suit is brought by a beneficiary against a trustee of an express trust for an account of property which has become vested in the trustee, or the proceeds of such property, the suit shall never become barred by lapse of time. But the section has no application to a claim for an account of moneys which ought, but for the default of the trustee, to have come into his hands, but in actual fact never became vested in him. It does not apply to a claim for an account on the footing of wilful default. Such a claim is liable to be barred by limitation, and Art. 120 Sch. I is the Article applicable : New Fleming Spinning & Weaving Co , Ltd. v. Kessowji Naik (4), at p. 399, Sayad Hussein Miyan v. Collector of Kaira (5) at pp. 264, 267; Tholasingam Chetty v. Vedachella Aiyah (6), at p. 323; Shirinbai Dinshaw v. Navroji Pestonji (7), at pp. 953 to 955. Hence the claim for an account of the corpus of the trust funds which became vested in the defendant-appellant falls within the ambit of s. 10, and is not barred by limitation ; but the claim for an account of the interest which the appellant ought to have earned for the trust funds, but failed to earn, between August 1928, and February 1929 is time-barred under Art. 120. The fact that this latter claim is time-barred is however of no practical importance, for, as we shall presently point out, we agree with the learned trial Judge that the appellant committed breaches of trust in respect of the trust funds, and that the proper way of taking an account of the loss which the beneficiaries have thereby sustained, under s 23, Trusts Act, is to take the account on the footing of what the trust funds would have earned if they had been properly invested immediately after, or within a reasonable time after, the funds came into the appellant's hands for re-investment.

Dealing now with the alleged breaches of trust, the plaintiffs allege that the Official Trustee mixed up the funds with each other and failed to maintain separate accounts. They say that from August 13, 1928, there was undue delay on the part of the Official Trustee in re-investing trust funds. What happened to the trust funds has been summarized and set out by the learned trial Judge in a document designated by him, Table I. Prior to August 1928, all the trust moneys save Rs. 500 from Mrs. Raeburn's trust and Rs. 6,000 from Rachel Raeburn's second trust had been lent to one Hamadanee on the security of immovable property; that is to say, the whole of the trust money of Rachel Raeburn's first trust, amounting to Rs. 28,750, the whole of the trust money of David Raeburn's trust amounting to Rs. 14,750, and Rs. 26,000 (out of a total of Rs. 26,500) of Mrs. Raeburn's trust fund. These loans by way of cash and securities thus amounted in the aggregate to Rs. 69,500, and this amount was repaid by Hamadanee on August 13, 1928. Before this investment was paid off, notably in the autumn of 1927, Mrs. Raeburn wanted Rs. 5,000 for the completion of David Raeburn's education and the Official Trustee advanced this sum out of the Rs. 6,000 of Rachel Raeburn's second trust fund. There is no doubt at all that the trust funds were improperly mixed up with one another, and that Rachel's second trust fund was utilized to discharge a liability properly payable out of David's trust On the other hand, the moneys were not invested upon contributory mortgages, since what the trustee did was not to join with other persons, and "to rob the trustee of the control which is an essential part of the propriety of the security," as was the case in Webb v. Jonas (8). The trustee's rights were not mixed up with those of strangers, but at the same time it is clear that as between the beneficiaries there was a failure to keep separate accounts. It has not been suggested that any loss was sustained by the beneficiaries by reason of these breaches of trust.

Out of the moneys repaid by Hamadanee, two investments were ultimately made by the Official Trustee: (1) Rs. 15,000 lent to U Po Thaung at 10½ per cent. on the security of No. 82, Hermitage Road, Rangoon, on December 15, 1928, and (2) Rs. 41,000 lent to U Lun at 9 per cent. on the security of No. 20/22, Golden Valley, Rangoon, on December 20. As regards these, complaint is made that the investments were in breach of trust. U Po Thaung died in July 1931, since when no interest was paid; the defendant appellant did not file a mortgage suit till April 1932: the house fell into a ruinous condition; and the Official Trustee ultimately agreed to take over the property at the value of Rs. 5,000 only. As for the Golden Valley property, known as Manorama, the interest began to fall into arrears in 1931. No mortgage suit was brought until September 1935, and the property was ultimately bought in for Rs. 24,000. David Raeburn attained his majority on March 4, 1930; he complains that he never had any information from the Official Trustee, and Rachel Raeburn, who came of age on November 1, 1928, makes a similar complaint. The Official Trustee contends that Mrs. Raeburn was "all along acquainted with all the facts." He does not appear to have specifically pleaded that Mrs. Raeburn was appointed by either of her children as their agent after they had attained majority. He denies that any consent to investments by Rachel Raeburn was required by reason of the proviso to s. 20, Trusts Act, or at all. He does not contend that he gave either David or Rachel any information with regard to the trust porperty. It is to be observed that the two investments complained of were each made after Rachel Raeburn had attained her majority.

Now, were these investments properly made, having regard to the trust instruments and to all the circumstances of the case? The learned trial Judge has most carefully reviewed (pp. 21-26 of his judgment) the authorities in which the decree of prudence to be expected from a trustee has been discussed. The advances were made in December 1928, and for ourselves we should have hesitated to view the property nearly ten years later in order to decide whether Mr. Hormasji who in 1928 was carrying out the duties of Official Trustee, made prudent investments or not. He was obliged to make his decision not upon the data which might decide a private individual, however, prudent, to advance these moneys but upon the footing that he was doing so as a trustee. So far as Mrs. Raeburn's trust fund is concerned, his powers of investment were expressed in different terms from the powers which he had in relation to the other trusts, but he was entitled by the terms of all the trust instruments to invest in mortgages of immovable property. Adopting the words of Lord Watson in Learoyd v. Whiteley (9), at p. 733:

"It is the duty of a trustee to confine himself to the class of investments which are permitted by the trust, and likewise to avoid all investments of that class which are attended with hazard."

Now, in England, by s. 8, Trustee Act, 1925, re-enacting an earlier statute, a trustee is protected if he lends money on the security of any property on which he can properly lend, provided he acts upon the report of a person reasonably believed by him to be an able and practical surveyor or value instructed and employed independently of any owner of the property, and that the amount of the loan does not exceed two-thirds of the value as stated, and that the loan was made under the surveyor's or valuer's advice in the report. This statute is not the law in Burma. If a surveyor or valuer if appointed for the purpose of enabling a trustee to obtain a true valuation, the only question in this country is whether in all the circumstances of the case the trustee has appointed a person whose advice he can with prudence take into account in arriving at his decision. In respect of the Hermitage Road property, Mr. Hormasji said that he obtained a certificate from a well known firm in Rangoon, Messrs. Balthazar & Sons; it was signed by Mr. Joakim, the Managing Director, who was in Europe at the time of the trial and was not called as a witness. Mr. Hormasji said (p. 390):

"I used the certificate, for what it was worth, to check my own idea of the value of the property. I applied my mind to it."

In respect of the Golden Valley property he said (p. 395):

"I obtained a valuation certificate from T. David. I employed T. David by reason of his having been Secretary of the Golden Valley Estate Company Ltd., for a large number of years and because he would have special knowledge of the value of land in that locality. And as regards the building I knew Mr. David for a long time as a builder and contractor and his values were about the best that could be had in Rangoon."

(9) (1887) 12 A C 727 (733); 57 L J Ch 390; 58 L T 93; 36 W R 721.

He was then asked if he relied solely on Mr. David's certificate and he said :

"No. I inspected the property and applied my own mind to the question and I considered the property was an exceptionally good one and that it was quite safe to advance Rs. 41,000 from a trustee's point of view, having regard to the valuation with which I agreed after anxious consideration."

Messrs. Balthazar's valuation of No. 82, Hermitage Road, was Rs. 29,500 of which Rs. 7,000 was for the land and the remainder for the building, and Mr. David's valuation of the Golden Valley property was Rs. 72,000 of which Rs. 30,000 was for the land and the remainder for the building. Not only did Mr. Hormasji personally inspect both properties, but he took with him Mrs. Raeburn; she asked the Court to believe (p. 82) that she did not know the object of her visit of inspection to Hermitage Road, but there is a good deal of evidence to show that she was extremely anxious, not so much to get the trust moneys invested, but to get them invested in securities by way of mortgage on immovable property and not in Govt. paper, having regard to the much higher rate of interest which this course would ensure. Thus in a letter of April 4, 1926, to be found in Ex. D, dealing with an earlier investment, she wrote :

"I do not want it invested in Govt. paper, the reason being that the income derived from it being insufficient."

Mr. Hormasji says that this was her attitude throughout. She says herself (p. 15): "I asked Mr Hormasji to invest it in immovable properties." And in one or two cases she suggested possible investments of this character to which Mr. Hormasji was unwilling to agree. Mr. Hormasji says she was anxious that the advance on No. 82, Hermitage Road, should be made, and he made a note to that effect in his diary on December 14, 1928. There seems to be little doubt that Mr. Hormasji was sympathetic to her point of view. He had at that time abandoned the idea of investing in Govt. paper and was extremely anxious that the trust money should be advanced upon the security of immovable property with the least possible delay, in order to meet Mrs. Raeburn's wishes. There is evidence that it was Mr. Hormasji who asked a gentleman named Mr. Minus for Balthazar's valuation and that Mrs. Raeburn herself paid for it : Mr. Paget admits that she must be mistaken in thinking that she did not do so in the face of the books produced from Messrs. Balthazars themselves. In our opinion, it cannot be said that this was a valuation obtained from the mortgagor ; Mr. Minus was a mere go between ; the Official Trustee asked for this valuation and saw that he got it. Some objection has been made to the choice of Mr. David as valuer of the Golden Valley property since he was secretary of a company whose interest it was to keep up the value of properties in this neighbourhood; but no suggestion has ever been made against the integrity of either Mr. David or Messrs. Balthazar.

We find ourselves unable to accede to the view expressed in the Court below (p. 38 of the judgment) that for the purposes of s. 20, Trusts Act, the value of the property means what would be obtained at a forced sale of it ; it is almost a truism to say that one of the disadvantages of a forced sale is that the real value of the property sold is very often not reached; but the risk of a forced sale, though an element to be taken into consideration in deciding whether the security is one upon which a trustee might wisely advance money, is something which does not and cannot affect the actual value of the property at the time of the advance. In the present trusts the Official Trustee was empowered to invest on mortgages of immovable property or in such other manner as he was by law allowed. The law allowed him to invest in first mortgages by reason of s. 20 (e), Trusts Act, with a proviso therein as to the excess of the value over the mortgage money; but in our opinion, the settlor had given him unfettered powers to invest in mortgages of immovable property by mentioning them without proviso as to the value of the property. On any other reading of the trust instruments the words "on mortgages of immovable property" would appear to be redundant. At the same time, the proviso in the Act may afford a criterion of what is a reasonable and prudent course to adopt. The case in Fry v. Tapson (10), was cited to us. That was a case in which the trustees, at the suggestion of solicitors, accepted a valuation from a surveyor who was agent of the mortgagor and acted on that alone ; the facts are thus quite dissimilar from the facts here, and the principles which must guide us in this matter are those expressed in Ingle v. Partridge (11) and Learoyd v. Whiteley (9). We regret that from Mr. Hormasji's own evidence we are obliged to find that his decision was reached as the result of taking into account matters which he should, as a trustee, have ignored in estimating the soundness of the security; and also as the result of having failed to take into account other considerations which ought to have been present to his mind.

A person making an advance upon his own account upon the security of immovable property may no doubt be influenced to do so partly by the value of the security itself and partly by his estimate of the solvency and character of borrower. These two factors may blend in his mind, as it were in helping him to arrive at a conclusion; and if the solvency and character of the borrower is a factor to which he lends some weight he may be disposed to overlook other tests which he would have made as to the value of the security itself if that factor stood alone. Once having arrived at a decision to make the desired advance, he feels he has acted with prudence and care and is prepared to justify his action accordingly. Such, we think, is Mr. Hormasji's position. But a trustee may not blend these considerations together. He must not allow the character or solvency of the borrower to weigh with him so as to make his advance, in effect, an advance not upon the security offered, but upon a consideration of other matters which seem to make it safe not to rely upon the security alone. We respectfully agree in this connection with the views expressed by Kekewich, J., and upheld by the Court of Appeal in In re Somerset; Somerset v Earl Poulett (12), at pp. 247, 248. In neither of the two cases in which these advances were made would the rent to be obtained from the property cover the interest to be paid on the mortgage. The rent of No. 82, Hermitage Road, has been estimated at Rs. 100 per month and the learned Advocate-General did not suggest that it would exceed that figure. Mr. Rennick (called for the plaintiffs) put it at Rs. 70. But the interest on Rs. 15,000 advanced at 10½ per cent. would be Rs. 1,575 per annum.

As regards Golden Valley the highest rent suggested was Rs. 270 per month. The interest on Rs. 41,000 at 9 per cent. is Rs. 3,690 or Rs. 307-7-8 per month. Now Mr. Hormasjf in giving evidence named Rs. 100 as a fair rent for the Hermitage Road property. He was then asked (p. 465): "But even that could not have been sufficient to cover the interest on that loan." His answer was:

"That is why I took care to see that the man had other means. The man was getting a pension of Rs. 450 or so. He was an Executive Engineer in the Public Works Department."

At that time the Corporation assessment was only Rs. 80, but the Official Trustee never inquired. It is perfectly true that he insisted that he was satisfied that the property was, in his opinion, reinforced by that expressed in the valuation certificate, a good security for an advance of Rs. 15,000. But his answer shows that in considering whether it was safe to make the advance he was not taking into account the rental value, but substituting for it a factor which (though it might have been of weight in determining whether he would make an advance on his own account) should have been rigorously excluded from his mind when considering the value of the security from the point of view of a trustee. There was evidence which impressed the learned trial Judge that this property was of rather an unusual character in that it was a new house built by a pensioned official for his own occupation in a rather remote spot down a long lane, not easily reached by vehicles, and not possessing much attraction to the average prospective tenant. Mr. Paget argues with some force that the Official Trustee should have taken into account the possible death of the pensioner and the consequent cessation of his pension and the risk of not getting a tenant for the property. In fact, he did die about two and a half years later, and no tenant could be obtained. And we are obliged to say that in our opinion the Official Trustee did not act with reasonable prudence in this matter and was guilty of a breach of trust. In connection with the Golden Valley property, Mr. Hormasji appears to have allowed similar considerations to be present to his mind before reaching the decision to advance Rs. 41,000. On p. 456 he was asked if he ascertained what the assessment was. His reply was:

"No. Because the owner was living there and the property itself was worth sufficient to lead me to advance Rs. 41,000 on it. It left an ample margin and the man had means of paying interest regularly. So I may not have paid any attention to the assessment."

When pressed that the sums due as interest could never be got out of the rent, he said he had enquired and ascertained that U Lun had a good income from paddy lands and that he was the owner of a newspaper and a press. The learned (12) (1894) 1 Ch 231 (247, 248); 63 L J Ch 41; 7 R 34; 69 L T 744; 42 W R 145.

Judge then asked if witness took U Lun's personal position into consideration and he replied :

"Only with regard to the possibility of his paying interest regularly. It was imoprtant, from my point of view, that the beneficiary should receive interest regularly and I satisfied myself that there would be no difficulty in getting the interest. Quite apart from that, the property was worth more than was sufficient to guarantee the recovery of the money advanced on it."

We are in agreement with the learned trial Judge that this was an improper investment for a trustee to make. There is a further consideration with regard to these two advances. It is to be noted that if the valuation of Rs. 29,500 in respect of the Hermitage Road property was correct one would hardly expect the trustee to agree that a rent of Rs. 1,200 per annum would be a fair one for the property. It would give a bare four per cent. and at that time securities in Govt. loans were yielding a greater return than 4 per cent. In the same way, the valuation of Rs. 72,000 for the Golden Valley property, if Rs. 250 a month was a "decent assessment," to use Mr. Hormasji's words, would only yield a similar return. The fact that the rents which he now recognizes to be fair are only 4 per cent. on the valuations which he received should certainly have made him suspicious of the latter. The Official Trustee was being offered 10½ per cent. and 9 per cent. respectively for his advances. It must not be forgotten that the advances were made at a time when several prospective securities had been deemed inadequate; Mrs. Raeburn was pressing, and the Official Trustee himself must have been anxious to surmount any difficulties which were capable of being surmounted. We think he allowed himself to believe he was justified in accepting these securities when greater prudence would have caused him to decline them. We find no evidence in support of the contention that Mrs. Raeburn was in any way empowered to give the consent which should have been obtained from her daughter Rachel Raeburn before either of these advances were made, having regard to the proviso to s. 20, Trusts Act. Inasmuch as the Official Trustee mixed up the trust funds indiscriminately, and that part of the advances so made, and indeed a large part of them, were made out of the fund of Rachel Raeburn's first trust, we agree that this constitutes a further breach of trust on his part. David Raeburn however was a minor at the time of these advances and we cannot accept the view that his consent was required by anything in s. 20 of the Act, or that his mother's consent should have been obtained expressly on his behalf. As regards Mrs. Reaburn, she gave her own consent, but this in no way protects the Official Trustee, having regard to the fact that we hold that the investments ought not to have been made at all.

With great respect to the learned trial Judge, the test made by him in arriving at what would have been a fair advance on these securities seems to us to be based on precarious data. He has capitalized the rental at eight per cent. but the figure is an arbitrary one and the evidence on the matter was very scanty. Mr. Cowasjee suggested six per cent.; whether net or gross is not directly apparent from his evidence, and Mr. Hormasji was disinclined to view the matter from this standpoint at all. In our opinion, it is enough to say here that on the Official Trustee's own showing he did not act as a prudent trustee should do, but took into account personal considerations when estimating the capacity of the borrower to pay interest, and having done that he failed to apply his mind to the question of whether a tenant could reasonably be obtained for these properties in the event of the mortgagors ceasing to occupy them, and whether, if so, the rent would cover the mortgage interest. He allowed himself to be influenced by the standards which are generally present to a lender making an advance upon his own account, rather than by the stricter considerations which should have been present to his mind as a trustee. We repeat that in our view both these investments were clearly made in breach of trust.

But the appellant has relied on the doctrine of acquiescence. It has been said on his behalf, although somewhat tentatively, that (following the wording of s. 23, Trusts Act) the beneficiaries, being competent to contract, have concurred in the breaches of trust or subsequently acquiesced therein, with full knowledge of the facts of the case and of their rights as against the trustee. We are only concerned, in regard to this point, with the breaches of trust by improper investments in December 1928 for all the loss to the beneficiaries was thereby sustained. At that time David was a minor, and therefore he could not concur in these investments, and there is no evidence that Rachel was even aware of them. As regards Mrs. Raeburn, there is evidence that she was taken to inspect the properties before money was lent on them and that she concurred in the investments; but clearly, she did not have full knowledge of the facts, for she was not informed that the rent which could be obtained from these properties was insufficient to pay the interest which she expected to get on the loans: the Official Trustee himself did not care to make the very obvious enquiry which would have made him aware of this fact. The same consideration applies to subseqent acquiescence. There is no evidence on which it could be held that either David or Rachel acquiesced. It is said that their mother acted as their agent in this matter, but such evidence as there is, shows that she assumed the character of agent without their knowledge or consent and she was certainly not authorized by them to acquiesce in any breach of trust. Furthermore, so far as subsequent acquiescence by Mrs. Raeburn is concerned, it is clear, as we have said, that whatever she may have done she did with incomplete knowledge of the facts.

As regards the relief to which the respondents are entitled, it has been suggested on behalf of the appellant that, as we have found that the breaches of trust consisted in advancing sums in excess of what ought to have been advanced on what otherwise were proper securities, we ought to order the account to be taken on the footing that the securities shall be deemed authorized investments for the smaller sums which might properly have been lent and the appellant held liable to make good only the sums advanced in excess thereof with interest. This is an application of s. 9 of the English Trustee Act, 1925, and there is no similar provision in the Trusts Act of 1882, which is the law in this country. Section 23 of the Trusts Act enacts that where the trustee commits a breach of trust he is liable to make good the loss which the trust property or the beneficiary has thereby sustained. We therefore have to estimate the loss to the trust funds or the beneficiaries by these improper investments, and in connection with this matter the cardinal facts are that the trust funds have almost entirely disappeared and the beneficiaries have not for several years past received any income from them. We are in entire agreement with the reasons which the learned trial Judge has set out at such length in his judgment (pp. 85 to 96) for holding that the best and most practical method of estimating these losses is by treating these investments as though they had never been made. The appellant can hardly complain that he is thereby compelled to take over the two properties, for, it is still asserted on his behalf that the properties are even now worth more than the sums which were respectively lent on them. Consequently, we respectfully agree with the learned trial Judge in ordering that the account shall be taken on the footing that the appellant shall take over the securities and shall replace the corpus of the trust funds and shall pay interest thereon to the respondents from a reasonable date after the funds came into his hands for re-investment at the rate which the funds would have earned if they had been invested in Govt. securities, less the amounts which the respondents have actually received. The learned Judge has made all these elaborate calculations himself, and if his calculations had been a matter in dispute we should have felt that the task involved in adjudicating on this question of accounts was beyond our powers, and should have been constrained to refer the matter to the Official Referee of the Court for his decision. But we are happy to be informed that the parties accept the correctness of the learned Judge's calculations, except in the following particulars: (1) A sum of Rs. 364-11-0 to be deducted from the sum of Rs. 1465-2-4 mentioned on p. 100 of the judgment. (2) On p. 97 of the judgment, the correct figure for David's trust is Rupees 2,847-13-2 and not Rs. 3,578 0-6, and the correct figure for Rachel's first trust is Rs. 8,397-6-9 and not Rs. 7,667-3-5. (3) On p. 106 of the judgment, an additional sum of Rs. 1,463-8-0 has been paid by the appellant to Mrs. Raeburn, in addition to the sum of Rs. 1,817-5-0 mentioned in the judgment, and the appellant must be given credit as against Mrs. Raeburn for this additional sum.

Learned Counsel for all parties agree to these corrections in the calculations made by the learned trial Judge, and therefore they must now be made in view of the observations made by the learned Judge (p. 96 of the judgment). The decrees will be amended accordingly. We are in agreement with the learned trial Judge that the Official Trustee should be removed from the trusts. Two of the beneficiaries are resident in Europe and Mrs. Raeburn has declared that she also desires to reside there. No good reason can be found for continuing to have these trust funds administered by the Official Trustee in Rangoon, and in the light of what has happened it would obviously be impossible for the beneficiaries to have in future any confidence in his administration of the trusts. In our opinion, the costs of the application for the appointment of a new trustee ought to be determined at the time of the application. We share the learned Judge's view that these are trusts which might suitably be administered by the Public Trustee in England. Accordingly the appeals fail and the judgments and decrees of the trial Court are confirmed, subject to the amendments of the decrees mentioned above. But the costs of the suits, ordered by the learned trial Judge in his two judgments and his order of August 19, 1938, will be varied in the light of our present judgment, and on this subject it is necessary to enter into some detail.

With regard to costs, the learned Judge first allowed costs ad valorem on the amount actually recovered, and then in addition he allowed (in our opinion rightly) a special Advocate's fee. In our opinion, since the matters arising out of the three trusts were substantially the same and all the suits were heard together, he should. however, have allowed one set of costs for the three cases together in fixing the special Advocate's fee. The costs actually fixed on this score were prodigious. In respect of 24 full working days the special fee was fixed at 46 gold mohurs a day, based on 16 gold mohurs in Mrs. Raeburn's suit, 18 in Miss Rachel Raeburn's and 12 in David Raeburn's. For the two days August 17, and August 19, the learned Judge allowed 75 gold mohurs, and a further 15 gold mohurs for hearing judgment on a point of limitation on November 7, 60 gold mohurs were allowed for the hearing on November 9, 21 gold mohurs for July 7, and 24 gold mohurs for hearing final judgment. In our opinion, this scale cannot be justified, We fix the Advocate's special fee for the plaintiffs at 20 gold mohurs per day for 25 full days. This includes the 24 days mentioned by the learned trial Judge and also November 9; four half days at ten gold mohurs each must be added; they are July 7, August 17, August 19, and November 22. This makes 27 days, and judgment on limitation is part of the hearing and may be reckoned at half a day. The total is thus 550 gold mohurs, which is Rs. 9,350, and with the sum of Rs. 2132 ad valorem costs makes the total Advocate's fee Rs. 11,482. We think this is simple. With regard to the special fee for the defendants, we think this should be fixed now in case it should prove necessary to fix it as the result of any subsequent appeal. From the Judge's notes and from reading the evidence it is apparent that much time was wasted by Mr. Munshi, and in our opinion the special fee for the defendants should not exceed a fee of 20 gold mohurs for 24 days. This makes Rs. 8,160, or Rs. 10,292 including the ad valorem fee. There must be no special fee for the junior, but the ad valorem fee for the junior must be allowed at the usual two-thirds rate.

Then a very large sum was awarded to Mrs. Raeburn under the head of subsistence allowance. In our opinion, there was no satisfactory evidence upon which the finding of fact that she was normally resident in Europe at the time of filing the suit could be based. It is true that there is a letter written in September 1927, in which her London solicitors express to the Official Trustee the view that "she is now almost entirely resident in Europe," but within three months of that date she came to Burma and remained here for four years and five months. She had lived permanently in Rangoon till some time after her husband's death in 1913. She visited England with her children in 1915-16 and was in England from 1919-21. After re-visiting Burma for a short period she again returned to Rangoon from Europe in November 1922 and lived here just over two years. Then she was in England for nearly three years and in Burma from November 1927 to April 1932. She returned to Europe and for a time took the lease of premises in England, and returned to Burma in February 1936, a year before the present suits were filed. In 1936 she filed a suit in Burma which was quite independent of the present suit and was against her brother (see her own evidence, p. 92). It is admitted that she is still in Burma at the end of 1939 seven months after final judgment was delivered in the lower Court. She has no residence now in Europe; her children are there, it is true, but it certainly cannot be said that she came over here to be a witness in a suit not filed till 12 months after her arrival. No question of giving evidence can have been present to her mind when she last left Europe for Burma, and she is not within the rules of procedure of the Original Side of this Court which permits of the grant of subsistence and travelling allowance to a party only when she is called as a witness except to the extent that she actually gave evidence on four days prior to the vacation in 1938 and was required by the trial Judge to be present on a day after the vacation. Under rr. 139 and 140 A of the Original Side Rules of Procedure, she is thus entitled to payment for five days, her allowance being that of a female witness calculated at Rs. 10 per diem or Rs. 50 in all.

The learned Advocate for the respondents agreed that there was nothing to justify the special rate allowed of Rs. 16 a day: he asked for subsistence allowance at the lower rate over the vacation, but the witness was resident in Rangoon at that time and was not being detained by the Court in any way. Moreover, with respect we do not think that there was any need for the learned Judge to decide that she must remain over the vacation merely because he wished to defer his judgment on the point of limitation, or to mulct the appellants in the resultant costs. His order was made suo motu and not on the application of any party. Any further questions could have been put to her before the vacation subject to the issue on limitation being left over. We order Rs. 50 and no more to be paid to Mrs. Raeburn as her subsistence allowance as a witness and nothing as her travelling allowance. The allowances granted to her amounting to Rs. 5,712 are we consider, extravagantly out of proportion to the realities of the situation. She is not entitled in the circumstances to an allowance to cover the cost of her subsistence as from April 1, 1938. She was allowed 80 days' subsistence allowance by the order of August 19, 1938 (at p. 6) and a further 145 days in the final judgment (at p. 225) apart from her expenses for the double journey between London and Rangoon. It is to be observed that, she gave evidence on no more than four days and complained in an affidavit that she was harassed by needless cross-examination, a complaint with which we are in some sympathy. We are by no means sure that if she had been ordinarily resident in Europe (which in our opinion she was not) her evidence might not well have been taken on commission. The main dispute in the suits has been as to the propriety of the two investments in respect of the Hermitage Road and Golden Valley properties and on these issues Mrs. Raeburn in the nature of things could have comparatively little to say. This lady has been awarded the expenses of all her board and lodging (and more besides) for over nine months when the passages are taken into consideration. She cannot be allowed to live for such a period at the expense of the Official Trustee merely because she came here from Europe in 1936.

Mr. Friedlander was regarded as an expert witness for the plaintiff. On his account a qualifying fee of Rs 100 and an allowance for the actual period of three days during which he was in the witness-box at the rate of Rs. 16 per day are allowed. What is described as an all-in fee of Rs. 350 must be deleted. If he was required to assist Counsel for the plaintiffs, allowance for such assistance is made in calculating the Advocate's costs. In our opinion, the question of principle was involved with regard to the orders for costs. In the result the costs awarded have been reduced by a very large sum. The costs of the appeals must be reviewed by the Taxing Master and such part of them as is attributable to the appeals against costs must be awarded in favour of the appellant, the remainder being awarded to the respondents. We fix a special Advocate's fee to the leader of 25 gold mohurs a day in the combined appeals in addition to the ad valorem costs, regard being had to the periods of time in which the question of costs was argued before us.

LAHORE HIGH COURT

Civil Reference No. 24 of 1939

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, LAHORE—RESPONDENT

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 62 (12), 61—S. 62 (12), if precludes enquiry into question whether tax is legal or otherwise—Only tax actually being levied is saved and not tax that could be levied—Tax on Salt—Municipality, if can impose it—Words and Phrases—"Tax" and "Cess"—Interpretation of statute—Statutes imposing pecuniary burdens—Strict construction.

All that sub-s (12) of s 62, Punjab Municipal Act lays down is that a notification of the imposition of a tax under the Municipal Act shall be conclusive evidence that the tax has been imposed in accordance with the provisions of the Act and does not preclude an enquiry into the question whether the tax is legal or otherwise.

It is the tax that was actually being levied that is saved under s. 61 and not a tax that could be levied under the old Municipal Act.

The combined effect of ss. 100, 140, sub-s. (1) and the Federal Legislative List Item No. 47 is that salt is a matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Federal Legislature alone and cannot therefore by virtue of sub-s. (1) of s. 100 be dealt with in any manner by a Provincial Legislature. Consequently, a Municipal Committee cannot legally impose a tax on salt.

"Cess" means, specially in relation to India, "a tax levied for a specific object. "Tax" in legal parlance also means nothing more than money which individuals are compelled to pay for public pusposes. It is impossible, therefore, to distinguish "tax" from "cess" or "duty."

Statutes which impose pecuniary burdens, are always construed strictly and a construction which would have the effect of making a person liable to pay the same tax twice in respect of the same subject-matter would not be adopted unless the words were very clear and precise to that effect. In a case of reasonable doubt the construction most beneficial to the subject will be adopted.

C. Ref. case referred by the Deputy Commissioner, Lahore, dated December 14, 1939.

Rai Bahadur Badri Dass, Messrs. V. N. Sethi and K. L Gauba, for the Appellant.

Mr. Hamid Ullah Siddique, for the Municipal Committee.

Order.—This reference has been made by the Deputy Commissioner, Lahore, under sub-s. (2) of s. 84, Punjab Municipal Act. The facts are these. Under s. 238, Punjab Municipal Act, 1911, the Municipal Committee of Lahore was declared to be superseded and Mr. Macnabb was appointed by the Provincial Govt. as Administrator invested with all powers and duties of the Committee. On April 28, 1938, a notification was issued in the Govt. Gazette Punjab in the following terms :

"In pursuance of the provisions of sub-s. (19) of s. 62, Punjab Municipal Act, 1911, it is hereby notified that, with the previous sanction of the Governor of the Punjab, the Administrator of the Municipality of Lahore has with effect from August 1, 1938, imposed the following tax....."

A schedule was attached to this notification describing the articles of food and drink which were so taxed, and these articles included 'salt'. On September 30, 1939, Lala Daulat Ram Kapur, Secretary, Central Rate Payers Association, Lahore, informed the Secretary of the Municipal Committee of his intention to import two maunds of salt into the limits of the Municipal Committee, Lahore, on October 3, 1939 and brought it to his notice at the same time that the tax imposed upon salt by means of the notification referred to above was illegal. It was further requested that the mohurrir in charge of the barrier be instructed not to demand any tax from him on that account. On October 2, the Secretary, Municipal Committee, informed Mr. Kapur that as 'salt' was included in the term 'goods' as used in Item No. 49 of list No. II of Sch. VII to the Govt. of India Act, 1935, the tax was legal and could be recovered. On October 3, 1939 two maunds of salt were imported and Mr. Kapur paid the tax under protest. He however made an appeal to the Administrator of the Committee under the provisions of rule V.63, Municipal Account Code, 1930, for a refund of the tax. The Administrator, on October 9, 1939, rejected the appeal on the same ground as was stated by the Secretary of the Municipal Committee. Thereupon, the importer preferred an appeal to the Deputy Commissioner, Lahore, under s. 84, Punjab Municipal Act, and that officer has under sub-s. (2) of that section referred the matter to this Court as stated above.

Counsel for the Administrator has urged that the imposition of this tax cannot be questioned by virtue of sub-s. (12) of s. 62, Punjab Municipal Act. This objection does not merit any serious consideration, inasmuch as all that sub-s. (12) lays down is that a notification of the imposition of a tax under the Municipal Act shall be conclusive evidence that the tax has been imposed in accordance with the provisions of the Act and does not preclude an enquiry into the question whether the tax is legal or otherwise. Counsel further urges that the power of the Administrator to levy this tax is saved by sub-s. (2) of s. 143, Govt. of India Act, inasmuch as the words "were being lawfully levied" as used in that sub-section refer both to the taxes which were being actually levied and those that could be levied. Here also he is mistaken. Apart from the apparent unsoundness of the view advanced by him, the matter is settled by the Govt. of India (Adaptation of Indian Laws) Order, 1937, by which a new provision was added to s. 61, Municipal Act, which reads as follows :

"Nothing in this section shall authorize the imposition of any tax which the Provincial Legislature has no power to impose in the Province under the Govt. of India Act, 1935 ; Provided that a Committee which immediately before the commencement of Part III of the said Act was lawfully leavying any such tax under this section as then in force, may continue to levy that tax until provision to the contrary is made by the Central Legislature."

Evidently, therefore, it was the tax that was actually being levied that was saved and not a tax that could be levied under the old Municipal Act. The only question that falls for determination is whether tax on salt was legally imposed by the Administrator of the Committee. It is contended on behalf of the Administrator that under sub-s. (2) of s. 61, Punjab Municipal Act, he is empowered with the previous sanction of the Provincial Govt. to impose any tax which a Provincial Legislature has power to impose in the Province under the Govt. of India Act, 1935. In the Provincial Legislative List there is an Item No. 49 which relates to 'cesses' on the entry of goods into a local area for consumption, use or sale therein. A Provincial Legislature is, therefore, empowered to levy such cesses and inasmuch as the tax imposed by the Administrator on salt is covered by this item, it was within the authority of the Administrator to impose a tax on salt with the previous sanction of the Provincial Govt.

Had the matter stood there, it would not have admitted of any doubt as to the competency of the Administrator to impose the tax complained of, but there are other provisions in the Govt. of India Act which have to be considered in this connection. Sub-section (1) of s. 100 says that notwithstanding anything in the next two succeeding sub-sections, that is (2) and (3), the Federal Legislature has, and a Provincial Legislature has not, power to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in list I in Sch. VII of this Act. In sub-s. (2) of the same section, it is stated that notwithstanding anything in the next succeeding sub section, that is sub-s. (3), the Federal Legislature, and, subject to the preceding sub-section, a Provincial Legislature also, have powers to make laws with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List III in the said schedule. In sub-s. (3) it is said that subject to the two preceding sub-sections that is 1 and 2, the Provincial Legislature has, and the Federal Legislature has not, power to make laws for a Province or any part thereof with respect to any of the matters enumerated in List II in the said schedule. List I is called in the Federal Legislative List, List II, the Provincial Legislative List and List III, the Concurrent Legislative List.

By sub-s. (1) of s. 140, it is enacted that duties on salt shall be levied and collected by the Federation and provision is further made therein to pay to the provinces out of the revenues of the Federation sums equivalent to the whole or any part of the net proceeds of that duty, if so provided by an Act of the Federal Legislature. Referring now to the Federal Legislative List, we find that 'salt' is enumerated there at Item No. 47. The combined effect of ss. 100, 140, sub-s. (1) and the Federal Legislative List Item No. 47 is that salt is a matter which is within the jurisdiction of the Federal Legislature alone and cannot therefore by virtue of sub-s. (1) of s. 100 be dealt with in any manner by a Provincial Legislature. It is, on the other hand, expressly excluded from its jurisdiction and it is this limitation imposed on its powers that is repeated in sub-s. (3) of s. 61, Municipal Act. Lists I and II are mutually exclusive and although the word "goods" as used in Item No. 49 and defined in s. 311, Govt. of India Act, includes all materials, commodoties, and articles, it had to be read subject to what has already been included in List I. Consequently, it cannot include those goods which are placed within the jurisdiction of the Federal Legislature alone. If salt is taken to be included in List II, a Federal Legislature will have no jurisdiction to make any law in respect thereof by virtue of sub-s. (3) of s. 100 and this would lead to the anamolous result that an item which by sub-s. (1) of s. 140 and List I of Sch. VII, is specially placed within the jurisdiction of the Federal Legislature, will at the same time be considered to have been excluded from its jurisdiction by being included in List II.

It is argued that 'cess' is something different from 'tax' or 'duty' and consequently, in spite of what is contained in sub-s. (1) of s. 100 and Item No. 47 of the Federal Legislative List, the Administrator could impose what was being levied from the importer; but, in my view, this argument is equally unsound. "Cess" as defined in Murray's Oxford Dictionary means specially in relation to India "a tax levied for a specific object." It is no doubt said that sometimes it meant a rate levied by local authority and for local purposes; but, as explained there, it is now superseded in general English use by the word "rate". Similarly, the word "duty" is defined in the same Dictionary as "a payment to the public revenue levied upon the import, export, manufacture, or sale of certain commodities". "Tax" in legal parlance also means nothing more than money which individuals are compelled to pay for public purprses. It is imposible, therefore, to distinguish "tax" from "cess" or "duty". No doubt, the draftsman has used three different terms in different parts of the Govt. of India Act, but I consider that by using these different terms he did not intend to convey different ideas thereby; otherwise, it might support a highly improbable suggestion that three different levies could be made on articles like salt in the form of 'cess', 'duty' and 'tax' respectively. It is noteworthy that even in the notification issued by the Provincial Govt. the word 'tax' is used and not 'cess'. Reference in this connection may also be made to the definition of the words 'taxation' and 'tax' as given in s. 311, Govt. of India Act. 'Taxation' includes the imposition of any tax or impost whether general or local or special and 'tax' is to be construed accordingly. Statutes which impose pecuniary burdens, as stated in Maxwell's Interpretation of Statutes at p. 250, are always construed strictly and a construction which would have the effect of making a person liable to pay the same tax twice in respect of the same subject-matter would not be adopted unless the words were very clear and precise to that effect. In a case of reasonable doubt the construction most beneficial to the subject will be adopted. I am of opinion, therefore, that in imposing a tax on salt, the Administrator did transgress the bounds of law and I answer the reference accordingly. The Administrator will pay the costs of the importer, Lala Daulat Ram Kapur, in this Court. Under s. 295, Govt. of India Act, 1935, I certify that the case involves a substantial question of law as to the interpretation of that Act.

Letters Patent Appeal No. 6 of 1937
April 10, 1940
GRILLS AND POLLOCK, JJ.

BRIJMOHANSING—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
TULSIRAM—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT

C. P. Land Revenue Act (II of 1917), ss. 188 (1) (a), 187 (3), 189 (1) (d) and (a)—Lambardar-gumashta, if can collect that proportion of rent which would constitute revenue payable—Lambardar-gumashta's authority, extent of—Guardian of minor lambardar, whether can exercise powers of lambardar in relation to proprietary body—S. 189 (1) (d), applicability to sadar-lambardar—Proprietary interest in patti lost by lambardar-gumashta—Whether ground for his removal—Interpretation of Statutes—Side-headings to sections.

Sub-s. (1) (a) of s. 188, C. P. Land Revenue Act, does not empower the lambardar-gumashta to collect that proportion of the rents which would constitute the revenue payable. [p. 78, col. 1.]

The phrase in sub-s. (3) of s. 187, C. P. Land Revenue Act "the duties of the office" is sufficiently wide to cover both the phrases "the duties imposed" and "the powers conferred" in sub-s. (1) of that section. The lambardar-gumashta's activities are not limited to the duties imposed under s. 188 (1) and he has authority to exercise any of the powers mentioned in sub-s. (2). It is the same person who performs both the functions, whether he be a lambardar or a lambardar-gumashta appointed because of the lambardar's disability. The granting of leases is within those powers as much as is the collecting of rents or the acceptance of surrenders • 192 Ind. Cas. 291 (1), relied on. [p. 78, cols. 1 & 2.]

The guardian of a minor cannot exercise the powers of a lambardar in relation to the proprietary body. The power of a lambardar to act through a guardian is nowhere recognized in the Land Revenue Act; the only provision for the exercise of the powers of a lambardar who is under a disability is through a duly appointed lambardar-gumashta. [ibid.]

A sadar-lambardar is also a lambardar and is not merely a channel for the payment of revenue from other lambardars, and consequently s. 189 (1) (d) can also apply to a sadar-lambardar. [p. 79, col. 1]

Section 189, C. P. Land Revenue Act is not mandatory but permissive, and if a lambardar-gumastha has been appointed who has a proprietary interest in the patti and subsequently loses that interest, it is open to the Deputy Commissioner to remove him on that ground. [ibid.]

The Courts are not entitled to look at the side-headings to sections of a statute in interpreting the statute. The Legislature is not responsible for the side-headings. [p. 78, col. 1.]

L. P. A. from the appellate decree of the Court of Stone, C. J. dated March 12, 1937, in Second Appeal No. 121 of 1934, reversing the decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated December 18, 1933.

Mr. R. N. Padhye, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. V. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

Judgment—This is a Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of the Honourable the Chief Justice.

In Mauza Khirbodi in the Bhandara District one Sonya, an occupancy tenant, wished to transfer his holding to the defendant Tulsiram, and he accomplished this by the well-known device of arranging a surrender of the holding and a lease by the proprietary body to the intended transferee on the same day, the consent of the requisite authority being taken. The authority in this case was Govind Singh, the duly appointed lambardar-gumashta, and the defendant paid consideration both to the transferor Sonya and to Gobind Singh for his consent. Govind Singh is now dead, and another lambardar-gumashta has been appointed. The plaintiff Brijmohan Singh is the lambardar and a minor and his mother Mst. Chandnabai is his guardian. The minor lambardar brought a suit through his guardian to eject the defendant as a trespasser on the ground that Govind Singh had no authority to grant him a lease and that he had trespassed on the land without the consent of the lambardar. The defendant pleaded that Govind Singh as the lambardar-gumashta had full authority to approve the transfer, which necessitated the granting of the lease. The plaintiff admitted that Govind Singh was managing the village on his behalf, but contended that he had authority only to collect rents and look after the general management of the village and accept surrenders, but no authority to enter into any transaction by way of lease. The trial Court found that the transaction between the two tenants amounted to a sale with the consent of Govind Singh and that even if the granting of a lease was outside the scope of the latter's powers as lambardar-gumashta, he had the implied consent of the plaintiff's guardian. The trial Court had no doubt that Govind Singh as lambardar-gumashta was empowered to consent to the transfer, and the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. This decision was reversed in the lower Appellate Court where the learned Judge considered that the only question arising for decision was whether Govind Singh could in his capacity as lambardar-gumashta, lease out the land to the defendant and recognize him as a tenant and whether the defendant was a tenant or a trespasser. The learned Judge considered that as there was no pleading on the question of any implied authority given to Govind Singh by the plaintiff's guardian, the contention of an implied authority by her could not be used to defeat the plaintiff's claim. The Court concluded that a lambardar-gumashta had no power to grant a lease, since s. 187 (3) of the Land Revenue Act, which relates to the appointment of lambardar-gumashtas, only authorizes the appointment of a lambardar-gumashta to carry out the duties imposed on lambardars by s. 188 (1) of the Land Revenue Act and does not authorize a lambardar-gumashta to assume the powers of a lambardar in contradistinction to his enumerated duties. These powers, the Court held, rested with the lambardar unless the lambardar-gumashta was specially empowered by the lambardar to perform such duties as he delegated to him. The plaintiff-appellant's claim for ejectment of the defendant was accordingly decreed. In second appeal this decision was reversed after a finding had been recorded in the lower Appellate Court on an issue on remand that during the period that Govind Singh acted as manager it was part of his powers as such to make alienations and that no one but he made alienations. It is to be noted that the presiding Judge who recorded his finding on this remanded issue was not the Judge who had decided the appeal. The issue was necessitated by the fact that this Court found it difficult to reconcile the findings given in appeal with the undisturbed finding of fact in the trial Court that Govind Singh leased out the lands in the ordinary course of village management. The learned Chief Justice held that if a lambardar is incapable of exercising his powers by reason of, inter alia his minority and if he cannot act through an agent, these powers cannot be carried out at all; they cannot be carried out through a guardian, since the guardian is not entitled to represent the minor's co-sharers, and no one is provided by statute to act on behalf of the lambardar in such a case except the lambardar-gumashta. The contention that a lambardar-gumashta is appointed solely for the purpose of performing the duties imposed on the lambardar by s. 188 (1) of the Land Revenue Act and not to exercise the lambardar's powers was met by the conclusion that when the plaintiff was appointed lambardar, Govind Singh was not appointed as lambardar gumashta but merely as a gumashta, or agent, and that Govind Singh was in fact appointed as an agent of the proprietary body to act on their behalf. The judgment proceeds:

> "In my opinion, it must be taken that all the co-sharers were seeking an agent capable of acting and, failing agreement, were leaving it to the Revenue Court to say who that agent should be. I cannot believe that they were merely endeavouring to arrange for somebody to pay Govt. Revenue, leaving the estate without anybody to manage it."

It was then held that as Govind Singh had been appointed an agent in a matter where all the co-sharers were represented and had in fact been performing all the duties and exercising all the powers of a lambardar over a number of years, granting leases without objection from the adult co-sharers, it would be idle to say that his only powers were those referred to in s. 187 (3) of the Land Revenue Act.

The first argument advanced before us in this appeal is that the second appeal has been decided without consideration of the provisions of the Land Revenue Act and that Govind Singh was appointed lambardar-gumashta in due conformity with the Act. Following on this it is contended that the powers of a lambardar-gumashta are circumscribed by the provisions of the Act and that he is limited to nothing more than executing the duties enumerated in s. 188 (1). With the greatest respect we have no doubt that Govind Singh was duly appointed a lambardar-gumashta and not specifically as a general agent, and this is not contested on behalf of the defendant-respondent. If the lambardar is a minor and no lamdardar-gumashta is appointed, then there is no one who is under any statutory obligation to carry out the duties of his office. It is no doubt unfortunate that the Tahsildar, in his order (Ex. D 3), which it is admitted is an order appointing Govind Singh as lambardar-gumashta, has concluded with the words

"I, therefore, appoint minor Brijmohan guardian Mst. Chandanabai mother as lambardar and Govind Singh as gumashta on no remuneration."

This does not, however, mean that Govind Singh was appointed as an ordinary agent, but it is a specific appointment as lambardar-gumashta under s. 187 (3) of the Land Revenue Act. The Tahsildar was dealing with an application to appoint not only a lambardar but a lambarar-gumashta as the proposed lambardar was a minor. This is clear from Ex. D-5, a copy of a statement by Mst. Chandnabai's Counsel in making the application. In the course of the application he says: "As he (Brijmohan Singh) is a minor, Govind Singh be appointed a gumasta lambardar." In Ex. D-3 itself the Tahsildar quotes the rules for the appointment of a lambardar-gumashta and states that the conditions are satisfied in the case of Govind Singh. Knowing that he was dealing with an application for the appointment of a lambardar-gumashta, he has in parts of the order referred to him as gumasata in terms of the colloquial abbreviation which is common in Revenue Courts when they are in no doubt as to the question with which they are dealing. Exhibit P-2, which was filed by the plaintiff, is a copy of an extract from the Lambardari Register filed for the purpose of showing that Brijmohan Singh is the lambardar. In the column where the details of the gumashta, if any, appointed under r. IV, are entered, it is recorded that Govind Singh is appointed as lambardar-gumashta, and the authority quoted is the order set out in Ex. D-3. A Revenue Officer has no authority to decide the question of a private appointment of an agent when the proprietary body cannot agree as to who that agent shall be. The case then, must be decided on the question as to the extent of the powers of a duly appointed lambardar-gumashta.

Section 187 (3) runs :

"If the lambardar is a minor or unfit to perform the duties of the office through any infirmity of body or mind, or is a female who is unable to perform such duties, such Revenue Officer shall appoint a lambardar-gumashta for the purpose".

Sub-section (1) of the same section runs :

"Subject to rules made under s 227, there shall be appointed one or more lambardars for each mahal or patti to perform the duties imposed, and exercise the powers conferred on the lambardar by this Act."

It is contended that while a lambardar is appointed not only to perform the duties imposed but to exercise the powers conferred, a lambardar-gumashta is appointed only to perform the duties of the office. Section 188 of the Land Revenue Act runs as follows :

"(1) It shall be the duty of every lambardar—

(a) to collect and pay into the Govt. treasury, or if a sadar-lambardar has been appointed, to the sadar-lambardar so much of the land-revenue as may, under s. 187, sub-s. (5), be payable through him ;

(b) to collect and pay to the mukaddam, or into the Govt. treasury, as the Deputy Commissioner may direct, all sums of money payable through him either solely or jointly with other lambardars, by the proprietors of the mahal or patti for which he is appointed, on account of the remuneration of the mukaddam or village-watchman, or on account of any expenses which the mukaddam is authorized to recover from the lambardars of his village ;

(c) to assist the mukaddam in obtaining all particulars which he is bound to report under this Act or any other enactment for the time being in force.

(2) The lambardar shall, in the mahal or patti for which he is appointed,

(a) be deemed to be the landlord within the meaning of the Central Prov. Ten. Act, 1898 ;

(b) exercise the powers of the proprietors in matters relating to the village abadi and the enjoyment of their rights and privileges by tenants and others over the waste land of the village, including the grazing of the cattle thereon ;

(c) collect the village profits and render an account of the same to the proprietors within six months of the close of the agricultural year; and

(d) if necessary, institute suits and take other proceedings relating to the exercise of the aforesaid powers and against trespassers on the common property."

It is argued that sub-ss. (1) and (2) of s. 188 draw a sharp distinction between the duties and the powers of a lambardar and that a lambardar-gumashta's authority is confined to carrying out the duties enumerated in sub-s. (1) and that he has no authority to exercise any of the powers set out in sub-s. (2). Now, in our opinion, it is impossible for a lambardar-gumashta to carry out the duties imposed on him under sub-s. (1) without exercising the authority which is conferred by certain parts of sub-s. (2). He cannot, for instance, collect and pay into the Govt treasury or to the sadar-lambardar the Govt. revenue unless he has power to collect the rents or to collect the village profits. We cannot accede to the argument that sub-s. (1) (a) empowers the lambardar-gumashta to collect that proportion of the rents which would constitute the revenue payable. Even if this were correct, the revenue payable to Govt. is not assessed on rental collections alone but also on the siwai income of the village which, ex-hypothesi on the argument advanced, the lambardar-gumashta is prohibited from collecting as this is one of the powers enumerated in sub-s. (2) (c). It is also to be noted that the collection of rents and the general management of the village, in which it is now argued that the lambardar-gumashta cannot interfere, was admitted in the pleadings as being part of Govind Singh's duties. It has been emphasized that the side-heading to sub-s. (1) is "Duties of lambardars" and that to sub-s. (2) is "Powers of lambardars". It is a well-known rule of interpretation that the Courts are not entitled to look at the side-headings to sections of a statute in interpreting the statute. The Legislature is not responsible for the side-headings, and indeed sub-s. (2) is not confined to powers alone. The distinction which it is sought to make between sub-ss. (1) and (3) of s. 187, is really based on the unacceptable proposition that regard can be had to the side-headings of s. 188, and in our judgment the phrase in sub-s. (3), of s. 187, "the duties of the office" is sufficiently wide to cover both the phrases "the duties imposed' and "the powers conferred" in sub-s. (1) of that section. Where the lambardar-gumashta's activities limited to the duties imposed under s 188 (1), the anomalous position might arise that a lambardar under the disability of minority might refuse to collect rents or village profits and yet the lambardar-gumashta would remain liable for the collection of the land revenue which is assessed at a proportion of the village profits. Again, if the lambardar retains these powers, he can only exercise them through some agency. It is contended that a minor acts through his guardian. It cannot, however, for a moment be supposed that the guardian of a minor can exercise the powers of a lambardar in relation to the proprietary body. The power of a lambardar to act through a guardian is nowhere recognised in the Land Revenue Act, the only provision for the exercise of the powers of a lambardar who is under a disability is through a duly appointed lambardar gumashta. An illustrative example of the impossibility of any contrary position may be afforded. A lambardar may be a female provided she is not unable to perform the duties of her office; a purdanashin woman would be such a female. A purdanashin woman, however, may be the guardian of her minor son, and if a minor lambardar is entitled to act in revenue matters through his guardian, the position would then be reached that a woman who is by statute unable to be appointed a lambardar herself can exercise all the powers of a lambardar on behalf of her minor son. The only other position between these two alternatives, namely, that a minor lambardar can exercise powers as lambardar through his guardian and that the powers are delegated to a lambardar-gumashta, assuming that the lambardar gumashta's powers are limited to those exercisable under s. 188 (1), is that these powers shall be put into commission among the proprietary body and that a minor lambardar cannot act as the agent of the proprietary body. The position would then be reached that in so far as sub-s. (1) of s. 188 is concerned, the Revenue Officer is empowered to appoint an agent for a lambardar under a disability, but for the purposes of powers enumerated in sub-s. (2) the proprietary body has no agency at all. The position would be chaotic, and the proposition is as unacceptable as is that of the guardian of a minor lambardar exercising the requisite authority on behalf of the other co-sharers.

The true position is, as we have held in Nilkanth v. Vishwanath 192 Ind. Cas. 291 (1), that the powers are necessarily given to the person who is to perform the duties, and the apparent distinction between the two, to which colour is given by the unfortunate side-headings to the section, is that sub-s. (1) deals with the functions of a lambardar vis a-vis the Govt. and sub-s. (2) with his functions vis-a-vis the proprietary body. But it is the same person who performs both the functions, whether he be a lambardar or a lambardar gumashta appointed because of the lambardar's disability. The granting of leases is within those powers as much as is the collecting of rents or the acceptance of surrenders.

Section 189 (1) of the Land Revenue Act deals with the removal of sadar-lambardars, lambardars or lambardar-gumashtas, and four sets of circumstances on which the Deputy Commissioner may act are recorded. It is contended that not all of these four circumstances can apply in respect of the three persons specified. The circumstances are:

"(a) on his ceasing to have a proprietary interest in the mahal or patti; or (b) for bad character or gross misconduct; or
(c) for neglect or improper discharge of the duties imposed on him under this Act or under any other enactment for the time being in force; or (d) for negligent or improper exercise of his powers under sub-s. (2) of s. 188."

It is contended, for instance, that (d) obviously does not apply to sadar lambardars and that therefore it should be held that as (c) and (d) refer respectively to sub-s. (1) and (2) of s. 188 (d) cannot apply to a lambardar-gumashta either. This, however, does not follow, since the premise is faulty. A sadar lambardar is also a lambardar and is not merely a channel for the payment of revenue from other lambardars, and consequently (d) can also apply to a sadar-lambardar. It is also urged that (a) does not apply to a lambardar gumashta, since by the rules it is not essential for him to have a proprietary interest in the mahal or patti, but that it is only considered desirable that he should do so. Here again the argument is faulty. The section is not mandatory but permissive, and if a lambardar-gumashta has been appointed who has a proprietary interest in the patti and subsequently loses that interest, it is open to the Deputy Commissioner to remove him on that ground. In fact the apparent distinction between (c) and (d) in sub-s. (1) of s. 189 is merely the distinction we have already pointed out between sub-s. (1) and (2) of s. 188, and the Deputy Commissioner can remove a sadar-lambardar, a lambardar or a lambardar-gumashta either because he ceases to have a proprietary interest, or on account of his bad character, or gross misconduct, or because he is neglectful in the discharge of his duties (1) vis-a-vis the Govt. and (2) vis a-vis the proprietary body. Were the circumstances on which a removal from office could be founded not general to all the persons specified in the sub-section, that sub-section would have been differently drafted. The argument advanced has no force.

The conclusion, then, is that the judgment of the learned Chief Justice must be upheld, and in consenting to the transfer between Sonya and the defendant by means of accepting a surrender and contemporaneously granting lease, Govind Singh, the lambardar-gumashta, was acting within his statutory powers. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 45.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Suit under—Decree held cancelled deed and not merely declared it void between creditors and parties to deed—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 182—Deed void ab initio—Limitation is not stopped.

A decree was passed in a suit to set aside a deed of assignment, brought by the creditors under s. 53, that the deed of assignment was bogus and fraudulent and declaring it as cancelled and of no effect against the creditors:

Held, that the Court intended to cancel the assignment and not merely to declare it void in part leaving it effective as between the assignors and the assignee and ineffective only against the creditors.

[Proper form of decree in such cases stated.]

The darkhasts filed by the assignee are ineffective to prevent limitation running, only if the assignment was void ab initio If the effect of the decree is merely to cancel the assignment as from the date of the suit it prevents running of limitation.

S. A. from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Sholapur, in Appeal No. 80 of 1936.

Mr. P. K. Padhye for Mr. K. A. Padhye, for the Appellants.

Mr. M. G. Chitale, for the Respondents.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal from an order of the Assistant Judge of Sholapur which raises question of law. The material facts are that on June 23, 1924, one Krishnaji, the father of the present appellants, obtained a mortgage instalment decree, and his successors are still trying to enforce it. In 1926, and again in 1927, darkhasts were filed by Krishnaji or his heirs, which would have the effect of keeping the decree alive. On January 23, 1930, the guardian of the present appellants, who are the heirs of Krishnaji, assigned the decree to one Bawadhankar by deed, and in 1930, and again in 1934, the assignee filed darkhasts, which, if effective, would again have the effect of keeping the decree alive. In 1932, a creditor of Krishnaji filed a suit against the present appellants and their assignee for a declaration that the assignment to Bawadhankar was void against creditors, and on June 30, 1934, an order was made in favour of the plaintiff. The exact terms of the order I will refer to presently. Thereafter the present appellants filed this darkhast on the basis that the assignment to Bawadhankar had been set aside and therefore the right to execute the decree had revested in them. The trial Court directed the darkhast to proceed, but in appeal the learned Judge reversed that finding and declared that the appellants had no right to institute the present execution proceedings. He took the view, that although s. 53, T. P. Act, refers only to immovable property, and the Court has to deal in this case with a decree, still a suit to set aside an assignment of a decree must be dealt with by Courts on principles analogous to those governing suits under s. 53, and that an assignment void under s. 53, is only void as against the creditors of the assignor, and is effective as between the assignor and the assignee. He held therefore, that the assignment was still effective as against the assignors and therefore they could not enforce the decree, the subject-matter of the assignment.

The question must really turn on the meaning and effect of the order made by the Court in the suit to set aside the assignment. Now, there are, at any rate, two possible forms of order which may be made in a suit to set aside a settlement brought by creditors under s. 53, T. P. Act. The forms will be found in Seton's Judgments and Orders, Edn., 7, pp. 2280 and 2281. The first form provides for a declaration that the indenture of settlement is fraudulent and void as against creditors, and an order that the defendant do deliver up the indenture to the plaintiff to be cancelled, Under an order in that form the impeached document is cancelled. The other form provides for a declaration that the identure of settlement is void as against the plaintiff and other creditors of the defendant, and an order that the trustees of the settlement do join and concur in all acts and things necessary for making the property comprised in the said indenture available for satisfying the claims of the plaintiff and of other creditors of the settlor, as shall be directed by the Judge, at chamber in case the parties differ. Under a decree in that form the settlement is not cancelled; it remains in force and the rights of the creditors are enforced under it. Now, the decree which was made in the present case is a good illustration of the loose and inefficient manner in which decrees in the mofussil are, habitually, I am afraid I must say, drawn up. The decree was in these terms:

"It is hereby declared that the deed of assignment dated January 23, 1930, and the deed of correction dated June 19, 1930, passed by the mother of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in the name of defendant No. 3 are bogus and fraudulent and they are hereby declared cancelled and of no effect against the plaintiff and other creditors of defendants Nos. 1 and 2."

It would be difficult to find any form of words better calculated to raise doubts as to what decree the learned Judge really intended to make. Did he intend to cancel the assignment altogether or only as against the creditors? He first of all declares that it is bogus and fraudulent. Well, if it is bogus, it never had any effect at all, and it would be unnecessary to cancel it. But the rest of his judgment shows that he did not intend to hold that it was bogus in the sense of not having any effect at all in law. Then he says, "It is hereby declared cancelled and of no effect against the creditors." Well, you cannot cancel a document in part. You may declare a document to be invalid in part and give effect to it on that basis; but if a document is cancelled, it must cease to have any effect. Reading the whole order, I think the learned Judge intended to declare that the settlement was cancelled, and that is confirmed by the provision which follows in the order, namely, that the decrees mentioned in the assignment, which include the suit decree, may be attached by creditors of the assignors against the assignors. It is difficult to see how the decrees could be attached against the assignors unless they had become revested in the assignors. So that, taking the decree as a whole, I feel no doubt that the learned Judge intended to cancel the assignment and not merely to declare it void in part leaving it effective as between the assignors and the assignee and ineffective only against the creditors. If that is so, the assignors, the present appellants, can enforce the decree. It is suggested further that the darkhasts filed by the assignee were ineffective to prevent limitation running, but that would only be so if the assignment was void ab initio, and as I have already said the effect of the decree is merely to cancel the assignment as from the date of the suit. I think therefore that the appellants are entitled to execute the decree. The appeal, therefore, will be allowed with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

N. J. Wadia, J.—I agree.

Principal and agent—Suit against agent for accounts—Agent residing elsewhere—Cause of action, if arises where principal resides—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 213—Demand should be made on agent at his place of business.

The principle that the debtor is bound to seek out his creditor and pay his debt) is not applicable in India for the purpose of determining the local jurisdiction of a particular Court. Even assuming that this English rule either in terms or by analogy could be applied in this country, it cannot be extended to a case, where the contract itself is not one of loan but one of agency. Where, therefore, a principal sues the agent for accounts it cannot be said that the cause of action arises at the place where principal resides. 80 Ind. Cas. 661 (1), relied on, 102 Ind. Cas. 610 (2), explained.

Section 213, Contract Act imposes the duty "on demand" by the principal. If anything, these words suggest that the demand should be made on the agent at his place of business. [p. 82, col. 1.]

C. R. P. to revise decree of the District Court, Ganjam in C. M. A. No. 66 of 1935.

Mr. B. Jagannadha Das, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Ch. Raghava Rao and M. Sriramamurthi, for the Respondent.

Order. — This civil revision petition arises out of a suit for accounts filed by a principal against his agent. Both the Courts have held that no part of the cause of action arose within the limits of the Chicacole Munsif's Court's jurisdiction and the plaint has been returned for presentation to the proper Court, as the conditions of cls. (a) and (b) of s. 20, Civil P. C., are not satisfied in the present case. The learned Counsel for the petitioner contends that either as a matter of law or even as an inference of fact as to the intended place of performance of the contract, I should hold that the cause of action arose in whole or in part within the Chicacole Court's jurisdiction. I am unable to accede to this contention. As pointed out by the learned District Judge, the reasoning in Tika Ram v. Daulat Ram (1) where a very similar question arose, is clearly in favour of the view taken by the Courts below.

Mr. Jagannadha Das, the learned Counsel for the petitioner, has mainly relied on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Soniram Jeetmul v. R D. Tata & Co. Ltd. (2). I am not able to accept his interpretation of that judgment. It is difficult to read that decision as laying down that as a rule of law, the principle that the debtor is bound to seek out his creditor and pay his debt is applicable in this country, even for the purpose of determining the local jurisdiction of particular Court. Their Lordships have taken care to indicate at the end of the judgment that their decision was based upon the inference drawn from the terms of the contract itself or from the necessities of the case. In an earlier part of the judgment, they referred to the fact that the business transactions out of which the outstanding debts arose in that case took place in Rangoon, where a branch of the plaintiff's firm was situate, and from this circumstance and from the nature of the contract, they seem to have drawn the inference that the parties must have intended by necessary implication that the moneys were to be paid in Rangoon. Even assuming that the English rule either in terms or by analogy could be applied in this country. I am unable to extend it to a case like the present, which did not arise out of the relationship of debtor and creditor. Where the contract itself is one of loan, it might be possible to presume that payment must have been intended to be made at the creditor's place. But here the contract was one of agency and it is not disputed that though the principal was resident at Chicacole, the agent who was a resident of Coconada was to attend to business to be done at Coconada.

It seems to be necessary to emphasize the distinction between the contract itself and legal obligations or liabilities incidental to the contract of principal and agent; within the meaning of s. 182, Contract Act, the agent was employed to do acts for the principal at Coconada. The legitimate inference therefore is that the contract was to be performed at Coconada. It is only as one of the legal incidents arising out of the relationship of principal and agent that s. 213 provides that an agent is bound to render proper accounts to the principal. This cannot be read as if there was an express contract between the parties to render accounts so as to support the inference that the intention must have been to render the account at the principal's place. It is also noteworthy that the section imposes the duty "on demand" by the principal. If anything, these words suggest that the demand should be made on the agent at his place of business. Every consideration of convenience is also in favour of that view because the books relating to the business of the agency and all material information in connection therewith might naturally be expected to be available at the place of business of the agency.

Mr. Jagannadha Das contended that if on the taking of accounts it should be found that money was payable by the agent to the principal, the relationship of debtor and creditor would arise between the agent and the principal. But it is equally conceivable that on the taking of accounts it might be found that money would be payable by the principal to the agent. It does not therefore seem to me right to base any inference as to the intended place of performance on the possible result of the taking of accounts. It is the nature of the main contract that must determine the intended or presumed place of performance. The suit itself has been rightly framed as a suit for accounts and it is on that basis that the question of jurisdiction must be determined. I am of opinion that the Courts below were right in the view they took that no part of the cause of action arose at the principal's place of residence, in the circumstances of the case. The revision petition fails and is dismissed with costs.

Persons belonging to the caste of Baidyas are not Ambhasthas.

An Ambhastha does not come under "Murdhavishikta and others" mentioned in s. 2, cl. 84, of Dattakamimangoha.

The words "so forth" in s. 2, cl. 1 include marriage. Haridas Chatterjee v. Monmotho Nath (2), relied on

A marriage by a Baidya girl with a Kayestha is valid according to local custom.

By custom the Hindus of the District of Sylhet are entitled to the benefit of the Muslim law of pre-emption. In order to entitle the plaintiff to a decree for pre-emption he has to prove that he made two talabs talab-i-mawasibat the 'first demand' and talab-i-isad the 'second demand' in accordance with the Muslim law of pre-emption. [p. 88, col. 1.]

Where the only question is, which set of witnesses is to be believed the findings of the trial Judge should not be lightly regarded on a mere calculation of probabilities by the Court of Appeal. [p. 86, col. 1.]

In a case involving a question of fact the decision of which depends on the reliance to be placed on the testimony of witnesses, the view of the Judge who tried the case and saw the witnesses is entitled to great weight. [ibid.]

A. from an original decree of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Sylhet, dated June 26, 1936.

Dr. S. C. Basak and Mr. Paresh L. Shome, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Gunada Charan Sen, Nripendra Chandra Das and Hamidul Haq, for the Respondents.

Nasim Ali, J.—Prasanna Kumar Das of villaga Ilashpur in the district of Sylhet was a Kayestha by caste. He married Swarnamoyee the sister of Sashi Mohan Das of village Rabidas (Lalkailash) in the said district, a Baidya by caste. He had no son. His only daughter Rajnandini (plaintiff in the present suit) was married to one Mohendra Nath Das. The latter was a griha jamata (resident son-in-law). His daughter had no male issue during his life-time. Prasanna Kumar was owner of considerable movable and immovable properties. He made his last will on September 1, 1919. The material terms of this will are these:

"Clause 1.—My...son-in-law Sriman Mohendra Nath Perkayestha shall become the owner in absolute right, of 4 annas share of the 16 annas of my movable and immovable properties.

Clause 2.—My only daughter Smt. Raj Nandini shall become the owner in possession, in absolute right of 4 annas share of the 16 annas of my movable and immovable properties.

Clause 3.—Having had no male issue, for the purpose of preserving my family line I became desirous of taking a son in adoption and have brought in Sriman Aswini Kumar Das (defendant No. 1 in the present suit) son of Srijut Sashi Nath Choudhury, of mauja Rabidas, Pargana Dulali, to my ancestral dwelling house. On account of ill-health, I have not been able up to this day to perform the rites of poshajag (sacrificial rights of adoption) duly and according to the Shastras (scriptures) in connexion with the taking of a son in adoption. If the said rites remain unperformed owing to my sudden death, then I empower my wife Smt. Swarnamoyee Chaoudhurani to take in adoption on performing the rites or poshajag (sacrificial rites of adoption) after my death.

Clause 4.—After my death, whenever the rites of poshajag (sacrificial rites of adoption) will be performed by my wife from that very time the said Aswini Kumar Das shall become the owner in possession in absolute right, of the remaining 10 annas share of my movable and immovable properties. In default thereof, my wife shall remain in possession of the said 10 annas share in the right of enjoyment (for life).

Clause 6.—If after my death, the said Aswini Kumar be taken in adoption then until he completes the age of 22 years, my son-in-law Sriman Mohendra Nath Das and my widow Smt. Swarnamoyee Chaudhurani shall be the executors in respect of the management of the aforesaid 10 annas (share) of my movable and immovable properties"

Prasanna Kumar died on September 3, 1919. On October 8, 1920, Swarnamoyee and Mohendra applied for probate of the will. A son (Kaliprosad) was born to Rajnandini on November 12, 1920. Probate was granted to Swarnamoyee and Mohendra on April 1, 1921. On January 25, 1923, Swarnamoyee, Mohendra and Rajnandini jointly executed a registered Patta (Ex. 9) in favour of one Jafar Mridha for catching fish from certain beels appertaining to the estate of Prosanna Kumar for a term of six years stating therein that they were owners of the said beels in maliki right. On September 23, 1924 Swarnamoyee died.

In 1930, negotiations started between Rajnandini and Aswini Kumar (defendant No. 1) for an amicable settlement of the dispute between them relating to the title of the 10 annas share of the properties left by Prosanna Kumar. Certain drafts (Ex. 7, Ex. 7-A, Ex. 7-B, Ex. 7-C, Ex. 7-D and Ex. 8) were prepared. The terms of settlement contained in these drafts were these: "Aswini Kumar will give up his claims to the disputed 10 annas share on receipt of a certain amount. A portion of this amount would be paid in cash and for the balance Mohendra would sell to Aswini certain properties belonging to him."

While these negotiations were going on defendant No. 1 sold to defendants Nos. 2 to 5, 10 annas share of the properties which is the subject-matter of the present suit on July 31, 1931 by a registered deed of sale (Ex. A-1). In this kobala it is stated that out of the consideration the vendor received Rs. 8,500 in cash on the date of the execution of the kobala, and that the balance would be paid in two instalments later on. On December 10, 1931, defendant No. 1 sold to Rajnandini and Mohendra for a consideration of Rs. 22,000 and on the purchasers agreeing to the vendor remaining the owner and possessor of two annas share of the lands of Bolagunj Bazar his entire interest and share in the properties left by Prosanna Kumar excepting the properties sold by defendant No. 1 to defendants Nos. 2 to 5. Out of the consideration money of Rs. 23,000, Rs. 14,000 was set off against the price of certain properties belonging to Mohendra and sold by him on that day to defendant No. 1, Rs. 2,000 was paid by the purchasers in cash before the kobala and Rs. 5,000 was paid in cash on the date of the execution of the kobala. For the balance viz. Rs. 2,000 Mohendra executed a bond in favour of defendant No 1. On August 15, 1932, Rajnandini raised the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Sylhet.

The material allegations in the plaint are these: (1) Swarnamoyee had never any intention of taking defendant No. 1 in adoption. Immediately after her husband's death she gave out that she would not take defendant No. 1 in adoption; and sent away defendant No. 1 to his father's house. Since then defendant No. 1 is living in his father's house. (2) Swarnamoyee died without taking defendant No. 1 in adoption. (3) The father of defendant No. 1 is a very litigious man and is heavily involved in debts. Being led away by greed and with the evil motive of getting hold of the 10 annas share of the properties left by Prasanna Kumar he himself and his son defendant No. 1 on his advice began to give out and proclaim to the people that defendant No. 1 was the adopted son of Prasanna

Kumar. They came to the plaintiff and her husband and requested them to come to a settlement and also threatened them with various sorts of litigation if no amicable settlement were arrived at. Considering that in case of litigation the plaintiff would be put to unnecessary loss and on the other hand in the event of winning in litigation there would be no possibility of realising the cost in Court from defendant No. 1 who is without any means and considering that the defendant No. 1 and his father were very near relations of the plaintiff, the plaintiff in consultation with her husband agreed to come to an amicable settlement. Accordingly in June 1931 an amicable settlement was arrived at between both parties to the effect that defendant No. 1 would give up 10 annas share of the properties left by Prasanna Kumar in favour of the plaintiff and her husband by a deed of release and in lieu thereof the plaintiff and her husband would give defendant No. 1 some lands and some money in cash. In accordance with these terms the draft of a nadan patra and a kobala were made. Defendant No. 1 however on the advice of his father subsequently broke his promise and sold the properties mentioned in the schedule of the plaint to defendants Nos. 2 to 5 by a kobala on July 31, 1931.

Plaintiff came to know of this kobala on Sraran 20, 1338 B. S. (August 5, 1931) from her officer Ram Dulal Purkayestha and immediately on coming to know of the same performed talab-i-mahasibat according to the Muslim Law of pre-emption and instructed her officer Ram Dulal to duly observe the requirements of talab-i-isad on her behalf on going without delay to the house of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 and on the lands sold. Accordingly, the said officer without any delay went to the house of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 with witnesses and in their presence duly performed talab-i-isad on her behalf. The Muslim law of pre-emption has been prevalent from time immemorial in the district of Sylhet amongst the Hindus and Muslims. Even assuming that defendant No. 1 had any share in the plaint lands the plaintiff being a co-sharer in respect of the remaining share of the said lands she is entitled to claim the right of pre-emption. The defendants in collusion with one another, fraudulently stated Rs. 20,000 as the consideration money in the kobala contrary to the real state of things. Plaintiff has come to learn on enquiry that the price was fixed only at Rs. 12,000 and that Rs. 500 only was paid by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 to defendant No. 1 on the date of the execution of the kobala.

After selling the plaint lands to defendants Nos. 2 to 5, defendant No. 1 was about to sell the other properties left by Prasanna Kumar. Considering that the plaintiff and her husband would be ruined by being involved in various sorts of litigations if strangers purchased the other properties plaintiff and her husband on the advice of their relations and well-wishers purchased all the other movable and immovable properties left by Prasanna Kumar excepting the plaint lands from the defendant No. 1 on fixing the price thereof at Rs. 23,000. On these allegations plaintiff prays that a decree may be passed; (a) for declaration of the plaintiff's title to the aforesaid 10 annas share of the land etc. of the schedule, obtained by her by virtue of inheritance from her father, the late Prasanna Kumar Choudhury and for confirmation of the plaintiff's possession therein; (b) for a declaration that defendant No. 1 is not the adopted son of the late Prasanna Kumar Chowdhury and that defendant No. 1 has no title or interest in the lands described below and that defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 have no title and right to possession in respect of the aforesaid land (c) if, owing to the misfortune of the plaintiff, she is, for any reason, found, in the just decision of the Court, not entitled to the reliefs prayed for in items (a) and (b), above, then for declaration of the plaintiff's right of pre-emption in respect of the 10 annas share of the lands in claim and mentioned in the schedule below and for giving a decree to the plaintiff according to law, on directing payment by the plaintiff to defendants Nos. 2, 3, 4 and 5 of the real consideration money of their purchase.

On November 28, 1932, defendants Nos. 2 to 5 filed their written statement stating inter alia: (1) The father and the mother of defendant No. 1 gave over defendant No. 1 to the hands of Prasanna Kumar and his wife Swarnamoyee as adopted son. Prasnnna Kumar took defendant No. 1 to his own house, brought him up as his own adopted son and made arrangements for his education and decided that the name of the boy should be Prafulla Kumar Das. (2) Plaintiff's husband being very much aggrieved on account of Prasanna's taking defendant No. 1 as an adopted son tried his best to prevent the performance of the necessary ceremonies. (3) After the death of Prasanna Kumar, Swarnamoyee made arrangements for the performance of the ceremonies in accordance with the directions in the will on a certain day. Mohendra however did not allow the ceremony to take place on that date. (4) In view of the directions in the will of her husband Swarnamoyee was firmly determined to perform the necessary ceremonies on a subsequent day and actually performed the necessary ceremonies, took defendant No. 1 as the adopted son of her late husband and changed the name of the boy as settled by her husband. (5) Defendant No. 1 thereafter came to be known to the public by his new name as an adopted son of Prasanna Kumar. (6) After the death of Swarnamoyee, plaintiff and her husband began to ill-treat defendant No. 1. Thereupon defendant No. 1 had to leave Prasanna's house. (7) After defendant No. 1 attained majority he asked Mohendra to deliver to him all his movable and immovable properties and render proper accounts of the period of his executorship. Mohendra, however, did nothing. Defendant No. 1 being helpless offered to sell the disputed property to defendants Nos. 2 to 5 for a consideration of Rs. 20,000. Defendants Nos. 2 to 5 accepted this offer and purchased the property for Rs. 20,000. Out of this consideration only Rs. 9,000 still remain unpaid. (8) Plaintiff or her husband did not observe any of the formalities of pre-emption.

On January 16, 1933 defendant No. 1 filed his written statement. His defence in substance is the same as that of defendents Nos. 2 to 5. He stated inter alia that after the death of Prasanna, Swarnamoyee on the strength of the permission given by Prasanna took him in adoption in the month of Chaitra 1328, duly and according to the Shastras on performing the rites of poshajag, changed his former name into Prafulla Kumar and since then he is known to the public as the adopted son of Prasanna Kumar. He also stated that defendants Nos. 2 to 5 paid him only Rs. 500 as the consideration of the kobala executed by him on the date of the kobala and that subsequently he was paid Rs. 2,500 only by defendants Nos. 2 to 5. He further stated that if the plaintiff be found to be entitled to the relief of pre-emption he was entitled to get Rs. 17,000 (the balance of the consideration) out of the money to be paid by the plaintiff for pre-empting the disputed lands. On these pleadings fourteen issues were raised in the suit of which the following are only material for the purposes of this appeal : (1) Is defendant No. 1 the validly adopted son of late Prasanna Kumar Chowdhury ? (2) Has the plaintiff observed the legal formalities as required by the law of pre-emption ? (3) What was the consideratian of the kobala which defendant No. 1 executed in favour of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 on July 31, 1931 ; What was the amount paid on the date of the execution of the kobala by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 to defendant No. 1 ? The Subordinate Judge has answered issue No. 1 in the affirmative and issue No. 2 in the negative. As regards issue No. 3 his finding is that although Rs. 20,000 was mentioned as the consideration of the kobala only Rs. 12,000 was fixed as the actual consideration and that only Rs. 500 was paid by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 to defendant No. 1 on the date of the execution of the kobala. On these findings the Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal by the plaintiff.

The first point for determination in this appeal is whether defendant No. 1 was adopted by Swarnamoyee on Chaitra 30, 1328 (April 13, 1922) on the authority given to her by her husband. The finding of the Subordinate Judge that Swarnamoyee performed the adoption ceremony on Chaitra 30, 1328 B. S. (April 13, 1922) is based mainly upon the evidence of D. W. No. 2, D. W. No. 17, D. W. No. 11, D. W. No. 14 and D. W. No. 16. D. W. No. 2 is an old mukhtear of good position. His evidence is that he was invited by Swarnamoyee to the adoption ceremony but he could not attend. He is the brother of the sister's husband of Sashi Babu (the father of defendant No 1) and it is natural that he would be invited. D. W. No. 17 is a retried Govt. Officer. He also says that he got an invitation from Swarnamoyee to the adoption ceremony but he did not attend the invitation. He is the maternal uncle of Sashi Babu. It is natural that he would be invited. D. W. No. 11 is a Srotriya Brahmin and Tarka Nidhi. His evidence is that he was present at the adoption ceremony in the house of Ban Behari Goswami at Kurua and that Swarnamoyee took defendant No. 1 in adoption after performing the necessary ceremonies. He is an independent witness. The evidence of D. W. No. 14 is to the same effect. His evidence is that Swarnamoyee took defendant No. 1 in adoption in the house of Ban Behari Goswami in Kurua and that the name of the boy was altered at the time of the ceremony. He is an independent witness and is a learned pandit. D. W. No. 16, an old Pleader of the Sylhet Bar says that there was an adoption ceremony in the house of Ban Behari Goswami at Kurua; that he met Swarnamoyee at that ceremony and the father of defendant No 1 gave defendant No. 1 in adoption to Swarnamoyee. He is the brother of the father-in-law of Sashi Mohan, the father of defendant No. 1.

The Subordinate Judge who heard and saw these witnesses has believed their evidence. In a case involving a question of fact the decision of which depends on the reliance to be placed on the testimony of witnesses the view of the Judge who tried the case and saw the witnesses is entitled to great weight. (His Lordship discussed the evidence relating to the adoption of defendant No. 1 and proceeded). Where the only question is which set of witnesses is to be believed the findings of the trial Judge should not be lightly regarded on a mere calculation of probabilities by the Court of Appeal. (His Lordship resumed the discussion of the evidence relating to the adoption of defendant No. 1 and concluded that defendant No. 1 was adopted as a son by Swarnamoyee.) The next point for determination is whether the adoption of defendant No. 1 is valid according to Hindu Law. The contention of the plaintiff is that Prasanna Kumar was a Sudra and defendant No. 1 is a Vaishya and consequently the adoption of defendant No. 1 by Swarnamoyee as a son of Prasanna Kumar is invalid according to Hindu Law. Prasanna Kumar was admittedly a Kayastha and, therefore, a Sudra. There is no allegation in the plaint that defendant No. 1 is a Vaishya. There is no evidence also in this case to show that the natural father of defendant No. 1 is a Vaishya or claims to be a Vaishya. The contention of the plaintiff, however, is this: all Baidyas are Vaishyas. The natural father of defendant No. 1 is a Baidya, defendant No. 1 is therefore a Vaishya. In support of this contention reliance was placed upon a passage in the judgment in Ram Lal Sukul v. Akshya Charan (1). In that case a question arose as to whether a marriage between a Baidya and a Kayestha was valid. In that case a Kaysatha woman married a Baidya. The subordinate Judge who tried that case quoted the following text from 'Bishnu':

"That the Vaidyas in ancient times were like their fathers in spiritual energy by meditations and Yoga (communion). They were inferior to Brahmins and Kshatriyas and carried on work (Vedic ceremonial) like the Vaishyas. By gradual and gradual neglect of the work a Vaidya has become degenerated in the Kali Yuga wholly with a Sudra just as the Kshatrias and Vaishyas."

We have not been able to trace this text. When the matter came up in appeal in this Court, this Court observed:

"In regard to the title of Chandra Kanta Sen it cannot be disputed that his mother a Kayastha and therefore Sudra married his father a Vaishya. The ancient Hindu Law did not regard such marriages with the condemnation expressed by later authorities which have been accepted by our Courts so as to make children born from such unequal marriages illegitimate.

But however the law may be there is ample evidence set out in the judgment of the Sub-Judge on which it must be held that such marriages as in the present case are recognised by local custom in the District of Tipperah and that there is no instance on which their validity has been questioned."

The learned Judges in that case did not discuss the question whether a Vaidya is a Vaishya. They assumed in that case that a Baidya was a Vaishya and held that a marriage between a Vaidya and a Vaishya was valid under the local custom in Tipperah. This case is no authority for the proposition that a Vaidya of Sylhet district is also a Vaishya. Further, in the absence of any evidence this case does not establish that the natural father of defendant No. 1 is a Vaishya. The surname of a Vaidya is 'Dhana' (Sankha Sanghita Chap. II, V. 4) or Gupta (Cullocka's Commentary on Manu). But the natural father of defendant No. 1 is neither a 'Dhana' nor a Gupta (sometimes he has used after his name Das Gupta). Originally there were four pure castes amongst the Hindus—Brahmana, Kshatriya, Vaisyha and Shudra. Later on intermarriages having taken place amongst the four primitive or pure castes there became several mixed castes.

"The sons by women one degree lower than their husbands are name in order the Murddhabhishikta Mohishya and Karana. They are respectively begotten by a Brahamana on a wife of the Kshatriya caste, by a Kshatriya on a Vaishya wife, and by a Vaishya on a Shudra wife. (Vide Cullukabhatta's Commentary on Manu Ch. X, V. 8.)

The sons born of women two or three degrees lower than their husbands are as follows: From a Brahmana on a wife of the Vaishya class, is born a son called Ambashtha, on a Shudra wife, a Nishada named also Parasave. (Manu Ch. X, V. 8.)"

Plaintiff's contention is that a Baidya is an 'Ambhastha, that as his mother is a Vaishya he is a Vaishya and that he cannot be adopted by a Shudra. The contention raises three questions: (1) whether a Baidya is an 'Ambhastha'; (2) whether an 'Ambhastha' is a Vaishya and (2) what is the rule of Hindu Law as regards the adoption of an 'Ambhastha.'

Babu Shyama Charan Bidyabhusan while quoting Manu Ch. XX, V. 8, in Chapter on

(1) 7 C W N 619.

'Castes and Classes of the Hindus' in his Babhostha Dorpon has added the words "or Baidya" after the word "Ambhastha."

Risley in his book on the 'Tribes and Castes of Bengal' has stated :

"The name Vaidya does not occur in Manu but the Ambasthas are there said to be the offspring of a Brahman father and a Vaishya mother, and their profession to be the practice of medicine. According to this account the Vaidyas are anulomai (born with the hair or grain, i. e., in due order), the father being of higher caste than the mother. Another tradition describes them as begotten on a Brahman woman by one of the Aswini Kumars, the light bringing and healing twinhorsemen of Vedic mythology; and then oddly enough, goes on to say that they were reckoned as Surdas because their mother was of superior rank to their father, and their generation was consequently pratilomaja, "against the hair" or in the inverse order according to the succession of the castes. It would appear from this that the Aswini Kumaras were classed as Kshatriyas, and that, according to Brahmanical ideas, even the Gods were not equal mates for a Brahman maiden.

An expended version of the pedigree given by Manu is found in the Skanda Purana. This legend tells how Galava Muni, a pupil or son of Viswamitra, being greatly distressed by thirst while on a pilgrimage, was given a draught of water by a Vaisya girl named Birbhadra. The grateful sage blessed the maiden that she should soon have a son. Birbhadra demurred to this boon, on the ground that she was unmarried; but the rash oath, so characteristic of Indian mythology, could not be recalled, or could Galava himself put matters straight by marrying the virgin whose kindness had involved her in so strange a difficulty. For so it is explained, she had saved his life by the draught of water, and therefore he looked upon her in the light of a mother. A miracle was clearly in request. By the word of power of a Vedic mantra a wisp of kusa grass (Poa Cynosuroides) was transformed into a male child, variously known as Dhanvantari, Amrita Acharya, and Ambastha. He was the first of the Vaidyas, because he had no father, and therefore belonged to the family of his mother (Ambe). A number of analogous myths have been collected by a Bachofen in his two letters on "pueri juncini," and his method of interpretation, if applied to the present case, would lead to the conclusion that the tradition given in the Skanda Purana records an instance of female kinship : see Vol. I, pp. 46, 47."

Babu Golap Chandra Sarker in his Treatise on Hindu Law (Edn. 7, p. 149) has observed :

"The explanation of the mixed classes by supposing them to be the issue of inter-marriage appears to be a play of imagination ; where the abstract qualities of any two of the four tribes, were thought requisite for filling a particular occupation, persons following that occupation were supposed to be descended from the offspring of an intermarriage or illicit connection between a man of one tribe and a woman of the other. Thus, the Ambasthas or the members of the physician caste of Bengal are imagined to be a mixed caste sprung from the issue of a Brahmana father and a Vaisya mother : a physician resembles a Brahmana in his general culture and learning, and also a Vaisya, inasmuch as, he does, in a manner, trade with his learning, and so the class is fancied to be mixed of the said two tribes, the wrose quality being supposed to be derived from the mother and the better from the father. The number of castes appears to have increased with the increase of occupations, in the course of progress; for, later writers enumerate many that are not mentioned in the earlier works, and they describe the origin of the new castes according to their fancy."

No other authority was placed before us to show the orign of Baidyas. This being the position it is very difficult to say that Baidyas are Ambhasthas as mentioned in Manu's text quoted above. No authority was cited before us in support of the view that an Ambastha is a Vaisya. Assuming that a Baidya is an Ambastha, what is the rule of Hindu Law relating to his adoption ?

"He is called a son given whom his father or mother affectionately gives as a son being alike, etc." : Manu 9-168. The word 'alike' in Manu's tax according to Medhatithi means "alike by qualities suitable to the family." This interpretation, however, has not been accepted in Dattakachandrika and Dattakamimangsha. In these two books the word has been interpreted as "alike by tribe" :

"The adoption of a son by any Brahmin must be made from amongst shopindos or kinsmen connected by an oblation of food or on failure of these an Asopindo or one not so connected otherwise let him not adopt. Of Kshatriyas in their own class positively ..... of Vaishyas from amongst those of the Vaishya class, of Sudras from amongst those of the Sudra class; of all and the tribe likewise (in their own) classes only and not otherwise. (Saunaka.)"

By the terms 'Kshatriya and the rest' in the above text of Saunaka the inclusion of Murdhavishikta and others regulated by the same rule as the Kshatriya and the rest is meant: for a text of Sankha expresses:

"One procreated on a female Kshatriya by a Brahman is a Kshatriya even: on a Vaishya woman by a Kshatriya is a Vaishya even; by a Vaishya on a female Sudra is even a Sudra. (Dattaka Mimangsha s. 2, cl. 84)."

An Ambhastha therefore does not come under "Murdhavishikta and others" mentioned in s. 2, cl. 84 of Dattakamimangsha. The rule of prohibition contained in Manu's text and Saunak's text quoted above does not therefore apply to an 'Ambhastha'. The rule laid down in Saunaka applies to a Sudra and therefore to a Kayastha. Shama Charan Sarkar Bidyabhusan after reviewing the authorities has observed:

"There is therefore a preponderance of authority to evince that the Kayasthas whether of Bengal or of any other country were Kshatriyas. But since several centuries passed the Kayasthas (at least those of Bengal) have been degenerated and degraded to Sudradom not only by using after their proper names the surname "Das" peculiar to the Sudras giving up their own which is "Barma", but principally by omitting to perform the regenerating ceremony Upanayana hallowed by the Gayatri; (See Edn. 3 of Babhostha Darpan p. 670.)'

Here apparently the learned author was referring to verse 4, Chap. II of Sankha Sanghita where it is stated that a Shudra is called 'Das' and a Kshatriya is called 'Barma':

"The Baidyas are now divided into the following four sub-castes: (1) Rarhi, (2) Banga, (3) Barendra, and (4) Panchakoti, according to the parts of Bengal in which their ancestors resided. All of these are endogamous. A fifth endogamous group which, however, bears no distinctive name, comprises those Baidya families of the districts of Sylhet, Chittagong and Tipperah who intermarry with Kayashta and Sunris, the chidren in each case following the caste of the father. This parctice appears to be the only modern instance of intermarriage between members of different castes. It is said to have arisen from the reluctance of the Baidayas farther west to give their daughters to men who had settled in the country east of the Brahmaputra. Failing women of their own caste, the latter were compelled not only to marry the daughters of Kayasthas, but to give their own daughters in return . . . . The evidence of inscriptions shows that a dynasty of Baidya Kings ruled over at least a portion of Bengal from 1010 to 1200 A. D. To the most famous of these, Ballal Sen, is ascribed the separation of the Baidyas into two divisions, one of which were the sacred thread and observed 15 days as the prescribed period of mourning, while with the other investiture with the thread was optional and mourning lasted for a month... There has been some controvercy between Baidyas and Kayasthas regarding their relative rank... Putting aside the manifest futility of the discussion, we may fairly sum it up by saying that in point of general culture there is probably little to choose between the two castes, and that the Baidyas have distinctly the best of the technical claim to precedence. On the other hand, it would, I think, strike most observers that the Kayasthas are the more pliant and adaptive of the two, and have thereby drawn to themselves a larger share of official preferment than the more conservative Baidyas. (Risley Vol. 1, pp. 47 to 50)."

Swarnamoyee, the sister of the father of defendant No. 1, was married to Prasanna Kumar who was admittedly a Kayastha and therefore a Sudra. This marriage admittedly is valid according to local custom. Saunaka while propounding the form of the adoption says: "Having taken him by both hands . . . the boy bearing the reflection of a son." The word 'reflection of a son' in the above text of Saunaka has been interpreted in Dattakachandrika (s. 2, cl. 8) as the 'resemblance of a son' or in other words 'the capability to have been begotten by the adopter through appointment and so forth.' The words 'so forth' include marriage, Haridas Chatterjee v. Monmotho Nath (2) at p. 330. Defendant No. 1 could have been legally begotten by Prasanna through marriage with the mother of defendant No. 1, as such marriage would have been valid and legal. In cl. 3 of the will of Prasanna Kumar defendant No. 1 is described as 'Aswini Kumar Das.' The declaration (Ex. Q) which was made by the father of defendant No. 1 at the time of the adoption shows that he is a 'Das' and his wife a 'Dassi.' The father of defendant No. 1 signed the declaration as "Sashi Mohan Das." In the notice (Ex. G) which was published in the Sylhet Chronicle the name of defendant No. 1 was given as 'Aswini Kumar Das.' There cannot be any doubt therefore that the father of defendant No. 1 uses the surname 'Das' after his name (though he sometimes adds Gupta after Das). There is no evidence in this case that Uponoyana ceremony (investiture with sacred thread) which regenerates Brahmans, Khatriyas and Vaishyas and without which they become degraded with Gayatri (a sacred verse which is considered to be the essence of the Vedas which is imparted or taught to every youth of the three superior classes upon receiving his investiture with the sacred thread) is performed in the family of the natural father of defandant No 1. There is also no evidence that the period of mourning in Sashi Mohan's family lasts for fifteen days.

It view of these facts and circumstances I am of opinion that even if the ancestors of Sashi Mohan were Ambasthas or Vaisyas his family has been degenerated and degraded to Sudradom and that he is a Sudra. I therefore hold that the adoption of defendant No. 1 by Swarnamoyee was valid according to Hindu Law. It was contended on behalf of the defendants that by cl. (4) of Prasanna's will defendant No. 1 became entitled to 10 annas share of his property as soon as the adoption ceremony was performed by Swarnamoyee irrespective of the question whether the adoption is valid in law or not. There is much force in this contention. But as I have found that the adoption of defendant No. 1 is valid in law it is not necessary to express any opinion on this point. The last point for determination in this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to pre-empt the disputed properties from defendants Nos. 2 to 5. By custom the Hindus of the District of Sylhet are entitled to the benefit of the Muslim Law of pre-emption. It order to entitle the plaintiff to a decree for pre-emption she has to prove that she made two talabs-talabs i-masibatt (hereinafter referred to as the 'first demand') and talab i-isad (hereinafter referred to as the 'second demand') in accordance with the Muslim Law of pre-emption. (His Lordship discussed the plaintiffs' evidence regarding the two talabs and proceeded.) Under the circumstances I am not prepared to hold that the Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the plaintiff did not perform the two demands as required by the Muslim Law of pre-emption.

In view of this finding the question of the price paid or agreed to be paid by defendants Nos. 2 to 5 to defendant No. 1 does not arise. But an issue was raised on this point in the trial Court. The Subordinate Judge has recorded a finding on this point. It is therefore necessary to determine this point. In the kobala the consideration was stated to be Rs. 20,000. There is a recital in the kobala that Rs. 8,500 was paid in cash on the date of the execution of the kobala. The trial Judge has found that only Rs. 500 was paid on the date of the execution. I agree with this finding of the trial Judge in view of the evidence in the case. I hold that the real price fixed for the sale was only Rs. 12,000. The result therefore is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs to respondents Nos. 2 to 5. No order is necessary on the application presented on February 1, 1937.

Narsing Rau, J.—I agree and would add only a few words as to the evidence on the question of adoption. P. W. No. 12 Babu Ramesh Ranjan Das, a senior pleader of Sylhet, has stated in his evidence that Swarnamoyee, when she came to Sylhet to swear an affidavit in connexion with the probate of her husband's will, this must have been sometime in 1921, the date of the grant being April 1, 1921, said to him in the course of conversation: "Now that a son has been born to my daughter, what would I do by adopting a son?" In my humble opinion there is no sufficient reason to disbelieve the witness on this point: Swarnamoyee may well have made such a remark. It was not unnatural that for some time after the birth of a son to her daughter in 1920 she should have been asking herself whether there was any longer any object in exercising the power of adoption given to her. But it does not at all follow that she did not ultimately in 1922 overcome her initial doubts and decide to adopt. There is evidence, which has been believed by the learned Subordinate Judge and which we have no ground for disbelieving, that she did in the end perform the necessary ceremonies and make or complete the adoption.

Second Appeal No. 470 of 1937
April 30, 1940
VENKATARAMANA RAO, J.

R. K. PRESANNA VENKATESA RAO —APPELLANT

TRICHINOPOLY DISTRICT CO-OPERATIVE CENTRAL BANK, LTD. AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Company—Payment of gratuity to ex-servant—By-laws not providing for such payment—General Body, if can sanction it—Mere fact that Board of management is delegated power to frame by-laws, whether takes away General Body's power to sanction gratuity.

The payment of gratuity to an ex-servant is a matter only relating to the administration and management of the affairs of a company and so long as the General Body acts within the ambit of the Articles of Association, any act done by them in regard to the management of the company will be intra vires and not ultra vires. Even though the by-laws did not provide for payment of a gratuity because under the rules, the Board of Management could not grant it, still, it is always open to the General Body to sanction a gratuity which an officer according to the sense of the meeting of the General Body deserved. The fact that the board of management is delegated the power to frame by-laws does not take away the power of the general body to sanction any payment of gratuity in exceptional cases which have not been provided by the by-laws as framed by the board of management. This power is always vested in the General Body and by the mere fact of delegation, it cannot be taken away. [p. 90, col. 2.]

Judgment.—The question for decision in this second appeal is whether the award of the sum of Rs. 1295 paid as gratuity to defendant No. 2 by defendant No. 1 Bank in pursuance of a resolution of the General Body, dated November 23, 1935 is valid. The learned Judge in the Court below answered the question in the affirmative. The question is whether his view is sound. Mr. Rajah Iyer canvasses this view on two grounds: (1) The Ex-Secretary was permitted to retire on March 17, 1935 on production of a medical certificate which stated that he was suffering from chronic bronchitis and would not be in a position to attend to his duties for a period of six months. Under the Gratuity Rules which govern the payment of gratuity, the Ex-Secretary would not be entitled to claim any money as and by way of gratuity; because the rules contemplated certain conditions on fulfilment of which alone an ex-servant of the Bank can claim gratuity. However the Board of Management seems to have granted the gratuity but exception was taken by the Deputy Registrar of Coopetative Societies and the Board of Management was requested to get the sanction of the General Body to the said payment. After the receipt of that letter from the said Registrar, the Board of Management seems to have amended the by-laws by providing that in cases where the Board comes to the conclusion that an officer will have to be permanently incapacitated, though not supported by a medical certificate, it might pay gratuity. On the strength of the amended by-law, the Board of Management wanted to grant the gratuity but, however, by way of abandunt caution, they wanted to put the matter before the General Body. They accordingly framed a resolution to the following effect:

"To sanction a sum of Rs. 1,295 as gratuity to the Ex-Secretary, Mr S. R. Subramania Iyer as recommended by the Board in their Resolution No. 19 dated October 2, 1935."

The intended resolution was circulated to the share-holders and a General Body meeting of the share-holders was held on December 7, 1935 wherein they passed a resolution sanctioning the payment of the said gratutity. It is contended by Mr. Rajah Iyer that the Board of Management had no power to give retrospective opeartion to the amended by-law and any payment of gratuity in pursuance of such an amended by-law would be illegal. Therefore when the General Body passed a resolution sanctioning the said sum of Rs. 1295, they were simply sanctioning an illegal resolution of of the Board of Management. It must therefore be held that the payment was ultra vires. I am not inclined to agree with this contention. It cannot be denied that even though the by-laws did not provided for payment of a gratuity because under the rules, the Board of Management could not grant it, still, it is always open to the General Body to sanction a gratuity which an officer according to the sense of the meeting of the General Body deserved. In the particular case, how I construe the resolution of the General Body is this. They intended to pay the gratuity of Rs. 1,295 and treat the resolution communicated to them by the Board of Management as a recommendation to them. It is perfectly competent to them to grant the gratuity or to decline it.

There is a statement in the resolution circulated to the share-holders that it was recommended by the Board in Resolution No. 19, dated October 2, 1935. But that would not invalidate the payment sanctioned by the general body. At the meeting of the general body, the general body must have been appraised that according to the old by-laws, i. e., before they were amended, the payment of gratuity to the ex Secretary was not proper, that objection was taken by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies and that therefore the sanction of the general body was sought. Considering all these facts, the general body chose to pass the resolution which it is perfectly competent to do and Mr. Rajah Iyer has not placed before me any authority to show that it was ultra vires of them to do so. The matter only relates to the administration and management of the affairs of a company and so long as the general body acts within the ambit of the articles of association, any act done by them in regard to the management of the Bank will be intra vires and not ulra vires. It is next contended by Mr. Raja Iyer that the power to frame by-laws in regard to the payment of gratuity was delegated to the board of management and once they passed by-laws both the board of management and the general body were bound by them. I am not prepared to agree with this contention. The fact that the board of management is delegated the power to frame by-laws does not take away the power of the general body to sanction any payment of gratuity in exceptional cases which have not been provided by the by-laws as framed by the board of management. This power is always vested in the general body and by the mere fact of delegation, it cannot be taken away. Mr. Rajah Iyer has again not placed before me any authority in support of his contention. Only these two contentions were advanced by Mr. Rajah Iyer and I am clearly of opinion that both the contentions are unsustainable. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs (one set). Leave to appeal refused.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Civil Regular No. 103 of 1940
August 23, 1940
SHARPE, J.

U LUN—PLAINTIFF
U CHIT HLAING AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

Government of Burma Act 1935, ss. 27, 32, 41, 28, 5 (3), 42—Power of Speaker to declare whether seat has become vacant or not—Speaker so declaring, whether protected either by s. 27 (1), or by s. 32 (2)—Ordinance under s. 41 providing that it would cease to operate at expiration of six weeks from re-assembly of Legislature—Legislature re-assembling at 11 a. m., on February 15—Ordinance, when expires—Member appointed Second Lieutenant in Army, whether holds office of profit, when he has received no remuneration or his appointment ment is subject to His Majesty's approval—Scope of s. 5 (3)—It applies only as between Governor and Ministers regarding administrative matters—High Court, if can enquire, whether Ordinance promulgated under s. 42 is within Governor's powers—Ordinance providing that members of House of Representatives should not be disqualified, if they held commission in His Majesty's forces, if ultra vires of Governor's powers—Ordinance, when said to be promulgated—Ordinance providing that member whose seat has become vacant under Government of Burma Act shall nevertheless be restored to his former seat is void.

One must look at the particular statute which bring into being the Legislature whose powers and privileges are under consideration. In order therefore, to appreciate the position of the Speaker in Burma and to ascertain his powers and privileges, it is necessary to turn to the Govt. of Burma Act. He has no powers to declare whether a seat has become vacant or not. Attorney-General v. Theobald (3) and Harding v. Commissioner of stamps for Queensland (4), relied on. [p. 97, col. 1.]

Sub-s. (1) of s. 27, Govt. of Burma Act is designed to prevent members being sued for slander or prosecuted for defamation, and perhaps also, from being prosecuted for sedition, in respect of a speech made in the House. The Speaker's declaration that a member's seat was vacant, although made by words spoken in the Chamber, does not come within the purview of the sub-section. In making such a declaration the Speaker does a great deal more than merely rule upon a point of order arising under the rules of procedure of the House. Consequently he is not protected either by s. 27 (1) or by s. 32 (2). [p. 98, col. 2; p 99, col 1.]

Where an Ordinance under s. 41 provided that the Ordinance would cease to operate at the expiration of six weeks from the re-assembly of the Legislature, if there be no resolution by the House disapproving it, and the Legislature re-assembled at 11 A. M., on February 15:

Held, that the Ordinance ceased to operate at midnight on March, 28 and 29, as the law takes no notice of the fractions of a day.

[Case-law referred to.]

A person who is oppointed a Second Lieutenant in the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers holds an office of profit under the Crown in Burma, even if he has in fact received no remuneration or has not joined any particular unit of the Army in Burma or his appointment is subject to the approval of His Majesty. [p 101, col. 1.]

The correct reading of s. 5 (3), Govt. of Burma Act, is this. If any question arises whether any matter (a) is a matter as respects which the Governor is by or under the Act required to act in his discretion or to exercise his individual judgment, or (b) is not a matter as respects which the Governor is by or under the Act required to act in his discretion or to exercise his individual judgment —then the decision of the Governor in his discretion is final. [p. 104, col. 1.]

Section 5 (3) only applies as between the Governor and the Ministers in regard to administrative matters. It has nothing whatever to do with the Governor's legislative powers which are specified in a sub-part ("Legislative powers of Governor") of part IV ("Legislative") of the Govt. of Burma Act. [p. 105, col. 1.]

High Court is not precluded from enquiring whether an Ordinance promulgated by the Governor under s 42 is or is not within his powers. Sub-s. (4) of s. 42 makes it clear that the Court can go into the question whether any provision of an Ordinance promulgated under s. 42 is or is not void, on the ground that such provision, if it had been enacted in an Act of the Legislature, would not have been valid. An Ordinance providing that members of the House of Representative should not be disqualified for being members of the House if they held commissions in His Majesty's forces is not matter of defence, but is concerned with something which is a matter entirely for the Ministers. The Governor has therefore no power to promulgate such an Ordinance when the Legislature is then in session. [p. 105, col. 1; p. 104, col. 1.]

"Promulgation" of an Ordinance without doubt connotes the fact of making the public aware of the existence of the new law. In Burma, as in India and elsewhere, promulgation of a new law takes place through the medium of the Official Gazette. It is wrong for the notifications which appear in the Burma Gazette when an Ordinance is first published therein to say, as they do: "The Governor has promulgated the following Ordinance"; they should say. "The Governor hereby promulgates the following Ordinance." Consequently an Ordinance is promulgated on the date on which it is published in the Gazette. [p. 105, col. 2; p. 108, col. 1.]

Having regard to the terms of s 24 (2) the only meaning which can be assigned to s. 25 (1) (a) is that if an office of profit is not to disqualify its holder it must have been so declared before the time comes when the seat would, but for such a declaration by the Burma Legislature, have become vacant. An Act of the Legislature, or an Ordinance the effect of which is to provide that a member whose seat has become vacant under the Govt. of Burma Act shall nevertheless be restored to his former seat which is then vacant—such an Act amends the provision of the Govt. of Burma Act, and is beyond the powers of the Burma Legislature to enact or in the case of an Ordinance, beyond the powers of the Governor. [p. 106, col. 2.]

that reason very full arguments were addressed to me by the learned Advocates for the respective parties and I am very much obliged to them for their assistance. Among the matters into which I have had to enquire are the extent of the powers of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Burma and whether, and to what extent, he is subject to the jurisdiction of this Court, and the extent of the legislative powers both of the Governor (by way of Ordinances) and of the Burma Legislature. With such important questions falling for my decision, it is a matter of regret to me that I have had since the hearing was concluded but a few days for the preparation of this judgment, and even on almost all those days I have been fully occupied disposing of important cases under the Ten. Act and the Tenancy Ordinance. To-day is Friday, and on Monday not only does the long vacation of this Court commence but the Legislature reassembles. Therefore it was most desirable that I should deliver these two judgments to-day. With a title more time at my disposal I would have been able to condense considerably what I am about to say. No evidence has been called before me by any party, as the facts are not in dispute. They are either admitted or ascertainable from agreed documents. I will set out the facts at once. I shall do so somewhat fully, as there is no oral evidence on the record. On September 18, 1939, at a time when the Legislature was not in session the Governor of Burma promulgated, under s. 41, Govt. of Burma Act, an Ordinance called the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Ordinance, 1939 (to which I shall hereafter refer as "the first Ordinance,") s. 2 of which provided that a person should not be disqualified nor should be deemed ever to have been disqualified for being chosen as and for being a member of either Chamber of the Legislature by reason only that as a member of any of His Majesty's Forces he was holding or had held any office of profit under the Crown. At the time of the promulgation of this, the first Ordinance, the plaintiff, U Lun, was the member of the House of Representatives of the Burma Legislature for the constituency of Insein North, having been chosen, at the General Election in November 1936, in accordance with the provisions in that behalf contained in Sch III to the Govt. of Burma Act, 1935. Neither then nor subsequently was he subject to any disqualification rendering his seat in the House of Representatives vacant, save that he was, in March last, appointed a Second Lieutenant in the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers, as I shall presently mention, if indeed that was a disqualification. Whether or not the holding of such appointment did disqualify the plaintiff is one of the important questions which fall to be decided in the present case.

By sub s. (2) (a) of s. 41, Govt. of Burma Act, the first Ordinance ceased to operate at the expiration of six weeks from the first reassembly of the Legislature after its promulgation, or, if a resolution disapproving it was passed by the House of Representatives and agreed to by the Senate, then upon the resolution being agreed to by the Senate. The first reassembly of the Legislature after the promulgation of the first Ordinance was at 11 A. M on February 15, 1940, the first Ordinance was duly laid before the Legislature, but no resolution disapproving it was passed by the House of Representatives(a). In the Burma Gazette for March 16, 1940 it was notified, under date March 13, that the plaintiff together with his fellow member of the House of Representatives, U Ba Maung, the plaintiff in the other case, and together with some nineteen other persons, were subject to His Majesty's approval, appointed to be Second Lieutenants in the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers, with effect, in the case of the plaintiff and U Ba Maung from March 11. Neither the plaintiff, U Lun, nor his fellow Member U Ba Maung, has ever proceeded to join any unit of the Army in Burma, for training or otherwise, nor has either of them drawn any pay or allowances. All the other 19 persons whose appointments as Second Lieutenants were notified in the Burma Gazette of April 13, joined a unit at Maymyo or elsewhere, and it is agreed that the reason for U Lun and U Ba Maung not doing so was that they might be left free to discharge their duties and responsibilities as members of the House of Representatives, and in fact they continued to do so. At about 12 noon on March 29, during the course of the sitting of the House of Representatives, defendant No. 2 who was the Karen member for Thaton West and also the Deputy Speaker of the House, rose in his place in the Chamber and addressed defendant No. 1, who was and is the Speaker of the House of Representatives, in the following

"(a). Burma Gazette, Part I, p. 311: Defence Department Notification No. 185.

Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention that the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Ordinance, 1939, ceased to operate on March 28, 1940, and now we have two officers of the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers sitting in this House. If you refer to s. 25, Govt. of Burma Act, Sir, a person shall be disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either Chamber, if he holds any office of profit under the Crown in Burma. I understand that these two officers will be called for training for which they will be remunerated very soon as they have been appointed Second Lieutenants."

The Speaker enquired who the two members were, and defendant No. 2 gave the names of the plaintiff and of U Ba Maung, the member for Myitkyina, and added:

"Sir, if they are disqualified under s. 25, are they under s. 24 (a) entitled to sit in this House and vote? I am just drawing your attention to this matter."

The Speaker thereupon said that he thought that the question raised was a constitutional one and a very serious one too and suggested that the matter be considered after four o'clock. The Premier agreed, and added that he thought "the Advocate-General also should be present." The Speaker observed that, if a member is disqualified under s. 25, then under s. 26, he is liable to a fine of Rs. 500 in respect of each day he sits or votes, and he (the Speaker) added:

"Therefore, I say it is very essential that this question should be decided promptly and we shall take it up after four o'clock to-day."

Both the plaintiff and the other member named were present in the Chamber when defendant No. 2 so raised this point. When four o'clock came the Speaker addressed the Chamber in this way:

"Now we come to the point raised by U Hla Pe this morning whereupon the Premier said:

Sir, I have already supplied you with a copy of the Ordinance about which you may kindly inform the members."

to which the Speaker rejoined:

"I will read the Ordinance by his Excellency the Governor that has just been delievered to me. It reads thus:

and he read out a type-written document headed the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Ordinance (Ordinance No. V of 1940). This ordinance (to which I shall hereafter refers as "the second Ordinance,") was expressed to be made under s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act. The terms of s. 2 of the second Ordinance were identical with those of s. 2 of the first Ordinance. Having read out the document, the Speaker returned it to the Premier and then asked defendant No. 2 what he had got to say, whereupon the latter addressed him as follows:

"Sir, this Ordinance has just been promulgated, but when I drew your attention this morning there was no Ordinance in existence. The Ordinance first promulgated under s. 71, Govt. of Burma Act, ceased to operate on March 28. That is why I raised this point, Sir."

The Speaker then said:

"What has the Govt. got to say?"

to which the Premier replied:

"The Ordinance is quite clear, Sir. It operates with effect from March 28. We cannot go beyond the action which has been taken by His Excellency. We are precluded from doing so and it is outside our jurisdiction."

The Speaker then addressed the house at considerable length upon the matter and thereby initiated a discussion in which about a dozen members (including three or four Ministers) participated, several of them at even greater length than the Speaker, until, apparently by chance, there appeared the Advocate-General who suggested that he would like a little time to consider the matter. This was on a Friday afternoon and the Advocate-General asked if he could have time till Monday, the April 1. In the end this was agreed to.

The only other matters in connection with this long discussion in the Chamber that afternoon (March 29) which it is material to mention here are these: At one stage of the discussion defendant No. 2 interposed and called attention to a certain passage in Byrne's Law Dictionary under the heading "office of profit under the Crown." His interjection only occupies two or three lines in the official report and except for that one interjection on March 29, defendant No. 2 took no part whatsoever in the discussion either that day or on April 1. The other material matter to be mentioned in connection with March 29, is that almost at the end of that day the plaintiff, U Lun, said this:

"As a member charged as having been disqualified I think, I need give an explanation in this House," to which the Speaker replied:

"No, the time has not yet come for your statement. Only when you are leaving this House you can make a statement, because according to the rule a Minister who resigns will be permitted to make a statement, only when he tenders his resignation."

That attempt to intervene in his own defence is the only time upon which the plaintiff took any part in the discussion in the Chamber on this matter, except for a parting shot, as I may call it, which he made at the very close of the sitting on the 29th, when he remarked: "One thousand five hundred rupees or buy a vote." The plaintiff never again attempted to speak in his own defence.

On March 30, the second Ordinance was published in a Burma Gazette, Extraordinary, of that date. When the matter was resumed in the Chamber on April 1, the proceedings were opened by a lengthy and no doubt carefully prepared speech, or, rather, legal address by the Advocate-General. When he had concluded, a number of other members spoke on this question, again about a dozen of them, and one of the Counsellors to the Governor also spoke. Several of the members spoke at great length, and some of those (including at least one Minister) who spoke on April 1, had already spoken on March 29, while one member who had spoken in English on the first day spoke in Burmese on the second. The discussion in the Chamber was again a prolonged one.

It is to be noted that at no time whatever when the question of the plaintiff's position as a member was under consideration—that is to say, at no time either on March 29, April 1, or April 2 — was any motion or resolution ever before the House. It was not for or against any resolution that all these members were speaking, and it is said by the learned Advocate on behalf of the Speaker that all that was happening for these two days of lengthy discussion was the putting by defendant No. 2 of a point of order; and that the subsequent ruling given by the Speaker was upon that point of order It is not unimportant, perhaps, to say this about the various speeches which were made on March 29 and April 1: there was certainly no agreement amongst the various members as to whether it was the Speaker or the House who was to be urged to accept this or that particular view of the law which was being presented by the respective members. It is, I think, fair to say that although the various members who spoke knew quite well what they were talking about, yet few of them had any clear idea as to whether it was the Speaker or the House who was to do something about the matter. Even the Speaker himself, if one reads the observations which he interposed from time to time during the two days' discussion, thought that the matter was one for the House to decide (see, for example, his remarks at the bottom of p. 1536, and especially his remarks at the bottom of p. 1514 of Vol. VII of the Official Report of the Proceedings of the House), yet in the end he decided it himself. When the many speeches had come to a close upon April 1, the Speaker said that, as this was an important matter, he would like to consider it very carefully that evening and would give his ruling the following morning.

An interesting thing happened on April 1, after the Speaker had said that he would postpone his decision. First of all the House considered three or four Bills which have nothing to do with this case, and then there came before the House the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Bill. 1940, as passed by the Senate. The Minister for Judicial Affairs moved that that Bill be taken into consideration. This was the Bill which was destined to receive the Governor's assent four days later and to become thereby the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Act—Burma Act XII of 1940. Section 2 of that Act is in precisely the same terms as the two sections 2 of the two Ordinances which I have already mentioned. The Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Bill, 1940 (as passed by the Senate) was duly passed by the House of Representatives on April 1, but not until after a lengthy debate in which there took part both the plaintiff, U Lun, himself and also, and, I think, at greater length than any other member, the Speaker who addressed the Chamber not only in English for some time but also at length in Burmese, until Mr. Robertson, the representative of the Burma Chamber of Commerce, felt constrained to intervene in what he called the "rather embarrassing and difficult position" in which he found himself, with the object, not only of interrupting what had undoubtedly become a speech and a lengthy one—by the Speaker, but also of calling the Speaker's attention to the fact that by addressing the House in Burmese he (the Speaker)—as the Speaker himself was afterwards the first to admit—was not following the rules of the House which it was for him to enforce. Before, however, the House of Representatives passed the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualification) Bill, 1940 (as passed by the Senate) on April 1, a division was taken and amongst those who then voted were the plaintiff, U Lun, and also U Ba Maung, the two persons whose position as members was then under consideration by the Speaker. By their own votes they supported the attempt to maintain their own positions as members, and that at a time when the Speaker had their position as members under consideration.

The following morning, namely, April 2, the Speaker proceeded to give what he called his "ruling on the matter that was discussed yesterday." He commenced by referring to the matter as a point of order. He dealt at moderate length with the legal points raised and towards the end of his ruling he said this :

"In these circumstances I hold that the seats of U Lun and U Ba Maung have become vacant by their own actions.

Under s. 26, Govt. of Burma Act, they have become liable to pay a penalty of Rs. 500 per day of their sitting in this House from March 28, and I request the Govt. to take necessary action for such recovery from the said gentlemen.

It has been contended by the Govt. that the Speaker should not act as a Court under s. 27 (3) and in my view the chair can give a ruling on a point of order raised in the House under r. 46 (2) without fear or favour."

This is the "ruling" of which the plaintiff now complains. It is agreed by all parties that the plaintiff and also his fellow member U Ba Maung were both present in the Chamber as well in the afternoon as in the morning of March 29, and again on both April 1 and 2, although from a passage in the Speaker's address on March 29, it appears that they were absent for a part of the afternoon on that day. On April 5, the Governor gave his assent to the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Bill, 1940, to which I have already referred. In the Burma Gazette (Extraordinary) of April 6, the fact of the Governor's assent to that bill was published for general information, and it was also therein notified that the Governor had withdrawn the second Ordinance, as he had power to do under s. 42 (3) (b), Govt. of Burma Act. No proceedings have been taken against the plaintiff under s 26 of the Act. On April 24, the present suit was filed. By his plaint the plaintiff asks, first, as against both the defendants, for a declaration that he is (that is to say, that he was, at the time of the institution of the suit) a member of the House of Representatives and that his seat in the said House had not become vacant, and he also seeks, as against the Speaker only, both a declaration that the latter had no power to determine the matters disposed of by him in his "ruling" of April 2, 1940, and that the Speaker's declarations and findings are of no force or validity, and also an injunction restraining the Speaker from taking any steps pursuant to his declaration that the seat of the plaintiff had become vacant and from in any way interfering with the exercise by the plaintiff of his rights, duties, or privileges as a member of the House of Representatives. The contentions of the plaintiff, on the one hand and of the Speaker, on the other, can be stated quite shortly. I will deal later with the case in regard to defendant No. 2. The plaintiff says that he is, and at all material times has been, a member of the House of Representatives, that his seat has never become vacant; and, further, that in any event, whether his seat did become vacant or not, the Speaker had no power to decide whether it was vacant or not, and it was not for him (the Speaker) to declare it vacant. To this the Speaker replies, in the first place,

"that he is not subject to the jurisdiction of this Hon'ble Court or any other Court in respect of acts done by him in exercise of the powers vested in him as the Speaker of the House of Representatives under the law."

That is para. 11 (sic) of his written statement. This plea must, I think, be read in connection both with what he states in para. 2 of his written statement, namely, that he,

"apart from performing his duty as the Speaker of the House of Representatives to regulate the procedure or the conduct of business or maintaining order in the Legislature by enforcing the rule that only a member shall sit and vote in the House has neither denied nor is interested in denying the plaintiff's status" and also with what he states in para 10 (sic) which is

"that he by virtue of his office as the Speaker of the House of Representatives properly constituted under the law is the sole authority to give a ruling on the point raised 'by his co-defendant' and his ruling is final and conclusive and cannot in any way be questioned in any Court of law."

Finally he says—in para. 12 (sic)—that in any event the plaintiff was not, at the time the ruling was given, a member of the House of Representatives, as no Act of the Legislature or Ordinance could legally make him a member once he had ceased to be one. Incidentally the Speaker admits, by para. 1 of his written statement that the plaintiff was a member at the date of the plaint. This is obviously an error in drafting, and the case has been fought on the basis that the two defendants had denied and not admitted such allegation. The words of para. 11 (sic) of his written statement are expressly designed to afford the Speaker the immunity given him by s. 32 (2), Govt. of Burma Act. It is clear that, if all that the Speaker did on April 1, was to exercise the powers vested in him for regulating procedure and the conduct of business and for maintaining order, then he is not subject to the jurisdiction of this Court in respect of the matter now complained of by the plaintiff. The first question really is, on this part of the case whether the Speaker was not doing more than merely giving a ruling on a point of order. In my judgment he was doing more and a great deal more. It must be borne in mind that for two days he had been hearing arguments on the one side and on the other and the Advocate-General had given a carefully prepared address on the legal position. Reported decisions of various Indian High Courts had been cited to him, and, when all this had been done and after taking time to consider his decision, he delivered from the Speaker's chair a speech which was quite the equivalent of a judgment of a Court of law. I do not say that this speech of the Speaker (to borrow the words of Stephen, J., in Bradlaugh v. Gossett (1), at p. 285, when referring to the resolution of the House of Commons which gave rise to that case) is the judgment of a Court but it has much in common with such a judgment. The Speaker had concluded his speech in these terms:

I think that it would not be wrong to say that the Speaker sought to attract to himself something very little, if at all, removed from the status of a Court; and that is something directly opposed to the clear terms of s. 27 (3), Govt. of Burma Act. The fact that the Speaker concluded his speech by expressly stating that he was not acting as a Court but was only giving a ruling on a point of order does not to my mind in any way alter the true effect of the facts, which to my mind clearly show that, whether or not the Speaker was acting as a Court in this matter, he was certainly doing something more than merely regulating procedure or maintaining order. After all, in the extract from his written statement which I have just read, the Speaker is now definitely claiming to be the sole authority for deciding the question raised by defendant No. 2, which was whether the plaintiff's seat was vacant or not. I think it quite impossible to accept the contention put forward on behalf of the Speaker, that he was merely dealing with a point of order He was in my judgment claiming to have the right to declare whether any particular seat was vacant or not. I will now consider what the powers of the Speaker of the House of Representatives are and whether the right to declare when a seat in the House has or has not become vacant is one of them or not.

More than once during the course of his address to me Mr. Kyaw Din, on behalf of the Speaker, emphasised the fact that of course he was not contending in this case that the Speaker of the House of Representatives here in Burma has powers which are equal to those of the Speaker of the House of Commons in England. But it appears to me that in this particular matter the Speaker is claiming a great deal more than the Speaker of the House of Commons in England now claims, and something, indeed, to which no claim has been made by Mr. Speaker in England for at any rate some hundreds of years. It is important to distinguish between the Speaker of the House of Commons in England and the House of Commons itself. One of the privileges of the House of Commons in England is the right to provide for the proper constitution of the body of which it consists, by the issue of writs when vacancies occur during the existence of a Parliament. It is to be noted however that what I have just mentioned is the privilege of the House of Commons and not that of the Speaker. When a vacancy occurs in the House of Commons from any cause which legally vacates a seat, a warrant is issued by the Speaker, but it is only issued by him in pursuance of an order of the House. In order to get over the difficulty which otherwise would have arisen when a vacancy occurred during a recess, when the immediate authority of the House of Commons would not have been available, it was necessary to pass the Recess Elections Act, 1784. Without the statutory power given to him by that Act even the Speaker of the House of Commons in England had no power to issue a writ for the purpose of filling a vacancy. In the present case there was never any order of the House of Representatives. As I have already stated, no resolution or motion was at any time before the House. The Speaker does not suggest for one moment that he has taken the sense of the House on the matter at all. He listened to the arguments on the one side and on the other, as a Judge might do. In the end he delivered his decision, or whatever you like to call it. It was his own, personal decision at which he, after due reflection, thought fit to arrive. It is in no sense the decision of the House of Representatives; it is solely the decision of the Speaker. Let me at this point read one short passage from the judgment of Privy Council (delivered by Sir James Colville) in Doyle v. Falconer (2), at p. 218, which, it seems to me, should be borne in mind in the present connection :

"The privileges of the House of Commons .. .. belong to it by virtue of the lex et consuetuao Parliamenti, which is a law peculiar to and inherent in the two Houses of Parliament of the United Kingdom. It cannot therefore be inferred from the possession of certain powers of the House of Commons, by virtue of that ancient usage and prescription, that the like powers belong to legislative assemblies of comparatively recent creation in the dependencies of the Crown."

In other words, one must look at the particular statute which brings into being the Legislature whose powers and privileges are under consideration : see also Attorney-General v. Theobald (3), per Pollock, B, at p. 559 and Harding v. Commissioners of Stamps for Queensland (4), per Lord Hobhouse at bottom of p. 775. In order therefore to appreciate the position of the Speaker in Burma and to ascertain his powers and privileges, it is necessary to turn to the Govt. of Burma Act. The Speaker here is entirely the creature of that Statute : he is brought into being by s. 21 of that Act. A reading of that and the next succeeding section of the Act shows to my mind that the Speaker is what in ordinary parlance would be called a "Chairman." Section 29 of the Act provides for the making of rules, both by the House of Representatives and also by the Governor, for regulating, subject to the provisions of the Act, the procedure and the conduct of its business by the House of Representatives, and the Speaker is the particular individual charged with supervising the due conduct of the proceedings of the House of Representatives, for maintaining order therein, and for conducting and seeing that the business of the House is conducted in accordance with those rules. He is also, by Chap. XVI of the Rules of Procedure, made the medium of communication from the House of the Governor to one of the mediums of communciation from the Governor and the House. The Speaker of the House of Commons in England also has functions similar to the foregoing, but he has however in addition, other functions which are not bestowed upon the Speaker here. That there are strict limitations placed upon the powers of the Speaker of the House of Representatives is apparent from s. 27 (3), Govt. of Burma Act, which provides, as I have already indicated, that notwithstanding the right of freedom of speech in the Legislature and the other privileges accorded to members by the earlier provision of that section, nothing in the Act shall be construed as conferring, or empowering the Legislature to confer, on any officer of either Chamber (which, so far as this case is concerned, means the Speaker) the status of a Court, or any punitive or disciplinary powers other than the power to remove or exclude persons infringing the rules or standing orders, or otherwise behaving in a disorderly manner. A further instance of a limitation on the Speaker's powers is to be found in r. 42 of the Rules of Procedure for the House of Representatives, which provides that even if a question arises in the House whether a motion, amendment or question is or is not such as to require the prior sanction of the Governor, the Speaker cannot decide it, although he is presiding over the Chamber. I also call attention to the fact that it is not the Speaker, nor even the House, who can take proceedings under s. 26. I will at this point deal with a case upon which much reliance was placed by Mr. Kyaw Din, namely, Manindra Chandra v. Provas Chandra (5), a decision of Page, J. as he then was, which on appeal was upheld by Sanderson, C. J. and Richardson, J. The point of that decision can really, I think, be summed up in a single passage to be found in the judgment of Page, J. at the very top of p. 237* :

"..... where a question within the jurisdiction of a public officer entrusted with judicial powers has been bona fide entertained and decided by such officer, the Court will not interfere with his decision merely upon the ground that his decision was erroneous either with respect to facts or in point of law."

With that statement of the law I, with respect, entirely agree. The whole question in the present case is whether the Speaker was entrusted with the powers which he claims. If he seeks to rely upon the above decision of Page, J., he must admit that the powers which he exercised were judicial powers, but s. 27 (3), Govt. of Burma Act, denies him such powers. If he says, as in view of s. 27 (3) of the Act, he must do that he was not exercing judicial powers, then the above decision has no application to the facts of the present case.

In my judgment it is quite clear that the Speaker in Burma has no powers beyond those which are conferred upon him by or under the Govt. of Burma Act. Can it be found anywhere in that Act that the Speaker is given the power to declare whether a seat has become vacant or not? I cannot find such a power anywhere in that Act. I invited Mr. Kyaw Din to point it out to me, and he had to admit that he could not do so. He argued however that there was a gap in this regard in the constitution of Burma as it now stands. He said that no provision has been made either by the Govt. of Burma Act or by His Majesty in Council for determining who shall have the right to declare when a seat becomes vacant (the special case provided for by s. 24 (3) has no application to the present suit) and that there is neither an Act of the Burma Legislature nor any rules made by the Governor under cl. 15 of Sch. III to the Act dealing with this matter. And so Mr. Kyaw Din argued that there being, so he says, this gap the Speaker is impliedly made the person or authority who is given the power to declare whether a seat in the House of Representatives is vacant or not. I am not prepared to accept that argument. Such powers as are conferred by the Act upon the Speaker in Burma are so few, and are limited in so many ways, that I cannot hold that he has any such implied power as that for which Mr. Kyaw Din contends. In my judgment he has only such powers as are expressly conferred upon him by or under the Govt. of Burma Act. The power to declare whether a seat is vacant or not is admittedly not expressly conferred upon the Speaker by or under the Act. It is, in my view, unnecessary for me to decide whether there is or is not this gap in the constitution of which Mr. Kyaw Din speaks. It is enough for me to hold, and I do hold, that at any rate the Speaker has no such power of declaring a vacancy as he undoubtedly claims to have.

It is, I think, worth while looking to see what powers the Imperial Parliament conferred upon the Legislatures in other parts of the Empire, in regard to the declaration of vacancies in their Lower House. In the case of Canada it thought fit to confer upon the House of Commons in that Dominion such privileges and powers as might from time to time be defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, provided that they did not exceed those then enjoyed by the House of Commons in England: see s. 18, British North America Act, 1867. So that it was open to the Canadian Parliament to give the Candian House of Commons (not, be it noted, its Speaker) the right to declare when a vacancy arose. In Australia (and it is interesting to note that the "disqualification sections" of the Act dealing with Burma are very similar indeed in their wording to those of the Act dealing with Australia) the right of determining any question respecting the qualification of a member of the House of Representatives or respecting a vacancy therein, was (until the Parliament should otherwise provide) expressly given to the House (again not to the Speaker) in which the question might arise: see s. 47, Commonwealth of Australia Constitution Act, 1900. There is nothing in the Govt. of Burma Act which comes anywhere near the above-mentioned provisions of the Impeiral Statutes which brought into being those two Dominions. It is abundantly clear to me that the Speaker, the defendant in the present suit, is not invested with those powers to which he so plainly lays claim in para. 10 (sic) of his written statement.

One final point on this part of the case. The Speaker claims that he is not subject to the jurisdiction of any Court in regard to this matter, for the further reason that he is protected by s. 27 (1), Govt. of Burma Act. Mr. Kyaw Din raised this point in the course of his argument: it is not pleaded by the Speaker, although it is pleaded by his co-defendant. The point can be disposed of very briefly. The sub-section which I have just mentioned renders all members of the Burma Legislature immune from any proceedings in any Court in respect of anything said by them in the Legislature. In my judgment this sub-section is designed to prevent members being sued for slander or prosecuted for defamation, and perhaps also, from being prosecuted for sedition, in respect of a speech made in the House, I do not think that the Speaker's declaration that the plaintiff's seat was vacant, although the declaration was made by words spoken in the Chamber, comes within the purview of the sub-section. It must also be noted that s. 27 (1) opens with the words "subject to the provisions of this Act..." Section 27 (3), I have already pointed out, expressly declares that the Speaker is not to have "the status of a Court." So that if the Speaker purports within the Chamber to act as a Court, he will not, in my view, be protected by the provisions of s. (1) in regard to what he then says.

In the result, on this part of the case, I have come to the conclusion that the Speaker on Aril 1, last, did a great deal more than merely rule upon a point of order arising under the rules of procedure of the House, that he wrongly, and in excess of his legal powers, assumed the right to declare whether a seat was vacant or not, and that in respect of that wrongful assumption of a power which was not vested in him he is amenable to the jurisdiction of this Court, and is not protected either by s. 32 (2), Govt. of Burma Act, or otheswise. I now turn to the second main part of the case, which involves a decision as to whether the plaintiff was, either on April 1, when the Speaker gave his decision, or on April 24, when the present suit was instituted, still a member of the House of Representatives.

The first question on this part of the case is whether the plaintiff was holding an office of profit under Crown in Burma at the time when the first Ordinance ceased to operate. There is even a contest between the parties as to when that was. The first Ordinance was promulgated under s. 41, Govt. of Burma Act. By sub-s. (2) (a) of that section the first Ordinance ceased to operate "at the expiration of six weeks from the reassembly of the Legislature," there having been no resolution dispaproving it passed by the House of Representatives. The plaintiff contends that, as the Legislature reassembled on February 15, the Ordinance ceased to operate at midnight on March 28-29 which is six weeks from midnight on Februay 15-16, while the Speaker contends that the Ordinance either ceased to operate at midnight on March 27-28 or, at latest, at 11 A. M. on March 28, the latter being six weeks from the precise moment at which the Legislature reassembled. Although it would be necessary to decide this matter if I were now dealing with a case under s. 26, Govt. of Burma Act—for in such a case it would be necessary to ascertain the exact number of days on which the plaintiff sat or voted when disqualified, if he ever was disqualified—yet to my mind and on the view which I take of the case it is immaterial for the purpose of the present suit to decide this point, because (1) the matter now in dispute was never raised in the Chamber until about noon on March 29; so that there was in any event a gap between the time when the first Ordinance ceased to operate and the raising of the present question; (2) the second Ordinance expressed to have come into force with effect from March 28, which means midnight on March 27-28, and so, if it is valid, then it covers even the widest gap suggested by the defendants in this case; and (3) if Act XII of 1940 is valid, that also covers any possible gap, as the Act is expressed to come into force on the date on which the first Ordinance ceased to operate. But, as my conclusion on the point can be stated quite briefly and as the point was fully argued before me I will give my decision upon it. Had it been necessary for me to decide this question, I should have held that the first Ordinance ceased to operate at midnight on March 28-29. This appears to me to follow from the judgment of Sir John Romilly, M R., in Williams v. Nash (6), at p. 94 and from such a case as in Goldsmith's Co. v. The West Metropolitan, Ry. Co. (7). It also follows if one applies the test, suggested by Lord Tenterden, C. J. in Pellew v. East Wonford (8), at p. 144, of reducing the time to one day—a test which was more than once adopted by Parke, B: see Webb v. Fairminer (9) and Young v. Higgon (10), and which was adopted again in 1891, in fact twice in that year once by Wills, J. in Radcliffe v. Bartholomew (11), at p. 163 and again by Day, J. in South Staffordshire Tramways Co. v. Sickness and Accident Assurance Association (12) at p. 405. The well known maxim that the law takes no notice of the fractions of a day—and, except where there are conflicting rights between subject and subject for the determination of which it is necessary to ascertain the actual priority, such is the universal rule—is to my mind enough to dispose of the Speaker's alternative contention that the period of six weeks must be calculated from the actual hour namely, 11'0 A. M. at which the Legislature reasembled on February 15: In re Court Fees (13) and Tomlinson v. Bullock (14), and see per Lust, J. at p. 232, both also support this view.

It is said against the plaintiff that as he was appointed a Second Lieutenant in the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers with effect from March 11, he was from and after that date holding an office of profit under the Crown in Burma. Two things are said on his behalf: (1) that his appointment was made "subject to His Majesty's approval" and that His Majesty had not at any material time given his approval; and (2) that he (the plaintiff) has never been called upon to join any unit of the Army in Burma for training and has accordingly never drawn any pay or allowance. The whole position surrounding an "office of profit under the Crown" is as regards those holding commissions in His Majesty's Forces, an extremely difficult one. In England "the incapacity, if any, arises under s. 24, Succession to the Crown Act, 1707," to quote the words of the Attorney-General when bringing in a bill on September 2 last, on the eve of the present war; while on the following day in the House of the Lords the Lord Chancellor, moving the second reading of that bill referred to the "difficulty often in the minds of quite a number of lawyers" on this question.

The fact that the plaintiff before me has not in fact received any remuneration does not to my mind assist him, for the Stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds in England in fact now brings no profit to the steward, yet for very many years appointments to that office have been made for the express purpose of enabling members who wish to retire from membership of the House of Commons to accept an office of profit from the Crown so that their seats can be legally vacated. Nor in my opinion does the plaintiff obtain assistance from the fact that he has not yet joined any particular unit of the Army in Burma. His position, I think, is analogous to that of a person in England who holds a commission in the territorial force or reserve of officers. But let me first of all take the old Militia, the law relating to which was consolidated in the Militia Act, 1882. That Act provided for the calling up for a short annual training, and also for the embodiment (in case of imminent national danger or of great emergency) and for the disembodiment of the Militia. Section 38 of that Act expressly provided that the acceptance of a commission as a militia officer should not vacate the seat of any member returned to serve in Parliament. If the mere acceptance of a commission in the militia, without being called up for training or without being embodied, did not amount to accepting an office of profit under the Crown, why was it necessary to include in the Militia Act, 1882, a section such s. 38?

The territorial force in England was brought into being by the Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907. That Act also provided both for an annual training and for the embodiment of the force (if the army reserve was called out on permanent service) and for its subsequent disembodiment. Yet it was thought necessary to insert in that Act a provision—s. 23 (1)—that the acceptance of a commission as an officer of the territorial force should not vacate the seat of any member returned to serve in Parliament. If the contention of the plaintiff in the present suit were a sound one, it is strange that s. 23 (1) of this Act of 1907, should have been inserted to protect a person who merely accepted a commission, apart altogether from attending the annual training or being embodied. But perhaps the nearest thing to the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers is the Reserve of Officers in England. Here again it was thought desirable to provide in s. 36, Territorial and Reserve Forces Act, 1907, that the acceptance of a commission even only as an officer in the reserve of officers should not vacate the seat of any member returned to serve in Parliament. Why was that section incorporated? Both at the beginning of the last War (in November 1914), and again on the outbreak of the present War (in September last) an Act was passed to avoid the possibility of the seat of any member of the House of Commons in England being vacated by reason of his acceptance of a commission as an officer in his Majesty's Forces.

The only statutory provision which I can find which throws a favourable light upon the plaintiff's contention is the concluding sentence of s. 44, Commonwealth of Australia Act, 1900, which provided that a member of the Commonwealth House of Representatives should be disqualified by the receipt of pay, half pay or a pension as an officer or member of the Queen's navy or army, or by the receipt of pay as an officer or member of the naval or military forces of the Commonwealth, if his services were not wholly employed by the Commonwealth. At that time the Imperial Parliament apparently thought the receipt of pay was the test. It is to be noted however that this section is not dealing with persons of commissioned rank but with all members of the forces. In view of all these enactments (other than the one dealing with Australia), and in view also of the fact that acceptance of the Stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds vacates the seat of a member of the House of Commons notwithstanding the fact that the incumbent derives no actual profit from the office, I think it would be impossible for me to say that a person who is appointed a Second Lieutenant in the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers does not hold an office of profit under the Crown in Burma.

There is just one other point which was raised on behalf of the plaintiff in connection with this matter with which I must deal. It is said that the fact that the plaintiff's appointment was made "subject to His Majesty's approval" is sufficient to preserve the plaintiff's position as a member of the House of Representatives. It has been argued on his behalf that until His Majesty approves of his appointment the plaintiff cannot be said "to hold the office." I cannot accede to that argument. Take the case of all those other persons whose appointments as Second Lieutenants were announced in the Burma Gazette at the same time as the plaintiff's and who then proceeded to join a unit, either at Maymyo or elsewhere, without waiting for His Majesty to approve their appointments. Can it be said that they had no standing as Second Lieutenants, that they had none of the powers which ordinarily vest in Second Lieutenants, and that any man under their command or to whom it was necessary for them to issue orders could disobey them with impunity, on the ground that His Majesty had not approved their appointments? To me that seems an impossible proposition.

In all the circumstances which I have just been mentioning I feel constrained to hold that at the time the first Ordinance ceased to operate, be that at midnight on March 27-28, or twenty-four hours later, or at some time between the two, the plaintiff was holding an office of profit under the Crown in Burma. Section 25 (1) (a), Govt. of Burma Act, disqualifies for being a member of the House of Representatives inter alia a person who holds an office of profit under the Crown in Burma, other than an office declared by Act of the Legislature not to disqualify its holder. There was, when the first Ordinance ceased to operate, no Act of the Legislature in operation whereby a Second Lieutenant in the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers was declared not to be disqualified for being a member of the House of Representatives. Section 24 (2) (a) enacts that if a member becomes subject, inter alia, to any of the disqualifications mentioned in s. 25 (1) his seat shall thereupon become vacant. Therefore it is clear that the plaintiff's seat became vacant the moment the first Ordinance ceased to operate. The next question therefore is whether the second Ordinance restored the plaintiff to membership of the House. This question involves a consideration of four separate legal points. (1) Is this Court entitled to go into the question whether the Governor had power to promulgate the second Ordinance; (2) had the Governor in fact power to promulgate an Ordinance on this matter under s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act; (3) when was the second Ordinance promulgated and (4) if it was only promulgated on March 30, and if the Governor had such power as I have just mentioned, had he power to make the second Ordinance take effect retrospectively?

The Burma Legislature is created by s. 17 Govt. of Burma Act, and consists of His Majesty (represented by the Governor), the Senate, and the House of Represenatives. The extent of the legislative powers of the Burma Legislature are to be found in ss. 33 and 34 of that Act. But in Burma the power of legislation is not confined to the Legislature which is set up by s. 17. The Governor himself, in addition to being as His Majesty's representative, a part of the Legislature which is set up by s. 17, has also legislative powers of his own, which are set forth in ss. 40 to 43, Govt. of Burma Act. In the first place the Governor has certain legislative powers of his own in regard to what I will call "the special areas"—those areas, such as the Shan States, the Chin Hills District and the Somra tract, which are specified in Sch. II, to the Govt. of Burma Act—but I need not examine this particular legislative power of the Governor because the question of these special areas does not arise in this case. In regard to the remainder of the territories in Burma which are vested in His Majesty, the Governor is given legislative powers of his own, which are quite distinct from the legislative powers given to the Burma Legislature. The Governor is given under ss. 41 and 42, Govt. of Burma Act, the power to promulgate Ordinances, and under s. 43, the power to enact what are called "Governor's Acts." These two powers are quite distinct. I need not consider the latter of them—an example of which is the Defence of Burma Act, 1940, which was considered by a Bench of this Court earlier this week in Criminal Revision No. 340-B of 1940 S. K. Roy Chowdhury v. The King (15), as no question about it arises in this case but the Governor's powers in regard to promulgating Ordinances require a somewhat careful examiniation.

The Ordinances which the Governor is given power to promulgate fall into two distinct classes, the one under s. 41 and the other under s. 42. In order to appreciate the Governor's legislative powers as conferred by these two sections it is necessary to understand his position in the constitution of Burma, so far as the executive is concerned as the extent of his legislative powers under part 4 of the Act is closely linked with his executive and administrative powers under part 2. The constitution of Burma is to be found in the Govt. of Burma Act, 1935, as amended two or three months ago by the India and Burma (Emergency Powers) Act, 1940. The recent amendments to the principal Act, which are designed to meet present war time conditions, do not however, affect this case.

By s. 2 (1), Govt. of Burma Act, all rights, authority and jurisdiction therefore belonging to His Majesty which appertain to Burma are exercisable by His Majesty except in so far as may be otherwise provided by or under that Act, or as may be otherwise directed by His Majesty. By s. 3 (1) of the Act the Governor of Burma is appointed by His Majesty by a Commission under the Royal Sign Manual and has all such powers and duties as are conferred or imposed on him by or under that Act and such other powers of His Majesty as His Majesty may be pleased to assign to him. The executive functions of the Governor of Burma fall into two main classes : those which he is, by or under the Govt. of Burma Act, required to exercise in his discretion (which may be conveniently called his "discretionary function") and his remaining functions under the Act, which I will call his "non-discretionary functions". The discretionary functions of the Governor are, in the main, specified in s. 7 (1), Govt. of Burma Act. I say "in the main" because other discretionary functions are specified in other sections of the Act, as, for example, in s. 6 (5), which provides that the functions of the Governor with respect to the choosing and summoning and the dismissal of ministers shall be exercised by him in his discretion. The discretionary functions specified in s 7 (1) are defence, ecclesiastical affairs the affairs of what I have called above "the special areas", the control of monetary policy, currency and coinage, and with respect to external affairs. Section 7 (2) of the Act provides that, to assist the Governor in the exercise of these discretionary functions, he may appoint not more than three counsellors.

Now as regards the non-discretionary functions of the Governor : s. 5 (1) of the Act provides that there shall be a Council of not more than ten ministers to aid and advise the Governor in the exercise of his non-discretionary functions. Section 9 (1) of the Act enables His Majesty, on the recommendations of the Secretary of State and in pursuance of an address presented to His Majesty by both Houses of Parliament, to issue instructions to the Governor. Pursuant to an address so presented to him, His Majesty has in fact issued instructions to the Governor, which are incorporated in what is known as the instrument of instructions, cl. 8 of which specially enjoins the Governor to be guided by the advice of his Ministers in relation to his non-discretionary functions. The result is that in exercising his discretionary functions, the Govenor can, if he so decides, do everything himself—he need not appoint any Counsellors, and, even if he does, he need not follow his or their advice—but in exercising his non-discretionary functions the Governor must not only choose and summon a Council of Ministers but must be guided by their advice. As the Governor's functions with regard to defence, ecclesiastical affairs, monetary policy and the other matters mentioned in s. 7 (1) are his discretionary functions, it follows that these subjects are outside the sphere of the Council of Ministers. I have indicated the two main divisions of the Governor's executive authority, but s. 8, Govt. of Burma Act, remains to be considered. That section gives the Governor certain special responsibilities and if, in so far as, any special responsibility of the Governor is involved s. 8 (2) requires him in the exercise of his functions, to exercise his individual judgment as to the action to be taken. The principal matters which are thus made the special responsibilities of the Governor—or perhaps I should say "some of the matter", for the Governor's special responsibility is equal as regards them all—are the prevention of any grave menace to the peace or tranquillity of Burma, the safeguarding of the financial stability and credit of the Govt. of Burma, the safeguarding of the legitimate interest of minorities, and restrictions on discrimination. In regard to these matters the Governor is given special responsibilities, and in regard to the exercise of his functions, so far as the special responsibilities are involved, he must exercise his individual judgment. There are certain other matters about which the Governor is required to exercise his individual judgment (see, for example, ss. 12 and 13 of the Act), but I need not detail these other matters in this judgment.

The great importance of these special responsibilities not only emerges from s. 8 (1) of the Act but is also specially emphasised by the proviso to s. 5 (1) which says that nothing in that sub-section, namely sub-s. 5 (1) of s. 5 (which is the sub-section which brings into being the Council of Ministers) shall be construed as preventing the Governor from exercising his individual judgment in any case where he is by or under the Act required so to do. The paramount importance of the Governor's special responsibilities is recognized by His Majesty in cl. 8 of the Instrument of Instructions which expressly lays it down that the Governor shall not be guided by the advice of his Ministers—in other words he must override their advice—if in his opinion so to be guided would be inconsistent with the fulfilment of any of his special responsibilities, in which case, so the Instrument of Instructions directs, the Governor shall, notwithstanding his Minister's advice act in such manner as to his individual judgment seems requisite for the due discharge of his special responsibilities. Again, although, in so far as the Governor is by or under the Govt. of Burma Act required to act in his discretion or exercise his individual judgment, he is under the general control of, and is required to comply with such particular directions, if any, as may from time to time be given to him by the Secretary of State, yet, by s. 10 (2) the Secretary of State is required, before giving any directions to the Governor, to satisfy himself that nothing in such directions requires the Governor to act in any manner inconsistent with any Instrument of Instructions; and, as the Instrument of Instructions as I have already pointed out.....preserves the Governor's special responsibilities, so equally, the superintendence of the Secretary of State over the Governor cannot encroach upon these special responsibilities which have been imposed upon him by the Imperial Parliament. This consideration of the Governor's executive functions is necessary for an appreciation of the true meaning and effect of ss. 41 and 42 to which I referred earlier in this judgment and to which I will now return.

Section 41, Govt. of Burma Act, gives the Governor power to promulgate ordinances only when the Legislature is not in session. At any time when the Legislature is not in session the Governor may, if satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action, promulgate such ordinances as the circumstances appear to him to require. There is no limitation regarding the subjects or matters about which the Governor may promulgate ordinances under s. 41, that is to say, when the Legislature is not in session. Now I turn to s. 42. That section gives the Governor power to promulgate ordinances at any time, that is to say, at any time whether the Legislature is or is not then in session, but the Governor's power to promulgate ordinances under s. 42, that is to say, when the Legislature is in session, is limited. He only has such power when he is satisfied that circumstances exist which render it necessary for him to take immediate action for the purpose of enabling him satisfactorily to discharge his functions in so far as he is by or under the Govt. of Burma Act required in the exercise thereof to act in his discretion or to exercise his individual judgment. It is then, and then only, that he may promulgate such ordinances as in his opinion the circumstances of the case require. So that his power is limited, when the Legislature is in session, to promulgating ordinances, to put it in another way, either (a) in respect of matters outside the sphere of the Ministers, or (b) in respect of matters within that sphere but as ragards which the Governor's special responsibilities require him to override their advice, or (c) in respect of the other matters about which he is required by the Act to exercise his individual judgment. Sub-section (5) of s. 42 provides that the functions of the Governor under s. 42 are to be exercised by him in his discretion.

Now in this particular case the Governor promulgated the second Ordinance under s. 42. As the Legislature was then in session he had no power to promulgate an ordinance under s. 41. The question therefore is whether (a) the subject-matter of the second Ordinance was concerned with one of the discretionary functions of the Governor, or with one of his special responsibilities, or with one of the other matters about which he is required to exercise his individual judgment; or (b) whether, on the other hand, it was concerned with a matter which was one entirely for the Ministers. It is said on behalf of the plaintiff that the second Ordinance was concerned with a matter of defence, which is the first of the discretionary functions of the Governor which are mentioned in s. 7 (1), Govt. of Burma Act. That is the only ground put forward by the plaintiff for saying that the second Ordinance was within the legislative powers of the Governor, and it appears to me that that was the only ground which could be advanced in this particular case. If the subject-matter of the second Ordinance was a matter of defence, then the Governor had power to promulgate it.

Now what did the second Ordinance provide? It provided that members of the House of Representatives should not be disqualified for being members of the House if they held commissions in His Majesty's forces. Can it be said that that was a matter of defence? I do not think that it can Even if there had been no second Ordinance, members of the House of Representatives would have been perfectly free to join His Majesty's forces and to be granted commissions therein. It may be that, if a member were granted a commission, he would thereupon lose his seat in the House of Representatives, but there is no legal bar which prevents him from joining His Majesty's force. He would perhaps be penalised for, but would not be prevented from, being granted a commission, if "penalised" is the right word to use; the penalty would merely be the loss of his seat. His Majesty is not prevented from utilizing his services in the defence of Burma, although his constituents lose the benefit of being represented hy him in the Legislature. The latter may be an unfortunate matter for the electors, but I do not think that it is a matter of defence. The electors can choose someone else. It is not, and, indeed, could not be, suggested that this matter was one concerning which the Governor had a special responsibility under s. 8, Govt. of Burma Act. The result, therefore, is that the subject-matter of the second Ordinance was in my judgment concerned with something which was a matter entirely for the Ministers. Accordingly, in my opinion, the Governor had no power to promulgate the second Ordinance, as the Legislature was then in session.

But it is said on behalf of the plaintiff that it is not for this Court to say whether the second Ordinance is valid or not—that this Court cannot go into that question—on the ground that if the Governor says in an Ordinance that he makes it under s. 42—as is in fact stated in the second Ordinance—that concludes the matter; if the Governor says he makes it under s. 42, that means that he has decided that its subject-matter properly brings it under s. 42, and this Court cannot enquire whether its subject-matter does or does not come within the purview of s. 42. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff that the position is governed by s. 5 (3), Govt. of Burma Act. That sub section says that the decision of the Governor in his discretion shall be final if any question arises whether any matter is or is not a matter in respect of which the Governor is by or under that Act required to act in his discretion or to exercise his individual judgment. For the Speaker it has been suggested that this sub-s. (3) means that if any question arises whether any matter is (a) one about which the Governor is required to act in his discretion or (b) is one about which he is required to exercise his individual judgment, then the decision of the Governor in his discretion is final.

I do not think that that reading of the sub section is right. I think that the correct reading is this. If any question arises whether any matter (a) is a matter as respects which the Governor is by or under the Act required to act in his discretion or to exercise his individual judgment, or (b) is not a matter as respects which the Governor is by or under the Act required to act in his discretion or to exercise his individual judgment — then the decision of the Governor in his discretion is final. But whether that reading of mine is right or wrong, it appears to me that s. 5 (3) only applies in regard to questions arising as between the Governor and his Ministers. Suppose the Governor says to his Ministers that in his opinion a particular matter about which it is necessary to take executive action (and which is admittedly not one of the Governor's special responsibilities) comes within the purview of his discretionary functions, and suppose the Ministers say that it is a non-discretionary function, and that accordingly the Governor must follow their advice. In such a case the decision of the Governor in his discretion would settle the question. That would be a case within s. 5 (3) of the Act. My interpretation of the Act is that that sub-section only applies as between the Governor and the Ministers in regard to administrative matters. For observe: In the first place it is a sub-section of the section (s. 5) which creates the Council of Ministers; next, s. 5 is a group of sections with the sub-heading "admnistration"; thirdly, that sub-heading itself comes under the main heading "the executive." which constitutes Part II of the Act. Section 5 (3) is quite distinct from, and in my opinion has nothing whatever to do with the Governor's legleslative powers which are specified in a sub-Part ("Legislative powers of Governor") of part IV (Legislative") of "the Govt. of Burma Act. In my judgment this Court is not precluded from enquiring whether an ordinance promulgated by the Governor under s. 42 is or is not within his powers. Sub-s. (4) of s. 42 makes it clear that the Court can go into the question whether any provision of an ordinance promulgated under s. 4 is or is not void, on the ground that such provision, if it had been enacted in an Act of the Legislature, would not have been valid. So that, in the absence of any restraining provision in Part IV of the Act, I do not feel any difficulty about examining the provisions of an ordinance promulgated under s. 42 with a view to seeing whether or not it comes within the limited terms of s. 42 (2). In this connection the following words of Lord Selbourne, when delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Emperor v. Burah (16) at pp. 193 and 194, afford support for the view which I have taken of this matter:

"The Indian Legislature has powers expressly limited by the Act of the Imperial Parliament which created it and it can, of course, do nothing beyond the limits which circumscribe these powers .... The established Courts of Justice, when a question arises whether the prescribed limits have been exceeded, must of necessity determine that question, and the only way in which they can properly do so, is by looking to the terms of the instrument by which, affirmatively, the legislative powers were created, and by which, negatively they are restricted."

The Burma Legislature has, according to my construction of the Govt. of Burma Act, been given the exclusive right, while the Legislature is in session, to legislate on certain matters, and the subject-matter of the second Ordinance is one of them. It is not, in my opinion, possible to say that this Court is exceeding its powers when it enquired into the question whether the subject-matter of a certain piece of legislation is one which lies within the exclusive legislative power of the Burma Legislature or whether it is one within the legislative powers of the Governor. I hold that this Court has jurisdiction to go into that question, and, having gone into that question, I have come to the conclusion, for the reasons which I have already given, that the second Ordinance was beyond the legislative powers of the Governor and so was void and of no effect. But the matter does not rest there, for, a further point is raised in connection with the second Ordinance, namely, that (even if I cannot go into the question whether the Govt. had power to promulgate it, or if I can go into that question and decide that he did have such power) yet, by reason of s. 42 (4), Govt. of Burma Act, the second Ordinance is void so far as, and because, it contains a provision which would not have been valid (for the reason that it infringed the terms of s. 33 or s. 34 of the Act) if it had been enacted in an Act of the Legislature—because, in other words, it had retrospective effect.

There is however, a preliminary point on this question which I must first decide. If the second Ordinance was promulgated on March 29, then it would be possible to say, on the authority in Tomlinson v. Bullock (14),—and see also In re Court Fees (13)—that the second Ordinance was not invalid as having retrospective effect merely because it was promulgated after the first Ordinance ceased to operate. But it is only possible to say that if the second Ordinance was promulgated on March 29; if it was promulgated after March 29, it would mean that it purported to have retrospective effect, and on that ground and to that extent its validity might be assailed. In my judgment the second Ordinance was not promulgated on March 29, but on March 30. "Promulgation" of an ordinance without doubt connotes the fact of making the public aware of the existence of the new law. In this country, as in India and elsewhere, promulgation of a new law takes place through the medium of the Official Gazette. It is in my judgment wrong for the notifications which appear in the Burma Gazette when an ordinance is first published therein to say, as they do: "The Governor has promulgated the following ordinance"; to my mind they should say "The Governor hereby promulgates the following ordinance." In the case of the second Ordinance it was not published in the Burma Gazette till March 30, and I hold that that was the day on which it was promulgated. I am not prepared to accept the suggestion that it was promulgated on March 29, when the Speaker read out to the House of Representatives the terms of a typed copy document handed to him by the Premier. I think that the official print of the second Ordinance published by the Govt. Press (which is the equivalent in this country of a King's Printer's copy of an Act of Parliament in England) is quite right in stating, as it does, that it was promulgated on March 30. As I hold that that was the date on which the second Ordinance was promulgated it must now be considered whether (even if the Governor had power to promulgate an ordinance under s. 42 on this subject), the second Ordinance is not invalid so far as it purports to have retrospective effect. This point, with which I am now about to deal, was in my opinion, if I may say so, particularly well argued by Mr. Basu. The material words of the second Ordinance are to be found in s. 2, which reads thus:

"A person shall not be disqualified nor shall be deemed ever to have been disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either Chamber of the Legislature by reason only that as a member of any of His Majesty's forces he holds or has held any office of profit under the Crown."

The grounds for this further objection to the second Ordinance can, I think, be stated quite shortly. Section 24 (2) (a), Govt. of Burma Act, says in clear terms that if a member becomes subject to any disqualification mentioned in s. 25 (1) his seat shall thereupon become vacant. Section 25 (1) (a) says that a person shall be disqualified for being a member if he holds any office of profit under the Crown in Burma other than an office declared by Act of the Legislature not to disqualify its holder. The use of the past participle of the verb "declare" is important. Reading the two sub-sections together it is clear to me that the result is that, if the particular office of profit of which a member becomes the holder, has not already been declared not to disqualify its holder, then the seat thereupon becomes vacant. To my mind, nothing could be clearer. A vacant seat can only be filled in accordance with the provisions of s. 17 (3) of the Act. Section 34 (b) (ii) of the Act expressly deprives the Legislature of power, except in so far as expressly permitted by the Act, to make any law amending any provisions of the Act. An Act of the Legislature, the effect of which is to provide that a member whose seat has become vacant under the Govt. of Burma Act shall nevertheless be restored to his former seat, which is then vacant—such an Act to my mind amends the provision of the Govt. of Burma Act, and, as I cannot find any express provision in that Act permitting the Burma Legislature so to amend the Govt. of Burma Act, it is beyond the powers of the Burma Legislature to enact such an Act. Having regard to the terms of s. 24 (2) the only meaning which I can assign to s. 25 (1) (a) is that if an office of profit is not to disqualify its holder it must have been so declared before the time comes when the seat would, but for such a declaration by the Burma Legislature, have become vacant. Now s. 42 (4) limits the legislative powers of the Governor under s. 42 to the same extent as s. 34 (b) limits the legislative powers of the Burma Legislature. If the Burma Legislature could not have made a law in the terms of the second Ordinance containing such terms, then the Governor could not promulgate an ordinance, and in this respect it matters not whether the ordinance is promulgated under s. 41 or under s. 42, for s. 41 (3) is in the same terms as s. 42 (4).

I must therefore hold that on any view of the matter, at any rate the provision of the second Ordinance which purported to restore the plaintiff to the seat which he occupied, up till the time when the first Ordinance ceased to operate, is void. I now come to the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualification) Act—Act XII of 1940. It is said on behalf of the Speaker that I need not consider that Act, because it only received the Governor's assent after the Speaker had given his decision. But the plaintiff is claiming, inter alia, a declaration that he was at the time he instituted this suit, which is after Act XII of 1940 came into force, a member of the House of Representatives. If Act XII of 1940 restored him to his original position as a member, then I shall have to consider whether or not to grant him the declaration for which he asks. Therefore in my view I must necessarily deal with Act XII of 1940. The terms of s. 2 of that Act are identical with the terms of s. 2 of the second Ordinance. For reasons similar to those which I have just given for holding that the second Ordinance was invalid, under s. 42 (4), Govt. of Burma Act—for similar reasons which I need not restate, I hold that, in so far as Act XII of 1940 purported to restore the plaintiff to the seat which had already become vacant, it infringed the provisions of s. 34 (b) and at any rate to that extent was invalid. It is unnecessary for me to decide, and I do not decide, whether it is possible to say that the words "nor shall be deemed ever to have been disqualified" in s. 2 of Act XII of 1940 can be passed over so that the Act is valid as regards all its other provisions. On this point argument can, I think, be adduced on both sides.

The result is that in my judgment neither the second Ordinance or Act XII of 1940 restored the plaintiff to his membership of the House of Representatives. I hold that his seat became vacant when the first Ordinance ceased to operate and has been vacant ever since. He cannot, therefore, possibly have a declaration that he was a member when he instituted this suit, namely on April 25, last. As that is the only relief which he seeks as against defendant No. 2, I need say nothing about those points which were raised by Mr. Basu on behalf of defendant No. 2 which were additional to those raised on behalf of the Speaker and which were peculiar to the case of defendant No. 2. The suit against defendant No. 2 fails and as against him it is dismissed with costs. Bearing in mind the fact that the two cases were heard together, but also bearing in mind the importance of this case and the amount of work which has obviouly had to be done by the Advocates, I fix an Advocate's fee, for defendant No. 2, of twenty gold mohurs for the first day, twelve gold mohurs each for the second, third, fourth, fifth and seventh days, eight gold mohurs for the sixth day (which was not a full one) and three gold mohurs for to-day. I have not quite finished with the case against the Speaker, for the plaintiff also seeks as against him (a) a declaration that he (the Speaker) had no power to determine the matters disposed of by him in his "ruling," as it is called, of April 2, and that his findings are of no force or validity, and (b) an injunction to restrain the Speaker from inter alia, interfering with the exercise by the plaintiff of his rights, duties or privileges as a member of the House of Representatives. This last mentioned relief, the injunction, cannot possibly be granted as I hold that the plaintiff is no longer a member of the House of Representatives. With regard to the claim for the declaration which I have just mentioned it is true that I have held that the Speaker had not power to determine this matter and that his "ruling" is of no effect, but apart altogether from the question whether s. 42, Specific Relief Act, entitles me to grant the plaintiff this declaration in such terms as he seeks, about which I am not at all sure, I would not be prepared in the present case to exercise my discretion and grant the plaintiff such a declaration—for it is undoubtedly a matter of discretion under s. 42—even if I had the power to do so, for the simple reason that, as I have held that the plaintiff's seat did become vacant, it follows that I think that the Speaker's decision was a correct one as regards the plaintiff although he had no power to give that decision which is accordingly of no force or validity.

In these circumstances it would to my mind be of no use to the plaintiff for me to grant him such a declaration, and I would not be prepared to exercise my discretion and do so. As, for the reasons given, I am not prepared to grant the plaintiff any of the reliefs which he seeks from defendant No. 1, the suit must also be dismissed as against that defendant as well as against defendant No. 2. Mr. Kyaw Din has informed me, at the Bar, that the Govt. has been, and is, responsible for conducting the case on behalf of the Speaker and that he (Mr. Kyaw Din) is retained by the Govt. to act on behalf of the Speaker—and, incidentally, that the Advocate-General would himself have appeared before me to argue the case, had it not been that he felt that he might find himself in an embarrassing position having regard to the fact that he, the Advocate-General, had spoken fully on the subject in the House of Representatives—and Mr. Kyaw Din also informed me that he was instructed not to ask on behalf of the Speaker for cost against the plaintiff in the event of the suit being dismissed. There will accordingly be no order for costs in favour of defendant No. 1.

I have every sympathy with the plaintiff.

The whole trouble has been brought about by the Govt's. omission, for a reason not disclosed to me—and indeed it was not necessary that it should be—to see that the Burma Legislature (Removal of Disqualifications) Ordinance, 1940, as passed by the Senate, was not passed through its remaining stages before the first Ordinance ceased to operate. I cannot, however, allow my sympathy for the plaintiff to affect in any way my judgment on the legal issues which have fallen for my decision. The suit is dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Appeal from Appellate Order No. 223 of 1940

December 4, 1940

AGARWALA, J.

CENTRAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK—APPELLANT

KASHI SAHU AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Bihar Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 65—Mortgage suit—Defendant claiming priority being purchaser in execution of rent decree under s. 65—Mortgagor challenging—Objection of defendant not upheld on ground that he failed to get encumbrance annulled within time under s. 167—Mortgage decree passed—Execution taken out—Defendant raising same objection that property can only be sold subject to his prior charge—Held, that though decision in suit was wrong, the objection could not be raised in execution.

Mortgagees instituted a suit for the sale of mortgaged property to realise their dues under the mortgage. One of the defendants, i. e., defendant No. 2 was also a purchaser in execution of a decree passed in a rent suit. The mortgagor plaintiff distinctly challenged the priority of defendant No. 2 by alleging that the latter's purchase was not in execution of a rent decree but of a money decree. Defendant No. 2 did take up the challenge and claimed priority conferred by s. 65, Bihar Ten. Act on the ground that the decree in execution of which he purchased was a rent decree, and he further alleged that he had taken steps under s. 167 of the Bihar Ten. Act to annul the plaintiff's encumbrances. Although the Court found that the decree in execution of which the defendant purchased was a rent decree it held that as the defendant had not annulled the mortgage encumbrances within a statutory period prescribed by the Ten. Act his holding was subject to the plaintiff's mortgage and accordingly the plaintiff was entitled to a mortgage decree against both the defendants. In the result a decree was passed directing the sale of the mortgaged property. When the decree-holders applied to execute this decree defendant No. 2 raised an objection that the mortgaged property could be sold only subject to his prior charge:

Held, that the mere fact that a purchaser in execution of a rent decree had not availed himself of his statutory right to annul the encumbrances did not, in any way, affect the priority conferred on him by s. 65 of the Act. 182 Ind. Cas. 678 (2), followed.

Held, however, that the defendant No. 2 sought in the litigation which resulted in this decree (the fact that it was a wrong decision being irrelevant) to establish his priority and had failed to do so and that being the case he could not be allowed subsequenly to reagitate that question in the proceedings in execution of the decree.

A. from an order of the District Judge of Bhagalpur, dated February 28, 1940.

Mr. K. N. Lall, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. N. Dutt and S. K. Mitra, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The respondents instituted a suit for the sale of mortgaged property to realise their dues under the mortgage. They impleaded as defendants in the suit the mortgagor as defendant No. 1 and the appellant as defendant No. 2. With regard to defendant No. 2 it was alleged that this defendant was also a purchaser in execution of a decree passed in a rent suit but that that decree was a money decree and not a rent decree as it was not against all the tenants of the holding or in respect of the entire holding. The suit was not contested by the mortgagor but it was contested by defendant No. 2. In the result a decree was passed directing the sale of the mortgaged property. When the decree-holders applied to execute this decree defendant No. 2 raised an objection that the mortgaged property could be sold only subject to his prior charge. The prior charge on which he relies is that conferred by s. 65 of the Bihar Ten. Act on a person who purchases in execution of a rent decree. The objection was upheld by the Munsif but has been overruled on appeal on the ground that defendant No. 2 cannot be permitted at this stage to agitate this question.

It is now contended on behalf of the appellant-defendant No. 2 that as the Court which tried the suit has found that the decree in execution of which he purchased in the rent suit was a rent decree, he is entitled to have the priority which the statute confers on him in spite of the course taken during the trial of the suit itself. Now the question whether the owner of a paramount right is precluded from raising the question of his priority by reason of his having been a party to a suit on a mortgage has been the matter of frequent discussion. In Sadu Behera v. Dibakar Tara (1) it was held that as a general rule a paramount title cannot be drawn in controversy in a mortgage action; but if a plaintiff in such an action alleges a distinct case in his plaint in derogation of the priority which may be claimed by the defendant and seeks in his suit to displace that prior title and postpone it to his own, it is incumbent upon the defendant to establish his priority, and, if he fails to do so, he will not be allowed to raise that question in a subsequent suit of his own. Now, in the mortgage suit with which I am concerned the mortgagor-plaintiff distinctly challenged the priority of defendant No. 2 by alleging that the latter's purchase was not in execution of a rent decree but of a money decree. What the position would have been had defendant No. 2 not taken up that challenge it is unnecessary to discuss because, as a matter of fact, defendant No. 2 did take up the challenge and claimed priority on the ground that the decree in execution of which he purchased was a rent decree, and he further alleged that he had taken steps under s. 167 of the Ten. Act to annul the plaintiff's encumbrances. Although the Court found that the decree in execution of which the defendant purchased was a rent decree it held that as the defendant had not annulled the mortgage encumbrances within a statutory period prescribed by the Ten. Act his holding was subject to the plaintiff's mortgage and accordingly the plaintiff was entitled to a mortgage decree against both the defendants.

Now, in view of the decision in Mahadev Maharaj v. Jagdev Singh (2) it is clear that the view of the law which the trial Court took was wrong. The mere fact that a purchaser in execution of a rent decree has not availed himself of his statutory right to annul the encumbrances does not, in any way, affect the priority conferred on him by s. 65 of the Act. Be that as it may, there was this decision at the trial and that it was a wrong decision is irrelevant to the present question. The appellant was dissatisfied with that decision and appealed against it but unsuccessfully. In the circumstances of this case it is clear to me that the appellant sought in the litigation which resulted in this decree to establish his priority and has failed to do so, and that being the case he cannot be allowed now to reagitate that question in the proceedings in execution of the decree.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

SAILAJ KUMAR BOSE—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI rr. 6, 5—Stay under O. XLI, r. 5 refused—Court, if justified in refusing jurisdiction under r. 6.

If an order has been made for sale and an application under O. XLI, r. 6, Civil P.C., has been made to the Court, the Court should stay the sale on suitable terms and the Court must consider what terms are suitable. The fact that the stay has been refused under O. XLI, r. 5 does not justify the Court in refusing to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it under O. XLI, r. 6. Jitendra Nath v. Bholanath (1), relied on.

C. Rule for setting aside the order of the Sub-Judge, First Court, 24 Parganas, Alipore, dated July 8, 1940.

Messrs. Hemendra Ch. Sen and Sailendra Nath Banerji (Jr.), for the Petitioner.

Messers, Rabindra Nath Bhattacharya and Arunendra Nath Tagore, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This was a rule issued on the opposite party to show cause why an order passed by the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Alipore, refusing to entertain an application for stay of sale under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) should not be set aside. The material facts are as follows: The opposite party obtained a decree on the original side of this Court. He took out execution proceedings in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Alipore. The petitioner filed an objection under s. 47, Civil P. C. This objection was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge and disallowed on July 29, 1939. Thereafter the petitioner filed an appeal to this Court against the order disallowing his objection. When the appeal was admitted, a rule was issued to the opposite party to show cause why further proceedings in the execution case and the sale of the immovable property should not be stayed, pending the decision of the appeal. When the rule was heard, an order was passed staying further proceedings on terms. The terms were that Rs. 1,000 should be deposited on or before January 31, 1940 that a further sum of Rs. 1,500 should be deposited on or before March 20, 1940 and that security for the balance to the satisfaction of the lower Court should be furnished by March 20, 1940. The first two terms were fulfilled and security for the balance of the amount due was tendered to the lower Court before March 20, 1940. But the lower Court was dissatisfied with the security offered and directed the petitioner to furnish further security. The Court then decided that it had no jurisdiction to extend the time within which security should be furnished. Thereafter the present petitioner applied to the learned Subordinate Judge under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) for stay of the sale of the immovable property. The learned Subordinate Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to entertain that application, because there was no appeal pending from the decree in execution of which the sale was to be held. He, accordingly, rejected the application under O. XLI, r. 6.

This rule has been obtained to show cause why that order should not be set aside. It has been pointed out by the learned Advocate for the petitioner that the Subordinate Judge has looked the provisions of O. XLI, r. 8 and it is not necessary in order to give the Court jurisdiction under O. XLI, r. 6 that there should be an appeal pending from the decree in execution of which the sale was to be held. It is sufficient if there be pending an appeal from an order made in execution of that decree. The rule has been opposed not on the ground on which the order was passed by the Subordinate Judge, but on the ground that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to vary the order passed by this Court and had no jurisdiction to pass an order staying the sale which would in effect modify the stay order passed by this Court. In our opinion, there is no substance in this objection. The order passed by this Court in Rule No. 1228 (M) of 1939 was an order passed under O. XLI, r. 5. Such an order is discretionary, it can be granted or refused at the discretion of the Appellate Court. We will assume for the purposes of this case that the terms on which stay was granted under O. XLI, r. 5 were not fulfilled. It follows, therefore, that the rule for stay under O. XLI, r. 5 must be taken to have been discharged. That order stands and cannot be set aside or modified by the lower Court and possibly not even by this Court. The result of this is that the position is the same as if an order for stay under O. XLI, r. 5 had been refused by this Court. But O. XLI, r. 6 does not leave it to the discretion of the Court whether stay should be granted or not. Under that Rule the sale shall be stayed on such terms as to security or otherwise as the Court thinks fit. It follows, therefore that if an order has been made for sale and an application under O XLI, r. 6, has been made to the Court, the Court shall stay the sale on suitable terms and the Court must consider what terms are suitable. The fact that the stay has been refused under O. XLI, r. 5 does not justify the Court in refusing to exercise the jurisdiction vested in it under O. XLI, r. 6. This very question came up for consideration in this Court in Jitendra Nath v. Bholanath (1) where it has been held that :

"although an application for stay of execution of a decree made under O. XLI, r. 5 (1), Civil P. C. may have been refused by the Appellate Court still after an order for sale of immovable property in execution of the decree has been made, the Court making such order has jurisdiction to, and indeed must stay the sale on terms as to security or otherwise".

When the terms on which the stay was granted under O. XLI, r. 5, were not fulfilled the position was exactly the same as if stay under that order had been refused. In our opinion, it was incumbent upon the learned Subordinate Judge to entertain the application under O. XLI, r. 6 and to consider what were the appropriate terms on which the sale should be stayed. This rule is therefore, made absolute, the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is set aside and the case is remanded for disposal of the application under O. XLI, r. 6 (2) according to law. The petitioner is entitled to his costs which we assess at one gold mohur.

S. Rule made absolute.

Appeal from Appellate Order No. 153 of 1940

December 12, 1940

HARRIES, C. J. AND MANOHAR LALL, J.

ADIT NARAYAN SINGH AND OTHERS —APPELLANTS

Smt. BINAPANI AND OTHERS— RESPONDENTS

Execution—Decree compromised—Judgment-debtor to pay certain portion of decretal amount by instalments on fixed date and execute assignment deed in respect of balance—Deed not executed on fixed date but later—Other terms not complied—Decree-holder acting on deed—Whether can take out execution in respect of decretal amount including that portion for which deed of assignment was executed—Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938), s. 2 (f)—"Loan"—Debt in question held not "loan" within meaning of section.

Where by a compromise decree the judgment-debtors were to pay the decretal amount in certain fixed instalments, on certain fixed day and execute deed of assignment of the arrears of rent, in respect of the balance of the decretal amount, but the terms are not fulfilled by the judgment-debtors except to execute the assignment deed on same date later than the one fixed by the compromise, and it is found that the decree-holder had acted on the deed by collecting the rent, he cannot take out the execution of his decree in respect of that portion of the decree for which this assignment deed was executed, on the ground that the judgment-debtor had failed to execute it on the date fixed by the compromise.

The arrangement between the parties who were co-sharers was that any collection which were due from the tenants should be divided by the common patwari half and half. The patwari, instead of sending half the amount to one of them made over all the amount to the other who thereafter became liable to pay the same to the former not as a loan but on account of the fact that the other had received the money from the patwari on trust for or for the use of the former;

Held, that the debt was not a "loan" within the meaning of s. 2 (f), Bihar Money-lenders Act and, therefore, the Act had no application to the case.

A. from an order of the District Judge of Patna, dated May 2, 1940.

Chaudhuri Mathura Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. B. C. De and S. N. Banarji, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by the decree-holders who are aggrieved by the appellate order passed by the learned District Judge of Patna, dated May 2, 1940, by which he reversed the order of the learned Munsif in an execution case started by the appellants.

It appears that the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors were co-sharer landlords of village Bariarpur in which each was interested to the extent of eight annas. The collection of the village was in charge of a common patwari, and the arrangement between the parties was that if at the end of the year it was ascertained that any sum larger than what was actually the share of one of the co-sharers was paid over by the patwari, the other co-sharer would be entitled to recover from his co-sharer the excess amount which was so discovered on accounting together with interest at the rate of one per cent. per mensem. The decree holder's case was that they discovered some time in 1936 or 1937 that a sum of Rs. 1,400 was paid over to the judgment-debtors by the patwari in excess of what were the legitimate dues of the judgment-debtors. Accordingly they instituted a suit for the recovery of that sum, but the matter was compromised between the parties and a compromise decree was passed on July 14, 1937, for a sum of Rs. 1,247. It was also provided in that compromise decree that the amount which was thus fixed as payable by the judgment-debtors should be paid in this way; Rs. 600 was to be paid in cash in January 1938, Rs. 200 was to be paid on or before March 20, 1938, and the balance of Rs. 447 odd was to be liquidated by the execution of a deed of assignment for the arrears of rent due to the judgment-debtors in favour of the decree-holders. It may be observed here that the judgment-debtors had transferred their share in the village to a third party and, therefore, all that was due to them in this village was the arrears of rent which apparently had not been transferred to the vendee. This deed of assignment was to have been executed by July 17, 1937. After this compromise decree was passed, the judgment-debtors did not carry out any of the terms of this compromise beyond executing the deed of assignment on July 21, 1937, that is to say four days after the date fixed for its execution.

One of the points taken by the decree-holders was that as the judgment-debtors had not executed the deed of assignment within the time fixed by the compromise the subsequent execution thereof was not in compliance with the terms of the compromise and therefore, they claimed to be entitled to execute the decree for the entire sum of Rs. 1,247. The learned District Judge, in agreeing with the learned Munsif, held that the time was not of the essence of the contract and, therefore, he thought that the judgment-debtors were entitled to have the delay condoned. It is unnecessary to consider this aspect of the case, because the learned District Judge has found as a fact that the deed of assignment was really acted upon by the decree-holders, who collected some of the arrears due from the tenants on the strength of this deed. This finding was objected to by the learned Advocate for the appellants before us, but it is difficult for this Court to interfere in second appeal with this finding of fact which is binding on us. Now once the findings of fact is ruled to be binding it must be held that the decree-holders have waived their right to execute the decree for the sum which was covered by this deed of assignment. It follows that the decree-holders are entitled to execute their decree for Rs. 800, being the two instalments which had not been paid over in January and March 1938, together with interest thereon as provided by the compromise decree.

The learned Munsif was asked to exercise his power under the Bihar Money-lenders Act by fixing instalments by which this sum should be paid to the decree holders and also by fixing the valuation of the properties which were attached by the decree-holders in execution. But the learned Munsif took the view that the original sum of Rs. 1,400 which was due to the decree-holders was not a "loan" within the meaning of s. 2 cl. (f), Bihar Money-lenders Act. He, therefore, refused to take action under the provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders Act. The learned District Judge in appeal, however, has come to the conclusion that it is difficult to understand how the debt in question was not a loan within the meaning of s. 2 (f) of the Bihar Money-lenders Act, and in that view he directed the learned Munsif to proceed to exercise his powers under the relevant provisions of the Money-lenders Act.

In my opinion the learned Judge was in error in treating the amount due to the decree-holders in this case as a loan within the meaning of s. 2 (f). If the nature of the events which led to the institution of the claim by the plaintiffs is borne in mind, it is obvious that that the plaintiff-decree-holders have never made any advance on interest to the judgment-debtors, assuming that the plaintiffs are money-lenders. It was argued that in substance the transaction was a loan. I do not see how in substance this transaction can in reality be called a loan. The arrangement between the parties was that any collection which were due from the tenants should be divided by the common patwari half and half. It is a matter of common experience that at the end of the year, unless there has been an arrangement to the contrary, the patwari or the Tahsildar makes up the accounts and then sends on the amount collected to the master for whom he has made the collections after making such deductions as are permissible to be made by the patwari. Now, in this case the patwari, instead of sending half the amount to the plaintiffs, made over all the amount to the judgment-debtors. The judgment-debtors thereafter were liable to pay the same to the decree-holders not as a loan but on account of the fact that they had received the money from the patwari on trust for or for the use of the decree-holders.

For these reasons I am of opinion that the learned District Judge took an incorrect view when he held that the provisions of the Bihar Money-lenders Act should be applied to this case. The order of the learned District Judge, so far as he directed the learned Munsif to take action under the Bihar Money-lenders Act, is set aside. In other respects his order under appeal is affirmed.

The result is that the appeal is allowed in part and the decree-holders will be entitled to proceed with their execution in the ordinary course. As the decree-holders have succeeded to the extent of Rs. 800, they are entitled to half the costs in all the Courts.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

Contract—Public policy—Marriage performed outside British India to evade provisions of Sarda Act, whether opposed to public policy—Contribution towards such marriage if can be recovered in execution of decree—Partition—Decree directing member to pay certain sum as his share of marriage expenses of his sisters—Absence of notice of marriage, whether ground to refuse such payment.

The power of the Court to decline to enforce contracts and other instruments on grounds of public policy is a power which should be confined within the limits laid down by authority. Clearly the Court would not enforce a contract and presumably would not enforce a decree if the enforcement implied the approbation by the Court of an act which was contrary to law. But I see no reason why the Court should refuse to enforce a payment under a decree because the object for which a payment is made is contrary to the law of British India when that object was actually performed in a State where it was perfectly legal. A marriage, therefore, performed outside British India in order to evade the provisions of what is popularly known as the Sarda Act, is not one opposed to public policy and contribution towards it can be recovered in execution of a decree. 170 Ind. Cas. 309 (1), distinguished.

According to a decree in a partition suit a member of the family was required to pay a certain sum towards his share of the marriage expenses of each of his sisters. The member objected to pay the amount due under the decree because he was not given notice of the marriage:

Held, that to the extent to which the details of the claim were contested, the fact that there was no notice might be taken into consideration in admitting or rejecting items of expenditure.

A. against the appellate order of the District Court, Guntur, dated September 29, 1936.

Mr. K. Kotayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of the execution of a decree in a partition suit whereunder the appellant was required to pay a sum not exceeding Rs. 1,000 towards his share of the marriage expenses of each of his sisters. The youngest sister was married on March 7, 1935 and it was admitted by the father (the respondent) that he had the marriage celebrated within the Hyderabad State because it would have been illegal under the Child Marriage Restraint Act (XIX of 1929) had it been performed in British India. There is no suggestion that any of the parties belonged to or was domiciled in Hyderabad. The appellant objects to pay the amount due under the decree towards this marriage firstly because the marriage was one opposed to public policy and secondly because he was not given notice of the marriage. As to the second point the trial Court rejects the respondent's assertion that he sent an invitation to the appellant for the wedding. It is of course, not unlikely that the appellant knew all about the marriage as the parties were living in the same village. But whether this be so or not though the judgment of the Full Bench which eventually decided the litigation contemplates previous notice to the appellant the decree is silent on the point. The utmost therefore that could be said is, in my opinion, that to the extent to which the details of the claim were contested, the fact that there was no notice might be taken into consideration in admitting or rejecting items of expenditure.

It turn next to the more substantial question whether a marriage performed outside British India in order to evade the provisions of what is popularly known as the Sarda Act, is one opposed to public policy towards which no contribution can be recovered in execution of a decree. My attention has been drawn to a decision of Panckridge, J. reported in Pan Mal-Lodha v. Gad Mal Lodha (1). The learned Judge declined to sanction payment of money by a Court's Receiver for the purpose of solemnization of a marriage outside British India which would have been illegal if celebrated in British India, where the parties were domiciled. I see no reason to differ from the conclusions arrived at by the learned Judge in that case. But it seems to me very evident that a refusal of the Court to make a discretionary payment towards a marriage the object of which was clearly to avoid the law of British India is quite a different matter from the refusal of the Court to direct a payment unconditionally required under the Court's decree, on the ground that the object for which the payment was to be made was one which would have been illegal if performed in British India.

It is well-established that the power of the Court to decline to enforce contacts and other instruments on grounds of public policy is a power which should be confined within the limits laid down by authority. Clearly the Court would not enforce a contract and presumably would not enforce a decree if the enforcement implied the approbation by the Court of an act which was contrary to law. But I see no reason why the Court should refuse to enforce a payment under a decree because the object for which a payment is made is contrary to the Law of British India when that object was actually performed in a State where it was perfectly legal. If it had been the policy of the Legislature to prevent British Indian subjects from going into another State to celebrate marriages which would be prohibited under Act XIX of 1929 in British India then surely the Legislature would have made provision in the statute itself to restrain such migrations for matrimonial purposes. The Act as passed originally was very restricted in its scope and was surrounded by many safeguards to prevent it from being operated in an oppressive manner. One is not justified in importing into the Act an intention which the Act itself does not declare to regulate the conduct of British Indian subjects when outside the territories to which the Act applies. I must therefore hold that the learned District Judge was right in declining to accept the contention that the amount payable under the decree towards this marriage should be refused on grounds of public policy. The appeal is therefore dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

First Appeal No. 113 of 1940
November 18, 1940
ROBERTS, C. J. AND DUNKLEY, J.

U CHIT HLAING—RESPONDENT

Government of Burma Act, 1935, ss. 41, 42 —Ordinance has same force as Act — Promulgation of Ordinance — Publication in Gazette is necessary—Expiry of Ordinance — Ordinance issued by Governor — Whether implies that Governor has formed his opinion and exercised his individual judgment—Ordinance expressing purpose of enabling Governor satisfactorily to discharge functions—Governor is sole Judge—Court, if can sit on judgment—Power of Speaker of House to declare seat of member vacant—Ordinance, if should contain preamble—Injunction—Grant of, is discretionary—Defendant assuring that he would take no action to the prejudice of plaintiff—Injunction should not be granted—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 5*—Contention that allegation needs no reply whether amounts to denial by necessary implication.*

An Ordinance promulgated under either s. 41 or s. 42 of the Govt. of Burma Act has the same force and effect as an Act of the Legislature. [p. 115, col. 1.]

Promulgation and publication in the Official Gazette are not synonymous. Publication in the Official Gazette is not sine qua non of promulgation, though it is a record that promulgation has taken place and a means of announcing the fact to the widest possible circle of individuals. Reading of an Ordinance by the Speaker of the House of Representatives is sufficient promulgation. 193 Ind. Cas. 91, Reversed. [p. 115, col. 2; p. 116, col. 1.]

An Ordinance was promulgated under s. 41 of the Govt. of Burma Act; the Legislature re-assembled on February 15, 1940:

Held, that the Ordinance expired at the midnight which concluded on March 28, as six weeks from February 15, 1940, expired on March 20, 1940. 193 Ind. Cas. 93, affirmed. [p. 115, col. 1.]

The Governor's functions are capable of being exercised in any one of three different ways. Some are exercisable in his discretion which means that he need not ask for the aid or advice of his Ministers at all; indeed it is not their duty to aid or advise him in respect of these matters; a second group is exercisable, notwithstanding the advice of Ministers, in the exercise of his individual judgment; and a third group is exercisable under the guidance of his Ministers. Matters in the Govt. of Burma Act which are said to fall within the individual judgment of the Governor may fall within the second or third group according to the opinion formed by the Governor as to the course which he should take. Hence where an Ordinance issued is expressed to be under powers conferred by s. 42, it is implied that an opinion has been formed by the Governor and an individual judgment has been exercised by him. [p. 116, col. 2.]

The Court will not inquire whether circumstances in fact existed which rendered immediate action necessary before the promulgation of an Ordinance. That is for the Governor to decide. The Court should not assume the burden of deciding for what purpose the action was necessary. Where in an Ordinance the purpose is expressed to be that of enabling the Governor satisfactorily to discharge certain functions the Governor is the only Judge of that. 131 Ind. Cas. 415 (1), relied on, 140 Ind. Cas. 304 (2), referred to. 193 Ind. Cas. 91, Reversed. [p. 117, col. 2; p 118, col. 1.]

The question whether a seat of a member of the House of Representatives has become vacant or not is not a point of order at all for the Speaker, nor is it the matter for the House to determine. It is a point of law affecting the status of an individual and is for a Court to determine. 193 Ind. Cas. 91, affirmed. [p. 118, col. 1.]

Obiter Per Dunkley, J.—There ought to be a common form of preamble for all Ordinances, and the preamble should set out that the Governor is satisfied as required by the terms of s. 42 (1) and also the purpose within s. 48 (1) for which the Ordinance is promulgated. But it is not legally necessary that this should be done, and legally all that is necessary is that the Governor should declare that he promulgates the Ordinance under the provisions of s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act; but the adoption of this suggestion might make for the better understanding by the public of the reason and necessity for the issue of an Ordinance. [p. 120, col. 2.]

The granting of an injunction is a discretionary matter and the Court would be loath to consider that circumstances could make it desirable to grant one in a case where the defendant has given an assurance that he would refrain from any action to the prejudice of the defendant. [p. 118, col. 1.]

There is no denial by necessary implication of a fact alleged in a plaint when it is merely contended in the written statement that the allegation needs no reply. [p. 115, col. 2.]

F. A. against the decree of Mr. Justice Sharpe, reported in 193 Ind. Cas 91.

Mr. U E Maung, for the Appellant.

Mr. U Kyaw Din, for Respondent No 1.

Roberts, C. J.—This was an action brought by the Appellant U Lun against U Chit Hlaing, Speaker of the House of Representatives, for a declaration that the plaintiff was a member of the House of Representatives and that his seat had not become vacant by reason of any disqualification and for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the exercise of the plaintiff's rights and privileges in that behalf. The facts have been set out very fully by the learned trial Judge. The plaintiff had been duly elected a member of the House of Representatives representing Insein North at the General Election in November, 1936 and in March, 1940, he was appointed a Second Lieutenant in the Army in the Burma Reserve of Officers subject to the approval of His Majesty.

The holder of a commission in His Majesty's forces enjoys an office of profit under the Crown and by s. 25 (1) (a), Govt. of Burma Act he is disqualified for being chosen as, or for being, a member of either Chamber unless this office is declared by an Act of the Legislature not to disqualify its holder. His Excellency the Governor, in pursuance of his powers under s. 41, Govt. of Burma Act, promulgated an Ordinance on September 18, 1939, which provided that a person should not be disqualified nor should be deemed ever to have been disqualified for being chosen as, and for being, a member of either Chamber of the Legislature by reason only that as a member of His Majesty's forces he was holding or had held any office of profit under the Crown. An Ordinance promulgated under either s. 41 or s 42 of the Act has the same force and effect as an Act of the Legislature, and consequently it protected the plaintiff from the disqualification which he would otherwise have suffered. But this particular Ordinance would cease to operate at the expiration of six weeks from the re-assembly of the Legislature unless (which never happened) a resolution disapproving it were passed by the House of Representatives and agreed to by the Senate on some earlier date.

The Legislature re-assembled on February 15, 1940, and six weeks from that date brings us to March 28, 1940. I respectfully agree with the learned trial Judge for the reasons given by him that this Ordinance expired at the midnight which concluded March 28. On March 29, when the Legislature was in session, the Governor, in pursuance of his powers under s. 42 of the Act, promulgated a further Ordinance in similar terms. It was afterwards published in a Burma Gazette Extraordinary dated March 30, but published in a truncated and inaccurate form. Its concluding words were: "The above Ordinance is promulgated under the powers conferred by s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act, 1935." By a surprising and unfortunate omission none of these concluding words were contained in the Official Gazette. During the afternoon of March 29, the original of this second Ordinance was delivered to the Speaker and read by him to the House of Representatives; an advance copy of it had been already supplied to him by the Premier. It never has been contended by any party to this suit that promulgation did not take place on March 29. In para. 10 of the plaint it was expressly pleaded that March 29, was the date of promulgation. In the written statement of the respondent he was content to aver that this allegation needed no reply; and by O. VIII, r. 5, Civil P. C., every allegation of fact not denied specifically or by necessary implication, or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant shall be taken to be admitted. There is no denial by necessary implication of a fact alleged in a plaint when it is merely contended in the written statement that the allegation needs no reply. If the second Ordinance was a valid Ordinance and was promulgated on March 29, there never was a time when the appellant's seat became vacant by reason of any disqualification, and no question of its validity could be raised on the ground of its contravention of the provisions of sub-s. (4) of s. 42, which enacts that an Ordinance passed under the section shall only be valid if and so far as an Act of the Legislature in similar terms would be valid.

The learned trial Judge has taked the view that promulgation was not effected until March 30, although the Governor's signature to the document on March 29, states that it "is promulgated" and not that it will be. The original document was however never produced in Court before him, for the notification in the Gazette was admissible in evidence as to its contents though entirely misleading in its effect. I find myself unable to accept the suggestion that promulgation and publication in the Official Gazette are synonymous. If the Act used the word "publication" it might no doubt be said that the term connoted the fact of making the public in this way aware of the existence of the Ordinance, and that publication meant publication in the Official Gazette. But I have asked myself why the Act uses the word, "promulgate" in preference to the more popular word "publish," and it seems to me that there is a distinction. What is promulgated is no doubt in practice published in the Official Gazette so as to ensure wider dissemination. But the promulgation of an Ordinance is an emergency measure; it depends on the necessity for immediate action, as the Act states. The Governor is empowered to take this action at once and is not obliged to wait till the printers are ready, or to communicate with them, it may be from a great distance, before his action becomes effective. Some proclamation or making known by public declaration is no doubt necessary; no one can be said to promulgate what he keeps locked up in his breast: but publication in the Official Gazette does not appear to me to be sine qua non of promulgation, though it is a record that promulgation has taken place and a means of announcing the fact to the widest possible circle of individual. The India and Burma Emergency Provisions Act, 1940, had not been published in Burma at the time of the judgment. In that Act the Governor is empowered to make certain provisions which under s. 157, Govt. of Burma Act, could be made by an Order in Council or which under the Act fell within the scope of rules issuable by the Secretary of State. This he can do "by notification in the Official Gazette of Burma." The new statute does not say that these provisions may be made and promulgated by the Governor, and lays down a procedure different from that contemplated in the case of promulgation of an Ordinance under the Govt of Burma Act.

Illustration (e) to s. 114, Evi. Act, says that the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed. We have seen the Governor's signed declaration on March 29, 1940, that the second Ordinance is promulgated, and indeed the fact appears to have been admitted on the pleadings; I cannot hold that no promulgation with due regard to form and procedure took place before March 30. It is also unfortunate that the attention of the learned trial Judge was, as we are assured, not drawn to this point in the voluminous pleadings and that he was allowed to think that a type-written copy of the Ordinance was all that was delivered to the Speaker on March 29.

Then was the second Ordinance a valid Ordinance? In my view the answer to this question must be in the affirmative. The Ordinance did not attract the provisions of s. 42 (4) as being one which would be invalid if enacted by the Legislature. Such part of it as would appear to give retrospective effect to its provisions, namely the words "nor shall be deemed ever to have been disqualified," are clearly severable from the remainder, and the remainder freed the appellant from any disqualification since it came into operation immediately upon the expiry of the first Ordinance at the midnight concluding March 28.

It is desirable to examine the scope of s. 42 which deals with the Governor's power to make Ordinances when the Legislature is in session.

The Governor's functions appear to me, with great respect, to be capable of being exercised in any one of three different ways. Some are exercisable in his discretion which means that he need not ask for the aid or advice of his Ministers at all; indeed it is not their duty to aid or advise him in respect of these matters; a second group is exercisable, notwithstanding the advice of Ministers, in the exercise of his individual judgment; and a third group is exercisable under the guidance of his Ministers. The third group comprises all cases in which the Governor does not regard it as inconsistent with the fulfilment of any of the special responsibilities which are committed to him by the Act, or with the proper discharge of the functions which he is otherwise by or under the Act required to exercise in his individual judgment, to be guided by his Ministers' advice.

In performing any of the functions in the second or third group the Governor (acting under para. 8 of the Instrument of Instructions issued to him by His Majesty) forms his own opinion as to whether, having regard to its terms, he should be guided by his Ministers or not. Thus, matters in the Govt. of Burma Act which are said to fall within the individual judgment of the Governor may fall within the second or third group according to the opinion formed by the Governor as to the course which he should take.

Paragraph 8 of the Instrument of Instructions relates to all matters within the scope of the executive authority in Burma save the purely discretionary functions. They may become matters for the exercise of the individual judgment of the Governor simply because he has formed the opinion referred to in the paragraph. When an Ordinance is issued expressed to be under the powers conferred by s. 42 it is implied that such an opinion has been formed.

The learned Judge has examined with great care the question whether the subject-matter of the second Ordinance was concerned with one of the discretionary functions of the Governor, or with one of his special responsibilities, or with one of the other matters about which he is required to exercise his individual judgment. But he has, I respectfully think, omitted to notice that within this last class there may fall a matter which he describes as "one entirely for the Ministers."

As I read the Act and the Intrument of Instructions, there are no matters which can be dismissed from consideration as "entirely for the Ministers": they act in the name of the Governor and their executive acts can become a matter for the individual judgment of the Governor if he forms the opinion that to be guided by them would be inconsistent (1) with the fulfilment of his special responsibilities under the Act, or (2) with the proper discharge of functions which he is otherwise by or under the Act required to exercise in his individual judgment. We do not precisely know which of these two opinions he has formed, but by the issue of the second Ordinance he has impliedly formed one or other of them, and has therefore exercised his individual judgment; unless, indeed, he has promulgated the Ordinance for the purpose of discharging functions which lie within his discretion.

We have been informed that the attention of the learned Judge was never drawn to s. 8 (1) (h) of the Act which makes it one of the Special Responsibilities of the Governor to secure that the due discharge of his functions, whether discretionary or in the exercise of his individual judgment under the Act (which of course includes the Instrument of Instructions), is not prejudiced or impeded by any course of action taken with respect to any other matter. I should have thought that to permit a Member of the House of Representatives to be penalised for his loyalty and readiness to serve in the armed forces of the Crown in time of war might well impede the course of action taken with respect to defence: that is however, entirely by the way, and I must not be taken to hazard any guess as to the grounds upon which the Governor saw fit to promulgate the Ordinance in question; it seems to me irrelevant to inquire. It was, again, unfortunate that the attention of the learned trial Judge was not drawn to the important decision of the Privy Council in Bhagat Singh v. Emperor (1).

There the Governor-General, acting under s. 72, Govt. of India Act, 1915, being satisfied that a state of emergency existed, promulgated an Ordinance expressed to be for the peace and good Govt. of India. Its validity was challenged. Lord Dunedin said (at p. 283*):

"The petitioners ask this Board to find that a state of emergency did not exist. That raises directly the question who is to be the judge of whether a state of emergency exists. A state of emergency is something that does not permit of any exact definition—It connotes a state of matters calling for drastic action which is to be judged as such by some one. It is more than obvious that that some one must be the Governor-General and he alone. Any other view would render utterly inept the whole provision. Emergency demands immediate action, and that action is prescribed to be taken by the Governor-General. It is he alone who can promulgate the Ordinance.

Yet, if the view urged by the petitioners is right, the judgment of the Governor-General could be upset either (a) by this Board declaring that once the Ordinance was challenged in proceedings by way of habeas corpus the Crown ought to prove affirmatively before a Court that a state of emergency existed, or (b) by a finding of this Board—after contentions and protracted enquiry—that no state of emergency existed, and that the Ordinance with all that followed on it was illegal.

In fact, the contention is so completely without foundation on the face of it that it would be idle to allow an appeal to argue about it.

It was next said that the Ordinance did not conduce to the peace and good Govt. of British India. The same remark applies. The Governor-General is also the judge of that. The power given by s. 72 is an absolute power, without any limits prescribed, except only that it cannot do what the Indian Legislature would be unable to do although it is made clear that it is only to be used in extreme cases of necessity where the good Govt. of India demands it."

And in In the matter of Amrita Bazar Patrika (2) at p. 168 Rankin, C. J. said:

"As the validity of the Ordinance rests neither upon proof of an emergency nor upon the recital of an emergency but upon the judgment of the Governor-General that immediate action of this character was necessary, there is in my judgment, no basis for the contention that the Ordinance was not valid and effective. In no event could the validity of the Ordinance be determined by evidence adduced before the Court as to whether a state of emergency did or did not exist."

The Court will thus not inquire whether circumstances in fact existed which rendered immediate action necessary before the promulgation of an Ordinance. That is for the Governor to decide. I cannot see that the Court should assume the burden of deciding for what purpose the action was necessary. In the Lahore case the purpose of the Ordinance was expressed to be for the peace and good Govt. of British India, and the Governor-General was held to be the judge of that—here the purpose is expressed to be that of enabling the Governor satisfactorily to discharge certain functions, and I regard myself as bound by the authority of the Privy Council decision to say that the Governor must be the judge of that. I think it unnecessary to go further and examine the provisions of s. 5 (3) of the Act.

In this view of the law the appeal must be allowed. Each of the Ordinances was valid and since the second followed the first with no intervening gap there is no ground for stating that the second Ordinance would have been invalid as an Act of the Legislature. The plaintiff-appellant is entitled to a declaration in the terms sought by him in his plaint; for the reasons given by the learned Judge the respondent had no power to determine the matters disposed of by him in what has been described as his ruling of April 2, 1940. The question at issue was not a point of order at all for the Speaker, nor was it a matter for the House to determine. It was a point of law affecting the status of an individual and is for this Court to determine. With regard to the prayer for an injunction this has been most properly withdrawn upon the assurance that the Speaker will refrain from any action to the prejudice of the appellant's rights as declared in our judgment. In any event the granting of an injunction is a discretionary matter and we should be loath to consider that circumstances could make it desirable to grant one in such a case. Before concluding the judgment I desire to express our appreciation of the assistance given to us by the learned Advocate-General whom we have heard as amicus curiae, and to add one or two further observations.

U Kyaw Din who appeared to represent the respondent informs us that from the circumstances in which he was engaged, instructed and remunerated he thought he was appearing instead of the Advocate-General. He has gone into the circumstances at length and we think there was confusion of thought which arose not unnaturally but which was allowed to continue through inadvertence. He was entirely mistaken in his view, for the Advocate-General was in no way concerned, but the learned trial Judge was led to believe that the Govt. was represented before him when in fact that was not the case. It was a misfortune for the Judge, and it is apparent from what we have learned that, apart from being unintentionally misled on this matter, the crucial authorities on the law were never cited to him and he was also misinformed on several facts, it appears that he did not even see the original Ordinance and could never have known that it was incorrectly reproduced in the Official Gazette, the latter being receivable in evidence as a Govt. publication, and presumed to be accurate. On these two matters, namely, the date of promulgation, and the Privy Council decision to which I have referred, he was entirely without the data which have proved conclusive in the determination of this appeal. This appeal will accordingly be allowed; the judgment and decree of this Court on the original side, dismissing the plaintiffs' suit is set aside and instead thereof the plaintiff-appellant will be granted declarations as prayed for in the first and second prayers of his plaint. The respondent must pay the costs both here and in the Court below. Advocate's fee in this Court forty gold mohurs.

Dunkley, J.—I concur in the conclusions at which my Lord the Chief Justice has arrived. The points which were considered and decided by the learned trial Judge in his judgment may be briefly summarized as follows: (1) that this High Court has jurisdiction to determine the questions raised by and to give the reliefs claimed in the plaint; (2) that the plaintiff-appellant was holding an office of profit under the Crown on March 28 and 29; (3) that Ordinance No. VII of 1939 ceased to operate at midnight of March 28-29; (4) that Ordinance No. V of 1940 was not promulgated until March 30; (5) that the Courts have jurisdiction to enquire whether an Ordinance purporting to be promulgated under s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act, was in fact promulgated under the conditions prescribed by sub-s. (1) of that section; (6) that Ordinance No. V of 1940 was ultra vires the Governor. As long ago as 1866 their Lordships of the Privy Council in Eshen Chunder Singh v. Shama Churn Bhutto (3) at p. 20 pointed out "the absolute necessity that the determinations in a cause should be founded upon a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made." This salutary rule is often forgotten, and, with the greatest respect, it was apparently overlooked by the learned trial Judge. Order VIII, r. 5, Civil P. C., enacts that

" every allegation of fact in the plaint, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication or stated to be not admitted in the pleading of the defendant, shall be taken to be admitted."

Paragraph 10 of the plaint states: "On March 29, 1940, His Excellency the Governor promulgated under s. 42 of the Act an Ordinance, being No. V of 1940 ...." Paragraph 5 of the written statement of the defendant-respondent reads : "Paragraphs ...10 ... of the plaint need no reply." Hence the allegation in para. 10 of the plaint, that Ordinance No. V of 1940 was promulgated on March 29, was not denied specifically or by necessary implication or stated to be not admitted in the written statement, and should therefore have been taken to be admitted. Moreover, the printed copies of the proceedings of the House of Representatives on March 29, and April 1 and 2, were admitted as evidence by consent, and the defendant-respondent's "ruling" delivered on April 2 (at p. 1729) contains the following sentence: "It is admitted that in the afternoon of March 29, ...His Excellency the Governor promulgated the new Ordinance under s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act." This is an unequivocal admission that Ordinance No. V of 1940 was promulgated on March 29, and this question was not in dispute between the parties. Hence, with all due respect, it was not open to the learned Judge to come to the finding, at which he did arrive, that this Ordinance was not promulgated until March 30. Order VIII, r. 2, Civil P. C., enacts that

"the defendant must raise by his pleading all matters which show the suit not to be maintainable... ..and all such grounds of defence as ... would raise issues of fact not arising out of the plaint, as, for instance, ...facts showing illegality."

The defendant-respondent did not, either during the prolonged discussion in the House of Representives, or in his "ruling" of April 2, or in his written statement, suggest that Ordinance No. V of 1940 was not validly promulgated by the Governor under s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act. In fact, as I have already stated, he did not reply to para. 10 of the plaint, which set out the facts concerning the due promulgation of this Ordinance, and the defence that the Ordinance was ultra vires the Governor was raised only in the written statement of defendant No. 2 in the suit, against whom the appeal has been withdrawn. The decision of the learned Judge on the first three points was correct and was in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, and, so far as the present respondent is concerned, no other issue arose on the pleadings. However, I propose to make a few observations regarding each of the points decided by the learned trial Judge. There was no substance in the respondent's demurrer to jurisdiction. The Speaker derives his authority and powers from the Govt. of Burma Act, and in deciding a disputed question as to whether a duly elected and sitting member of the House of Representatives had since become disqualified under s. 25 (1) (a) of the Act by reason of having accepted an office of profit under the Crown he arrogated to himself the status of a Court, and furthermore in his "ruling" of April 2, which is nothing more nor less than a considered judgment, he purported to inflict a penaly of Rs. 500 per day on the appellant. These are things which the Speaker is expressly prohibited from doing by s. 27 (3) of the Act. He cannot assume the status of a Court and no punitive powers can be conferred on him. Yet he assumed authority to deprive the appellant of his salary as a member of the House of Representatives and to inflict a fine of Rs. 500 a day on him. As regards the argument that, in the absence of any provision of the Govt of Burma Act declaring the authority which shall determine whether a seat is vacant or not, by implication the Speaker must be that authority, I do not understand nor has it been explained to us, how any such implication arises. Possibly the Legislature could pass an Act, or the Governor could make a rule under cl. 15, Sch. III to the Govt. of Burma Act, determining the authority which shall declare when a seat becomes vacant and ousting the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in such a matter; but in view of s 27 (3) neither the Legislature nor the Governor could confer this authority on the Speaker, and in the absence of any such Act or rule ousting the jurisdiction of the Courts such a matter is clearly a question of status to be determined by the Courts under s. 42, Specific Relief Act.

The correctness of the learned trial Judge's conclusion on the second point has not been challenged by the appellant. On the third point the respondent held in his "ruling" of April 2 that Ordinance No. VII of 1939 ceased to operate at midnight of March 27-28 a patently erroneous decision which his learned Counsel has not attempted to support. The contention now is, that, as the Legislature re-assembled at 11 A. M. on February 15, under s. 41 (2) (a), Govt. of Burma Act, this Ordinance ceased to operate at 11 A. M. on March 28. But as the learned trial Judge has pointed out, the law takes no notice of the fractions of a day, and he has cited a line of cases in which this maxim has been applied, of which I need mention only Tomlinson v. Bullock (4) at p. 232. Section 41 (2) (a) enacts that an Ordinance promulgated under that section shall cease to operate "at the expiration of six weeks from the re-assembly of the Legislature," and if the expression "six weeks" is to be construed as equivalent to any 42 consecutive days, then Ordinance No. VII of 1939 ceased to operate at midnight of March 28-29. That conclusion is sufficient for the disposal of this case. But it seems to me that it might have been urged with cogency that if Parliament had intended the period to be 42 days it would have said so in express terms, and that this construction does violence to the actual wording of the section; and, further, that just as, in law, a day begins at midnight and ends at midnight, so a week begins on Saturday/Sunday midnights and ends on the following Saturday/Sunday midnight. Then it would follow, on the analogy of the cases cited by the learned trial Judge, that when the expression "week" is used in a statute no notice can be taken of the fractions of a week. If this is the correct interpretation of s. 41 (2) (a) it follows that Ordinance No. VII of 1939 ceased to operate only at midnight of March 30-31. Attractive as I find this line of thought to be, this view has not been raised before us in argument, and for the decision of this appeal it is unnecessary to consider it, and therefore I must reserve it for further consideration if and when the question arises again.

As regards the fourth point, it is most unfortunate that the learned trial Judge was left with the erroneous impression in his mind that what was read out to the members of the House of Representatives by the Speaker on March 29, was a typed copy of Ordinance No. V of 1940. The document which was read out by the Speaker has been shown to us by the learned Advocate-General, and it is now admitted on all hands that what was read was the original Ordinance, signed by the Governor and in part in the Governor's own handwriting. It is even more unfortunate that this Ordinance was inaccurately reproduced in the Gazette Extraordinary of March 30. The public and the Courts are entitled, and in fact are required by law, to rely on the accuracy of statements appearing in the Burma Gazette, and the failure of the judicial department of the Govt. of Burma to publish in this Gazette the identical terms of the Ordinance as made and promulgated by the Governor is extremely surprising. In the course of the hearing of this appeal, we have had produced before us two notifications in the Gazette purporting to publish two different Ordinances of the Governor promulgated under s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act, and they are in essentially different forms. At the risk of being accused of going outside the matters falling for determination in this appeal, I venture to suggest that there ought to be a common form of Preamble for all such Ordinances, and that the premable should set out that the Governor is satisfied as required by the terms of s. 42 (1) and also the purpose within s. 42 (1) for which the Ordinance is promulgated. In making this suggestion I have not overlooked the judgment of Rankin, C. J., in In the matter of Amrita Bazar Patrika (2) at p. 168*, and I realize that it is not legally necessary that this should be done, and that legally all that is necessary is that the Governor should declare that he promulgates the Ordinance under the provisions of s. 42, Govt. of Burma Act; but I think that the adoption of this suggestion might make for the better understanding by the public of the reason and necessity for the issue of an Ordinance.

Now, under s. 42 (1), the Governor "promulgates" an Ordinance, and there is no special legal significance about the word "promulgate"; it is an ordinary English word, not in common use, which according to Murray's Dictionary means to publish or proclaim formally. That is the sense in which it is used in ss. 41 and 42, Govt. of Burma Act. It does not connote publication in the Official Gazette: that is, as my Lord has pointed out, quite unnecessary, and indeed, if it were necessary, it would render the provision of s. 42 ineffectual for the purpose which they are obviously designed to meet. Publication in the Gazette is merely a convenient means of bringing the Ordinance to the notice of the public generally, but not a necessary means. As the learned trial Judge has pointed out, the Speaker is a medium of communication from the Governor to the House of Representatives. In that capacity, the Speaker read out the original Ordinance No. V of 1940 to the members of the House. How better could this Ordinance be "promulgated" than by reading it out formally to the body of persons most affected thereby? To my mind, it is clear that this Ordinance was promulgated, within the meaning of s. 42 (1), Govt. of Burma Act, when it was read out by the Speaker to the House of Representatives on March 29. Therefore, in view of the provisions of s. 4 (2), General Clauses Act, it came into operation at midnight of March 28-29. Points Nos. 5 and 6 are covered by authority namely, the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bhagat Singh v. Emperor (1) at p. 253*, and it is highly regrettable that this case was not cited to the learned trial Judge. In view of this judgment of the Judicial Committee, it must, with all due respect, be held that the decisions of the learned Judge on these two points were wrong. I therefore agree that this appeal must be allowed, the judgment and decree of the original side of this Court reversed, and the plaintiff-appellant granted declarations in accordance with prayers (a) and (b) of the plaint. I agree with my Lord's order regarding the costs of the suit and the appeal.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Second Appeal No. 408 of 1938
October 24, 1940
THOM, C. J. AND GANGA NATH, J.

MUNICIPAL BOARD, GORAKHPUR—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
RAI KAMLAPAT RAI AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 189, 120, 8 (i) (j)—S. 189, if refers to out-fall of drain—Ss. 189, 120 and 8 (i) (j) whether empower Municipality to acquire land outside Municipal limits for drain or sewage works without owner's consent and without notice and compensation—Drain constructed by Municipality for draining sewage and rain water into plaintiff's jheel without his consent—Suit by him for injunction—Municipality held acted negligently and arbitrarily—Practice—Evidence—Construction of drain for running rain and sewage water into plaintiff's jheel*—Plaintiff's suit for injunction on ground that drain water would pollute* jheel and damage plants and fish in it—Municipality must prove to the contrary—It cannot be allowed to adduce expert evidence that drain water would not pollute jheel, after close of evidence.

Section 189 U. P. Municipalities Act does not refer to the out-fall of any drain which may be constructed by a Municipality. It does not empower a Municipality to take its sewage outside the Municipal boundaries and dispose of it where it likes upon private property regardless of the rights of the property owner. Sections 189 and 120 read with s. 8 (i) (j) do not confer upon the Municipality the power to take land outside the Municipality for the purposes of a drain or a sewage works without notice to the owner or the occupier of that land and without his consent and without compensation.

A Municipal Board constructed a drain for running the sewage and rain water of the city into the plaintiff's jheel situated outside the Municipal limits. The plaintiff who derived an income from the jheel brought a suit for injunction against the Board. The Court found that the dirty water would pollute the jheel and prove deleterious to the plants and fish in the jheel:

Held, that even if the Board were within its rights in using the plaintiff's jheel for the disposal of the sewage of the city, it was acting arbitrarily and negligently in that it did not consult the plaintiff or offer him compensation and, secondly, it did not take ordinary and reasonable steps to purify the sewage before running it on to the plaintiff's property. Injunction could therefore be granted.

Held, further that it was for the Municipality to prove that the sullage was so mixed with pure rain water that what flowed into the jheel would not have any deleterious effect upon the plants and fish, but after the evidence was closed the Municipality could not be allowed to adduce expert evidence to show that the drain water would not pollute the jheel as the Municipality knew well what case it had to meet.

S. A. from the decision of the Additional Civil Judge, Gorakhpur, dated November 30, 1937.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and A. Sanyal, for the Appellant.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Respondents.

Thom, C. J. — This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for an injunction. The plaintiff is one of the owners of a jheel near Gorakhpur known as the Ramgarh tal. Defendant No. 1 is the Municipal Board of Gorakhpur and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are co-owners of the said jheel. The plaintiff seeks an order injunction in the following terms :

"That a permanent injunction be issued against the Municipal Board, Gorakhpur, forbidding it from constructing the drain and from accumulating or allowing to accumulate, and from flowing or discharging any rain, surplus, artificial or dirty and foul water or other material by any artificial means or operations or through the newly dug drain into or near or about the said Ramgarh tal or on the plaintiff's land."

The material facts of the case are not in dispute. Ramgarh jheel lies on a level lower than that of Gorakhpur. The jheel in the rains is about five miles long by three miles broad, in the dry season two miles long by one-and a-half mile broad. The plaintiff avers that he derives along with the other co-owners a considerable income from the plants which grow in the jheel, from the fish in the jheel and from crops grown upon the land which is covered by the jheel during the rainy season but which during the dry season can be cultivated. The Municipal Board of Gorakhpur for purposes of draining part of the city of Gorakhpur have constructed a drain from the city to a point close to the Ramgarh tal. This drain was practically completed in 1935 and the Municipal Board intended to drain the storm water and the sullage and other dirty water from Gorakhpur into the jheel. The plaintiff objected. He averred that the drainge of the dirty water into the jheel would pollute the jheel and destroy the fish and plants, and further as a result of the construction of the drain a larger volume of rain water would flow into the jheel than did find its way into the jheel by natural water courses and sewage before the drain was constructed. The trial Court dismissed the suit. The learned Civil Judge in the lower Appellate Court reversed the judgment of the learned Munsif and has decreed the suit. The findings of fact by the learned Civil Judge are against the Municipal Board. Upon a consideration of the evidence he found as follows:

"(1) Prior to the construction of the disputed drain only rain water and not sullage water of the city flowed into the plaintiff's lake (2) The entire rain water of the city did not flow into the plaintiff's tal but only of half of the city. (3) Most of the water so flowing was absorbed in the intervening kachcha land and ponds and very little quantity of even that half flowed into the plaintiff's tank. (4) It is not proved that the aforesaid water entered the plaintiff's tank at the point where the disputed drain empties its water now. (5) The above water formely flowed through natural channels and not artificial ones and it is not proved that the disputed drain stands in place of them. (6) The new drain discharges into the plaintiff's tank the entire rain and sullage water of the city."

The learned Judge visited the jheel and in the course of his judgment referring to his inspection he observes:

"At the time of my inspection I found the place where the disputed water entered the plaintiff's tank so full of offensive smell, that it was undoubtedly impossible for any life to survive there. The entire rain water of such a big city as Gorakhpur is next likely to overflow the banks of the lake and the crops like Boro, Jarhan etc., which can only grow in shallow water, are likely to suffer. I therefore find that the disputed drain will cause injury to the plaintiff's crops, fish etc, in their lake."

These findings are findings of fact which cannot be disturbed in second appeal. It was contended for the Municipality however that the learned Munsif in the trial Court had wrongfully refused to permit the Municipality to produce expert evidence to prove that the water flowing through the drain into the jheel was not filthy water and would not pollute the jheel. Learned Counsel contended that an application had been made after the evidence had been closed in which the Municipality prayed that they might be permitted to adduce expert evidence and that this prayer had been refused. It appears however that no such application was presented. After the evidence had been closed an application was preferred in which the Municipal Board requested the Court to direct that the water flowing through the drain should be tested by a certain medical officer of health. This prayer was refused in our judgment rightly. The Municipal Board knew well what case it had to meet. The plaintiff alleged in his plaint that the water flowing into the jheel through the aforementioned drain would pollute the jheel. It was a matter of admission that not only did rain water flow through the drain but also sullage from at least half of the large city of Gorakhpur. In our judgment in these circumstances it was clearly for the Municipal Board to show that the sullage was so mixed with pure rain water that what flowed into the jheel would not have any deleterious effect upon the plants and fish. It was maintained however that even upon the finding that water which flowed into the jheel through the said drain would pollute the jheel the plaintiff was not entitled to decree in terms of the prayer of his plaint. It was urged that in constructing the said drain and draining the rain water and sullage from the city of Gorakhpur into the plaintiff's jheel the Municipality was acting in virtue of its statutory powers under s. 189, Municipalities Act, and that therefore the plaintiff had no right to challenge its action. Section 189, Municipalities Act, enjoins that:

"(1) The Board may construct, within or, subject to the provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 120, outside the Municipality, such drains as it thinks necessary for keeping the Municipality properly cleansed and drained and may carry such drains through, across or under any street or place, and, after reasonable notice in writing to the owner or occupier into, through or under any buildings or land."

Section 120 is in the following terms :

"(1) The Municipal fund and all property vested in a Board shall be applied for the purposes, express or implied for which, by or under this or any other enactment, powers are conferred or duties or obligations are imposed upon the Board.

(2) Provided that the Board shall not incur any expenditure for acquiring or renting land beyond the limits of the Municipality or for constructing any work beyond such limits except :

(a) with the sanction of the Local Govt., and (b) on such terms and conditions as the Local Govt. imposes."

With these two sections may be read s. 8 (1) (j) :

"A Board may make provision, within the limits of the Municipality and with the sanction of the Commissioner outside such limits for,

(j) establishing and maintaining a farm or factory for the disposal of sewage."

It is clear that the intention of the Legislature was that so far as property outside the Municipal limits was concerned the Municipal Board could acquire land for the purposes of a drain or for the purposes of disposal of sewage only with the consent of the Local Govt. and upon such terms as the Local Govt. approved. The aforementioned provisions do not, as was contended by learned Counsel for the Municipality, confer upon the Municipality the power to take land outside the Municipality for the purposes of a drain or a sewage works without notice to the owner or the occupier of that land and without his consent and without compensation. During the course of the argument there was an extensive citation of authorities upon the question of the powers which a Municipality could exercise in the discharge of its statutory functions. It is unnecessary to refer in detail to these decisions. The law upon the point is not in doubt. It was clearly expounded in East Fremantle Corporation v. Annois (1). The facts of that case were that a Municipality in Western Australia at the request of the ratepayers, in order to improve a street reduced the gradient opposite the respondent's house so that it was left on the edge of a cutting with a drop of about six or eight feet to the road. It was held by the Privy Council that the respondent was without remedy since none had been given by statute and the appellants had not exceeded the powers conferred upon them by the Western Australia Municipal Institutions Act. In the course of his judgment Lord Macnaghten observes :

"The law has been settled for the last hundred years. If persons in the position of the appellants, acting in the execution of a public trust and for the public benefit, do an act which they are authorized by law to do, and do it in a proper manner though the act so done works a special injury to a particular individual, the individual injured cannot maintain an action. He is without remedy unless a remedy is provided by the statute. That was distinctly laid down by Lord Keynon and Buller, J., and their view was approved by Abbott, C. J. and the Court of King's Bench. At the same time Abbott, C. J. observed that if in doing the act authorized the trustees acted arbitrarily, carelessly, or oppressively, the law in his opinion had provided a remedy. Those words, "arbitrarily, carelessly or oppressively," were taken from the judgment of Gibbs, C. J., in Sutton v. Clarke (2), decided in 1815. As applied to the circumstances of a particular case, they probably create no difficulty. When they are used generally and at large it is not perhaps very easy to form a conception of their precise scope and exact meaning. In simpler language, Turner, L. J., observed in a somewhat similar case that "such powers are at all times to be exercised bona fide and with judgment and discretion." And in a recent case, where persons acting in the execution of a public trust were sued in respect of an injury likely to result from their act, the present master of the rolls, then Collins, L. J, observed that 'the only obligation on the defendants was to use reasonable care to do no unnecessary damage to the plaintiffs."

In the present case, even if under the statute the Municipal Board of Gorakhpur had the power to drain the sewage and the storm water of the city on to the plaintiff's property the Board has in our judgment acted arbitrarily and negligently. According to the plaintiff's allegations the plaintiff derives an income from the jheel and according to the finding by the learned Civil Judge in the lower Appellete Court water drained by the Board into the jheel will pollute the jheel and prove deleterious to the plants and fish. Even if the Board were within its rights in using the plaintiff's jheel for the disposal of the sewage of the city, it was acting arbitrarily and negligently in that it did not consult the plaintiff or offer him compensation and, secondly it did not take ordinary and reasonable steps to purify the sewage before running it on to the plaintiff's property.

Be that as it may, in our judgment the provisions of the Municipalities Act do not entitle the Municipality to drain the sewage from the city on to private property out of the boundaries of the city without the owner's consent. If the Legislature had intended to endow Municipalities with such wide and far reaching powers inconsonant with the rights of private property, it would have so declared in clear and specific terms. The provisions of the Act already referred to appear to us rather to contemplate that a Municipality if it desires for any purpose to use land outside its boundaries it should acquire the land for example under the Land Acquisition Act or by a private agreement with the sanction of the Local Govt. It is to be observed further that s. 189 does not refer to the out-fall of any drain which may be constructed by a Municipality. Provision is made for carrying a drain underneath or through or into property but there is certainly nothing in the section to justify the contention that a Municipality can take its sewage outside the Municipal boundaries and dispose of it where it likes upon private property regardless of the rights of the property owner. In our opinion the Municipal Board of Gorakhpur have acted in this matter in a high-handed and arbitrary manner. It is difficult to understand how a public body could conceive that it had any right to drain the dirty water from the city on to private property outside the limits of the Municipality without the owner's permission. In contesting the plaintiff's claim instead of taking the more reasonable course of acquiring the jheel under the Land Acquisition Act or making some reasonable provision for the construction of a sewage farm or factory the Board, in our opinion, have not shown that circumspection and sense of responsibility which is to be expected from a public corporation.

By the time the suit was disposed of in the trial Court apparently the drain had been completed and water was being drained through it into the plaintiff's jheel. The learned Civil Judge in the lower Appellate Court had this fact and the immediate difficulties which faced the Municipal Board in view when he made his final order. He granted decree restraining the defendants from discharging the rain and sullage water of the City of Gorakhpur into the plaintiff's jheel but he deemed it proper to direct that the decree should come into force after the case had been finally decided in this Court. In the public interest whilst dismissing this appeal we consider it expedient that the Municipal Board should have some time within which to take such steps as it may be advised for the disposal of the water and sullage which at the present moment is flowing into the plaintiff's jheel through the aforementioned drain. In the result the appeal is dismissed with costs. The operation of the decree however, will be suspended untill January 15, 1941. It will be open to parties at any time to apply for further orders. The suspension of the decree will not affect any claim for damages which the plaintiff may have.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 22, 90—Notice under r. 22 signed by judgment-debtor—He cannot contend that he was unaware of the notice—Sale, when can be set aside—Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938), s. 16—Act coming into force before the conclusion of sale—No objection under s. 16 taken—Sale held—Objection under s. 16 in application under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code cannot be allowed subsequently—Application under r. 90 dismissed by lower Court—In appeal against dismissal objection under s. 16 cannot be allowed.

Where the judgment-debtor had signed the notice under O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C., he cannot afterwards say that he was not aware of the notice.

In order to entitle the judgment-debtor to have the sale held in execution of a decree against him, set aside, it is to be established that there had been some illegality or irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale which had resulted in the property being sold at an inadequate price to the prejudice of the judgment-debtor.

Where before the sale was concluded, the Bihar Money-lenders Act had come in force, and the Court could be asked to value, the property under s. 16 of the Act, but the Court was never asked to value, and no objection whatsoever was taken to the sale proceeding on the old proclamation of sale this point cannot be put forward before the Court because it was a ground that could have been put forward before the sale was concluded and therefore, not a ground which could be urged even for the admission of the application under O. XXI, r. 90. If the lower Court could not admit the judgment-debtor's application under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C. on this allegation, he cannot raise it in appeal before the High Court.

A. from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Motihari, dated July 29, 1939.

Mr. Raj Kishore Prasad for Mr. Jaleswar Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kameshwar Dayal, for the Respondents.

Harries, C. J—This is a judgment-debtor's appeal from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge of Motihari dismissing his application which had been made under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C.

The decree-holders held a judgment against the judgment-debtor-appellant and proceeded to execute the same. On August 1, 1938, the sale proclamation was issued announcing the sale of a number of properties. On November 10, 1938, the sale was held and the properties were sold for an amount less than the decretal amount.

On December 10, 1938, the judgment-debtor filed an application for setting aside the sale, and the application was stated to be made under s. 47 and O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C. It is clear, however, from a perusal of the application that it was one under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C. because it was alleged that the notices and processes had been fraudulently suppressed and that by reason thereof the property had been surreptitiously sold at a grossly inadequate price to the prejudice of the judgment-debtor. The application eventually was heard by the learned Subordinate Judge of Motihari, and evidence was led by the appellant with a view to showing that the processes had been suppressed and had never been served. The learned Subordinate Judge in a careful judgment has dealt with this evidence and has come to the conclusion that all the processes in this case were duly served. The reasons, which the learned Subordinate Judge gives for his finding, cannot possibly be challenged and are not seriously challenged in this Court. It is clear that the judgment debtor had signed the notice under O. XXI, r. 22, Civil P. C. and all he could say, when he was confronted with his signature was, that the signature on the document resembled his own; but he could not remember whether he put his signature on the document. I am not surprised that the learned Subordinate Judge held that it was duly served upon him and that it bore his signature. The learned Subordinate Judge was also satisfied on abundant evidence that the sale had been properly published according to law. In the result the learned Subordinate Judge held that the judgment-debtor had wholly failed to show any irregularity or illegality in the publication and conduct of the sale.

The learned Judge further considered the evidence as to whether any of the properties in question had been sold at an inadequate price and eventually came to the conclusion that only one property, namely Sauna, had been sold at a price which was inadequate. He valued Sauna at Rs. 1,500, whereas it was sold for Rs. 650. In his view the prices obtained for the other properties were fair and reasonable prices.

Mr. Raj Kishore Prasad has attempted to challenge the Judge's finding with regard to one property, namely Narwal Sikatia. The learned Judge proceeded on the basis that this property was encumbered to the extent of Rs. 7,000, though one witness stated that the encumbrance was Rs. 13,000. The learned Judge, after considering the income of this property, came to the conclusion that unencumbered it could not be worth more than Rs. 7,600 and Rs. 600, had actually been paid for it. It was urged that the learned Judge was wrong in not holding that the property was encumbered to the extent of Rs. 13,000; but I cannot see how that can possibly help the judgment-debtor. If the property was encumbered for Rs. 13,000, then clearly the equity of redemption was worth nothing at all, and Rs. 600, was actually paid for it. The findings as to the other properties have not been challenged.

As a result of these findings the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the application. He pointed out that though a grossly inadequate price had been obtained for one property, that was no ground for setting aside the sale. In order to entitle the judgment-debtor to have the sale set aside, it had to be established that there had been some illegality or irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale which had resulted in the property being sold at an inadequate price to the prejudice of the judgment-debtor. As the judgment-debtor had failed to establish the irregularities and illegalities alleged by him, his application was bound to fail.

In appeal in this Court an entirely new ground has been taken which was never urged before the Court below and, indeed, never even mentioned in the petition under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C. On July 15, 1938, the Bihar Money-lenders Act (Act III of 1938) came into force. That Act has now been replaced by the Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act, 1939, and ss. 16 and 17 of the old Act are replaced by ss. 13 and 14 of the new Act.

It is to be observed that these new sections are precisely in same terms as the old sections. Section 16 of the 1938 Act enjoined the Court in the execution proceedings to hear the parties to the decree and to estimate the value of the property attached or of that portion of such property the proceeds of the sale of which the Court considers would be sufficient to satisfy the decree; and sub-s. (2) of the section provides that any person aggrieved by an order passed under sub-s. (1) can appeal to the Court to which appeals from the Court executing the decree ordinarily lie. This section contemplates that the judgment-debtor should make an application for valuation of the property, and in such a case the Court is bound to value, and if it refused to do so or values improperly there is a right of appeal. Section 17 of the old Act then provided that after such valuation the sale proclamation should include only such portion of the property as would be sufficient to satisfy the decree as found in the earlier proceedings and the value of such property as found by the Court.

In the present case the sale proclamation was issued on August 1, 1938, that is after the Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938, came into force. No application was made to the Court to value the properties or any portion thereof which would be sufficient to satisfy the decree. The sale proclamation contained the value given by the decree-holders, and in due course the properties were sold on November 10, 1938. It is now contended for the first time that the failure to value the properties and to give the value so found in the proclamation of sale constitute an irregularity or illegality in the publication and conduct of the sale which would entitle the Court to set aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C.

As I have stated, this point is taken for the first time, and we have no findings of fact as to why no such application was made to the Court to value the properties under s. 17, Bihar Money-lenders Act, 1938. It was certainly in force and an application could have been made; but no such application was made. No objection was taken that the properties had not been valued up until the time the sale took place, though the present objection could well have been urged in which case the Court would have been bound to value as directed by s. 16 and proceed with the sale as directed by s. 17 of the 1938 Act. Nothing was done, and we have no means of ascertaining why the sale proceeded in the manner it did. Has the point been taken in the Court below, all the facts would have been investigated, and we would have been in a position to consider the matter on its merits.

In my view the point was not even open to the judgment-debtor in the Court below. The objection that the property should have been valued and the value inserted in a fresh proclamation of sale was one which could have been taken and should have been taken before the sale took place and by an amendment of O. XXI, r. 90 made by this Court it is expressly provided that no application to set aside a sale shall be admitted unless it discloses a ground which could not have been put forward by the applicant before the sale was concluded. The Act was in force, and the Court could have been asked to value, and an appal lay from its decision. The Court was never asked to value, and no objection whatsoever was taken to the sale proceeding on the old proclamation of sale. If this point had been put forward before the learned Subordinate Judge, he would have been bound to hold that it was a ground that could have been put forward before the sale was concluded and, therefore, was not a ground which could be urged even for the admission of the application. If the lower Court could not have even admitted the judgment-debtor's application under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil P. C. on the present allegation, how can this Court in appeal reverse the Court below upon this point? If it was not open to the judgment-debtor to raise the matter in the Court below, clearly he cannot raise it in appeal before this Court. In my judgment it would be wholly wrong to allow the judgment-debtor-appellant to raise this mixed question of law and fact at this stage even if there was no legal bar to his doing so. In my view, however, he cannot, by reason of the matters which I have referred, ask this Court at this stage to consider the matter. In any event, it appears clear from the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge that these properties, with the exception of one, realised their full value, and the inadequacy of price with regard to that one property is not a very serious matter.

For these reasons I hold that this appeal fails and would dismiss it with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Application in Suit No. 156 of 1940

March 4, 1940

PANCKRIDGE, J.

TOLARAM CHAMPALAL—PLAINTIFF

versus

JEWANRAM GANGARAM—DEFENDANT.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—By contract in writing defendants selling certain goods of Japanese manufacture to plaintiff—After shipment of part of goods defendants asking for extension of time for shipping remaining goods due to outbreak of war — Plaintiff not accepting request —Defendant under terms of contract cancelling it and repudiating liability for damages—Plaintiff's suit for damages—Defendant relying on arbitration clause in contract applying for stay—Defendant held could apply for stay but held that under special circumstances it could not be granted.

Under a contract in writing the defendants sold certain piecegoods of Japanese manufacture to the plaintiff. A part of the goods were shipped and accepted by the plaintiffs. Thereafter the defendants requested the plaintiff for an extension of time for shipping the rest of the goods due to outbreak of war. The plaintiff did not accept the request. The defendants thereupon informed the plaintiff that the contract stood cancelled as per terms of the contract and also repudiated his liability to pay any damages. The plaintiff instituted a suit for damages. Relying on the arbitration clause contained in the contract, the defendants applied for stay of suit under s. 19, Arbitration Act. It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff, that the defendant could not take up the position of cancelling the contract and at the same time invoke the arbitration clause in the contract:

Held, that by using the word "cancellation," the defendants meant no more than that owing to the events which had happened, they had been relieved of their liability to deliver the goods. They did not mean that the contract had come to an end for all purposes, as when a contract is rendered void by frustration. The defendants were not therefore deprived of their right to apply for, and obtain, an order for stay. Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. Ltd (1), Harinager Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Skoda (India), Ltd. (2) and Toller v. Law Accident Insurance Society, Ltd. (3), referred to.

Held, also that one of the questions which the tribunal dealing with his matter would have to decide was whether the state of things then existing in the Far East was war within the meaning of the contract. It was by no means a simple question of law and was most unsuited for decision by laymen. Under the terms of the contract the defendents were entitled to have the matter referred to the decision of two Japanese merchants. If the defendants were to take that course, the decision would cause considerable embarrassment to the parties responsible for it. That was a special circumstance in this case which must be taken into consideration. Having regard therefore to the nature of this dispute, and to the terms of this particular arbitration clause, the Court ought to exercise its discretion against the defendants. Edward Grey & Co. v. Tolme & Runge (No. 1) (4), relied on.

Mr. K. P. Khaitan, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Sethia, for the Defendant.

Order.—This is an application on the part of the defendants for an order staying the suit under the provisions of s. 19, Arbitration Act. The claim is one for damages said to have been occasioned by the failure of the defendants to deliver 19 out of 21 cases of piecegoods, which the defendants had sold to the plaintiff under a contract in writing dated December 29, 1938. Shipment under the contract was expressed to be "June—July 1932, via Rangoon" It is common ground that the piecegoods in question were of Japanese manufacture. On September 21, 1939, the defendants wrote to the plaintiffs as follows :

"We have been informed by our supplier's representative that on account of the very unsettled international situation they are unable to give definite information as regards the shipment of the goods relating to the contract above-mentioned. We draw attention to cl. 6 of the contract and make it clear that we are not in any way liable for late arrival of the goods."

The plaintiffs replied on September 22, by a letter in which they observed :

"The present international situation was created in the month of August and hence we fail to understand why the goods were not shipped in August."

On November 24, 1939, the defendants informed the plaintiffs that the goods had not yet been delivered and that the manufactures were asking for a further extension of a month which meant that shipment should be made in November 1939. The letter ends :

"If we do not receive confirmation of the required extension within 48 hours, we shall understand that you cancel the above goods, which please note."

The plaintiffs on November 28, wrote accepting November shipment with the usual late allowance, but apparently this acceptance was conditional on the defendants furnishing a satisfactory explanation of the delay, for, three days later, the plaintiffs write a letter which ends as follows :

"Please note that owing to your failure to supply the goods, we had to sustain a loss of about Rs. 2,000, and we shall look to you for the said loss. If we do not receive any satisfactory reply from you immediately, we shall be forced to do the needful in the matter as will be advised by our lawyer."

On December 7, 1939, the plaintiffs wrote to enquire by what vessel the goods had been shipped in November. This elicited no reply and on January 3, 1940, the plaintiffs' solicitors called on the defendants to deliver within 48 hours. On January 11, the defendant's solicitors replied stating that the plaintiffs had refused to agree to the extension of the time for shipment as requested, the contract stood cancelled and that there was no liability on the part of the defendants to pay any damage. The suit was filed on January 22, 1940, and notice of the present application was taken out on February 15. The arbitration clause is in the following terms :

"In the event of any dispute between the parties as to damage, difference, inferiority, short quantity or measure or weight or defect or amount of allowance or any dispute in question arising between the parties hereto regarding this contract, or the goods subject of this contract, it shall at the option of the sellers be referred to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce or two European or Japanese merchants, one to be named by each party."

It is evident from the correspondence that the defendants are seeking to justify their failure to perform the contract by relying on cl. 6. Clause 6 is as follows :

"Should the goods or any portion of the same not have been shipped owing to war, Govt. control, suppliers and or producers stopping payment or being prevented by accidents to or the destruction of works from preparing same or any other cause beyond human control or should they be destroyed or rendered unmerchantable in course of transit or from any cause whatsoever should fail to reach their destination after being shipped, then the contract shall be rescinded for such goods or portion thereof and the sellers shall not be responsible for any such non-fulfilment of the contract, in the event of the manufacturers experiencing any difficulties in making the goods such as Govt putting control on the output or stopping exports etc., directly or indirectly on account of war, the contract will be considered as cancelled unconditionally with respect to the entire lot or to the portion remaining unshipped as the case may be."

The reference to this clause and to the international situation, when regard is had to the place of origin of the goods, indicate that the defendants will maintain that the goods have not been shipped owing to war, within the meaning of the clause. The plaintiffs have, among other things, called attention to the use of the term "cancellation" by the defendants, and they say that the defendants should not be permitted to take up the position that the contract has been cancelled, and at the same time invoke the provisions of the arbitration clause in it. On that point I am not in agreement with the submissions made on the plaintiffs' behalf. By using the word "cancellation," I think the defendants mean no more than that owing to the events which have happened, they have been relieved of their liability to deliver the goods. They do not mean that the contract has come to an end for all purposes, as is the case when a contract is rendered void by frustration. An example of such a state of thing is to be found in Hirji Mulji v. Cheong Yue Steamship Co. Ltd. (1) where a steamship, the subject-matter of a charter party, was requisitioned by the Govt before the date of the charter party coming into operation. There it was held that the adventure having been frustrated by the action of the Govt, the charter party came to an end for all purposes, including the purpose of the arbitration clause. I have been referred to a case in which I dealt with a somewhat similar contention, Harinager Sugar Mills Ltd. v. Skoda (India) Ltd (2) and finally an authority of great weight, Toller v. Law Accident Insurance Society Ltd (3).

It has also been suggested that the defendants have not been ready and willing to do all things necessary for the proper conduct of the arbitration within the meaning of s. 19. The only ground for such a contention is their denial of liability and their statement that the contract has been cancelled. I think that these facts are quite insufficient to deprive them of the right which they would normally have to apply for, and obtain, an order for stay. I have referred to decisions of the Court of Appeal which show that in the vast majoirty of cases the Court will not on its discretion refuse to grant an application such as this one. I certainly should make the order asked for but for the decision of the Court of Appeal in Edward Grey & Co. v. Tolme & Runge (No. 1) (4). In that case there was a contract for the sale of goods to be shipped to Hamburg. There were provisions in the contract that in the event of Germany being involved in war with England, the contract should be deemed to be closed, and that if war should prevent shipment, any party should be entitled to go to arbitration. Before the contracts were performed, war broke out beween England and Germany with the result that the sellers were unable to ship the sugar. The buyers thereupon brought an action for a declaration that the contracts were suspended or dissolved and an injunction restraining the defendants from proceeding to arbitration. The defendants thereupon applied for a stay order under s. 4, Arbitration Act, 1899, which Scrutton, J. in his discretion refused. An appeal against his decision was unsuccessful.

The question there was a question of law as to the construction of the contracts. Now it seems to me that if Scrutton, J. was right in holding that the matter was not one which should be decided by arbitration, the sort of consideration which induced him to come to that decision applies far more strongly in the present case, because one of the questions which the tribunal dealing with this matter will have to decide, is whether the state of things now existing in the Far East is war within the meaning of cl. 6. It is by no means a simple question of law and appears to me most unsuited for

I cannot help feeling that if the defendants were to take that course, the decision would cause considerable embarassment to the parties responsible for it. That is a special circumstance in this case which I feel I am entitled to take into consideration. Having regard therefore to the decision in Edward Grey & Co. v. Tolme & Runge (No. 1). Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27 (1) (b)—Additional evidence—Appellate Court, when can allow.

Under O. XLI, r. 27 (1) (b) it is only where the Appellate Court "requires" (i e., finds it needful) that additional evidence can be admitted. It may be required to enable the Court to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, but in either case it must be the Court that requires it. The legitimate occasion for the exercise of this discretion is not whenever before the appeal is heard a party applies to adduce fresh evidence, but " when on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna becomes apparent." Where there is no inherent lacuna or where the Court does not require it to pronounce the judgment, the additional evidence cannot be allowed 132 Ind. Cas. 721 (1) and 74 Ind. Messrs. S. M. Mullick, M. N. Pal and D. P. Sinha, for the Appellant.

Messrs. B. N. Rai and Prem Lall, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by the defendant who is aggrieved by the concurrent decisions of the Courts below by which the suit instituted by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of 2 kathas 6 dhurs out of Survey plot No. 1029 in Khata No. 175 of village Bhagwanpur, has been decreed.

The facts found by the Courts below are no longer in dispute. It appears that on July 18, 1935, the settlement of this land was made by Mr. Gordon, who was then in charge of the estate of the plaintiffs to which they became entitled as a result of compromise in the Privy Council Appeal No. 79 of 1934 on February 21, 1935. The case of the plaintiffs was that Mr. Gordon had no right to make the settlement which was relied upon by the defendant. The defendant relied upon a registered kabuliyat which he had executed in favour of the Manager of the Court of Wards and also relied upon the fact that he had been paying rents to the plaintiffs. It was admitted that in the record there was no lease executed by or on behalf of the lessor, and, therefore, there was no document in writing from which the terms of the contract to transfer the land in dispute could be ascertained with reasonable certainty. In this state of the record the Courts below refused to apply the provisions of s. 53-A, T. P. Act, because there is nothing in writing to satisfy the requirements of the first clause of the section.

In appeal it had to be admitted by the learned Advocate for the appellant that on the record as it stands he could not successfully challenge the decision of the Courts below; but he desired that this Court should exercise its power under O. XLI, r. 27, Civil P. C. and take in fresh evidence either in this Court or that the case may be remanded to the Court below to enable the appellant to give fresh evidence there. Two applications have been filed in this Court in this connection. The first application was filed on September 2, 1940, with a prayer that the plaintiffs may be directed to produce the answer of the Collector, dated September 19, 1935, and that the Collector may be requested to produce the objection of the plaintiffs dated August 15, 1935, so that these two documents may be admitted as additional evidence. These two documents were never called for at any stage of the trial, nor was the learned District Judge who heard the appeal requested to send for these documents. By the second petition dated November 18, 1940, the prayer made to this Court was that Parwana No. 110 by which the settlement was said to have been made by Mr. Gordon with the appellant should be called for from the plaintiffs. There is also prayer that two rent receipts of the years 1342 and 1344 Fasli may be exhibited in this Court.

It is convenient to deal with the question of receipts first. It appears that these receipts were filed on January 5, 1938, in the trial Court long before the case was taken up for trial; but for some reasons which are impossible to ascertain these receipts were not proved in evidence, and, therefore, they were not exhibited. In the grounds of appeal to this Court it is stated in the 12th ground of the memorandum of appeal filed in this Court that the rent receipts ought to have been exhibited as the trial Court relied on them. On a perusal of the judgment of the trial Court it appears that this statement is wholly incorrect. There is no trace of any mention of these receipts in the judgment of the trial Court. The lower Appellate Court was asked to admit these rent receipts or that the suit should be remanded for the purpose of taking this additional evidence in order to enable the Court to pronounce judgment in favour of the appellant. These receipts, as already stated, are for 1342 and 1344 Fasli,; but the lower Appellate Court refused to admit these into evidence, because in its view even if the receipts were admitted in evidence, they would only establish that the lessor had accepted rents from the lessee. It was in consequence of this remark of the lower Appellate Court that the appellant has moved this Court to allow the appellant to produce some further evidence, namely the correspondence between the Collector and the plaintiffs and the Parwana No. 110. In the receipt for 1342 it is stated that the settlement was made with the appellant by means of a registered ekrarnama dated July 18, 1935, by virtue of Parwana No. 110. It is clear, therefore, that the learned Judge was correct when he took the view that the receipts even if they are admitted in evidence, would be of no assistance to the appellant to satisfy the requirements of s. 53-A, T P. Act, because the receipts do not purport to contain the terms of the contract in writing signed by or on behalf of the lessor by which the land in suit was transferred to the appellant from which the terms of that transfer could be ascertained with reasonable certainty. The appellant had given no explanation beyond a vague suggestion in argument as to why these receipts were not proved as evidence in the trial Court. All that learned Advocate on his behalf urged was that this was due to the carelessness of the lawyer in the Court below. This suggestion is negatived by the wording of ground No. 12 of the memorandum of appeal to this Court referred to above. For these reasons we decline to accede to the prayer of the appellant.

After the decision of their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Parsotam Thakur v. Lal Mohar Thakur (1), it is impossible to allow the appellant to adduce additional evidence in this Court of the nature which has been stated in the two petitions referred to above and for the production whereof no attempt was made in either of the Courts below. It was conceded by the learned Advocate for the appellant that he could not be allowed an opportunity to give these documents in evidence at this stage; but he suggested that under cl. (b) of O. XLI, r. 27 (1) this Court should, in the circumstances, hold that this Court requires these documents to be put in evidence in order to enable it to pronounce judgment. In dealing with a similar argument their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case of Parsotam Thakur v. Lal Mohar Thakur (1), made these observations at p. 668* :—

"Turning to the provisions of r. 27, cl. (1) (a) has no application in the present case. Under cl. (1) (b) it is only where the Appellate Court "requires" (i. e. finds it needful) that additional evidence can be admitted. It may be required to enable the Court to pronounce judgment, or for any other substantial cause, but in either case it must be the Court that requires it. This is the plain grammatical reading of the sub-clause. The legitimate occasion for the exercise of this discretion is not whenever before the appeal is heard a party applies to adduce fresh evidence, but 'when on examining the evidence as it stands, some inherent lacuna becomes apparent.' "

At p. 668* their Lordships explained the meaning of some of the observations which are to be found in the judgment delivered by Mr. Ameer Ali in Indrajit Pratap Sahi v. Amar Singh (2) which has also been relied on before us. Their Lordships express themselves on this point in this

"The question in that case was as to the power of the Board to admit additional documents which the High Court had rejected, and this power is not in any way restricted or governed by the provisions of the Code. If any incidental remarks appearing in this judgment have occasioned any doubt as to the meaning of the rules above referred to, or the conditions under which the discretion of the Appellate Court is to be exercised their Lordships desire to emphasise their view that the correct practice in the matter is as they have now defined it in accordance with the plain words of the Code."

In my opinion it is impossible after this authoritative pronouncement to accede to the prayer of the appellant in the present case. This Court does not find any inherent lacuna on examining the record as a Second Appellate Court nor does it require the proposed evidence to enable it to pronounce judgment.

For these reasons the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

Kazi MOHAMMAD HUSSAIN SAHIB AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Muhammadan Law—Waqf—Mutwalli—Mutwalli himself peish imam—Surrender by him of mutwalliship to mosque committee—Committee's power to dismiss him acting as peish imam—Absence of mutwalli—Power of nomination and appointment of imam, by whom to be exercised.

It is no doubt customary in many mosques for the mutwalli to exercise full disciplinary powers over the servants of the mosque. But this power cannot be said to have vested in the mutwalli of the mosque, where the mutwalli was himself the peish imam for, it is absurd to contemplate the exercise of the power of dismissal by the individual who is himself liable to be dismissed. Therefore, the surrender by such person of his functions as mutwalli to the mosque committee cannot be said to have invested that committee with a power of dismissal over that person which he as mutwalli could not have exercised.

In the absence of a mutwalli the power of nomination and appointment of an imam to a mosque is given to the waqif's descendants and the members of his family preferentially to others. If the person appointed by the waqif is incompetent or unfit, the congregation have a right to select a more fit person but with the proviso that an application will have to be made to the Kazi for the removal of the incompetent servant and the appointment of the person selected by the congregation.

A. against a decree of the Additional City Civil Judge, Madras, in O. S. No. 651 of 1936.

Messrs. P. Viswanatha Iyer and S. K. Ahmed Meeran, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. Srinivasachari and C. A. Mohamad Ibrahim, for the Respondents.

Wadsworth, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by respondent No. 1 for an injunction restraining the defendants (appellants) from interfering with him in performing his services as peish imam in the Masjiday Mohmood, Pudupet, Madras. He also prayed for damages. The suit was decreed and the defendants appeal. We are this day passing judgment in a connected appeal (C. C. C. A. No. 35 of 1935) from a suit brought by the present defendants against the present plaintiff for an injunction restraining him from interfering with the defendants' management of the same mosque and from collecting subscriptions in the guise of mutwalli of that mosque. It is alleged that the Pudupet mosque was founded by one Ghulam Mohammad in 1849 and has been financed from its inception by public subscriptions. It was founded to serve the needs of the Muhammadans living in the neighbourhood of Pudupet. The first mutwalli was the maternal grandfather of the plaintiff. The plaintiff bases his title to the offices of both of mutwalli and peish imam and what is called a towliatnama (Ex. 1) of the year 1887 in which the plaintiff's grandfather purports to assign to the plaintiff the offices of mutwalli and peish imam. The instrument purports to be attested by Ghulam Mohammad, the original founder of the mosque. The lower Court has given various reasons for rejecting this document as a forgery. Besides those reasons set forth by the learned Judge, there are two circumstances which in our opinion go to confirm this conclusion. One is the improbability that Ghulam Mohammad who founded this mosque in 1849 would have been alive in 1887. There is of course no evidence of his death, but ordinarily the founder of a mosque would be a man of some standing in the community and it is unlikely that in 1849 he was very young. Even if he was in early middle age, it is hardly probable that he would have been alive 38 years later. The more decisive circumstance is the fact that the plaintiff at the time of this towliatnama appears to have been only about 12 years old and it is not very probable that the offices of mutwalli and peish imam would have been conferred upon an immature boy. The probability, therefore, seems to be that this document is not genuine.

In our opinion, however, this does not seriously affect the plaintiff's case, for it is common ground that the plaintiff did exercise the functions of mutwalli and peish imam of this mosque without challenge to his title for very many years upto the years 1918, when the leading members of the congregation including the plaintiff himself formed themselves into a registered society for the purpose of managing the affairs of the mosque and raising subscriptions to finance it. It is indubitable that this society known as the Masjiday Mohamood Jamait Managing Committee was in control of the business affairs of the mosque from 1918 until the quarrels started in 1932. During this period it appears that the office of mutualli was treated as having lapsed, the function of the mutwalli being performed by the committee. The plaintiff, though he ceased to describe himself as the mutwalli and ceased to exercise the functions of that office, continued to be one of the two peish imams of the mosque and in that capacity he was paid a salary by the committee. He also functioned for a considerable period as the assistant secretary of the committe and received additional emoluments for that office. In 1932 quarrels began and the plaintiff resigned from the committee and repudiated its authority. He also attempted to revive the office of mutwalli which he had not in fact exercised for a period of about 14 years. In the connected appeal we have held that the Jamait Committee, whatever be the defects of its original constitution, has prescribed for the right to manage the secular affairs of the mosque and to perform those functions which had hitherto been performed by the mutwalli and that it is not open to the present plaintiff to revive the lapsed office of mutwalli by virtue of which he claims the right of exercising those functions which have in effect been established as the legitimate functions of the Jamait Committee.

It is contended for the appellants in the present appeal that once their committee is recognized as the legitimate successor of the mutwalli with his powers of control over the mosque and its servants, it follows that the committee has the right to dismiss the plaintiff from his office of peish imam of the mosque; and that the plaintiff having repudiated the authority of his master, there can be no question as to the propriety of his dismissal. It seems to us that this argument overlooks the weakness of the position of the committee based as it is on prescription. It does not appear that any powers were conferred upon the committee at its inception otherwise than by the general consent of the congregation of the mosque including the plaintiff himself. The nature of the objects with which this committee started its work can be ascertained from its memorandum of association. Quite clearly it was intended firstly to collect subscriptions for the maintanence of the mosque and secondly to pay the expenses of the committee and of the mosque and utilise any balance for religious, educational and charitable purposes connected with the mosque and for the creation of endowments for the mosque. The rules purport to carry out these objects, but do not expressly confer upon the committee, any disciplinary powers. The proceedings of the committee throughout the following years indicate that the committee has exercised a general control over the servants of the mosque including the two peish imams, has required that they should not absent themselves without leave, has reproved them for unpunctuality and has paid the wages and when subscriptions were insufficient to meet the wages has decided on the proportionate reductions. There is a record of the removal from service of an acting muazzin, but even that is not clearly shown to have been a disciplinary act. Taking the history of this period as shown in the records, it must be conceded that there is no instance of an assertion by the committee of a right to punish the peish imam, though there are instances of the exercise of a general supervision over him along with other servants.

It is contended that if the committee has power to supervise and control, it must necessarily have a power of dismissal in case its authority is flouted. It is doubtful whether this proposition is sound. The peish imam was certainly not appointed by this committee. Whatever be the origin of the plaintiff's appointment, he had certainly been in unquestioned enjoyment of the office of peish imam for very many years before the committee came into being. Although the committee took over the functions hitherto exercised by the mutwalli, it never described itself as a mutwalli of the mosque and there are obvious difficulties in asserting that the surrender by the plaintiff himself of the functions of mutwalli to the committee automatically invested this committee with the power of dismissal of the peish imam. Doubtless it is customary in many mosques for the mutwalli to exercise full disciplinary powers over the servants of the mosque. But this power cannot have vested in the mutwalli of the suit mosque, for the mutwalli was himself the peish imam and it is absurd to contemplate the exercise of the power of dismissal by the individual who is himself liable to be dismissed. It seems, therefore, necessary to postulate that at the time when the plaintiff was the mutwalli, the disciplinary control over him in his capacity of peish imam must ultimately have resided elsewhere, whether in the congregation as a whole or in the descendants of the founder or in the Court as representing the Kazi. The natural conclusion, therefore, is that the surrender by the plaintiff of his functions as mutwalli to the committee cannot have invested that committee with a power of dismissal over the plaintiff, which he as mutwalli could not have exercised.

Ameer Ali in his Muhammadan Law (Edn. 4, p. 465) states that in the absence of a mutwalli the power of nomination and appointment of an imam to a mosque is given to the waqif's descendants and the members of his family preferentially to others. At p. 467 it is suggested that if the person appointed by the waqif is incompetent or unfit, the congregation have a right to select a more fit person but with the proviso that an application will have to be made to the Kazi for the removal of the incompetent servant and the appointment of the person selected by the congregation. Now, in this case though the committee has doubtless for many years functioned with the consent and approval of the congregation, it is not constitutionally a representative body acting for the congregation, but an independant self-constituted society owing no formal allegiance to any general body. It cannot, therefore, have any disciplinary powers over the staff of the mosque by the force of Muhammadan Law. Any powers which it has must have been acquired by prescription or by grant. There is no evidence of any valid grant of powers to this committee. The extent of its powers must, therefore, be governed by the extent to which it has established those powers by the exercise of them during the 14 years during which those powers were unquestioned. There having been no acquisition during this period of a power to dismiss a peish imam of the mosque, the necessary conclusion is that the committee is not clothed with such a power.

It is contended that the absence of such a power will make the proper control of the mosque impossible. The answer to that contention is that there is now pending a suit for framing a scheme for the proper control of the mosque in which any defects in the system whereunder it is administered can be put right. For the present we are only concerned with the powers of the parties as they stood at the time when these disputes began. Our conclusion must be that the plaintiff was in lawful possession of the office of peish imam and was entitled to perform its functions and receive its emoluments and that the defendants were not clothed with any authority to remove him from that office. It follows, therefore, that the dismissal of the plaintiff was without authority and that the plaintiff is entitled to the injunction which he seeks. It is represented that the plaintiff does not press for the nominal damages of Rs. 25 awarded by the trial Court. The decree will, therefore, be modified by the exclusion of the relief of damages. In other respects the appeal is dismissed with costs. We desire to observe that this judgment in no way affects the relation between the committee and the other peish imam who is not a party.

TEJPAL AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 6 (4) (as amended by U. P. Court Fees (Amendment) Act XIX of 1938)—Suit for partition—Point as to deficiency in court-fee raised—Court not following procedure under s. 6 (4) but deciding issue with other issues—Court ordering plaintiffs to make good deficiency and preparation of decree to be deferred till deficiency was made good—Deficiency not made good within time allowed—Appeal preferred styling it as under s. 96, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), and s. 6 (4), Court Fees Act (VII of 1870)—Appeal, held could not be treated as revision under s. 115, Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), nor as appeal from decree but as appeal from under s. 6 (4).

The necessity of faithfully following the provisions of cls. 2, 3 and 4 of s. 6, Court Fees Act is imperative in order to avoid anomalies.

In a partition suit one of the points raised in defence was that the plaint was insufficiently stamped. The Judge did not follow the procedure enjoined by s. 6 (4), Court Fees Act, and decided the issue as regards the court-fee along with the other issues framed in the case. He held that the court-fee paid was insufficient and, by the operative portion of his judgment, directed the plaintiff to make good the deficiency in the court-fee and further ordered that the preparation of the decree be deferred till the deficiency in the court-fee was made good. The plaintiff, however, did not pay the deficiency within the time allowed, and filed an appeal styling the same as a first appeal under s. 96, Civil P. C., and s. 6-A, Court Fees Act:

Held, that as the decision of the Court would be appealable to the High Court as a decree, s. 115, Civil P C, could have no application to the case and, therefore, the memorandum of appeal filed by the plaintiff could not be treated as an application in revision. Nor could the appeal be considered as an appeal against a decree because no decree had been prepared in the case. The plaintiff was, however, entitled to assail by appeal the order of the Court below calling upon him to make good the deficiency in the court-fee and the appeal must, therefore, be regarded as an appeal from order in accordance with the provisions of s. 6-A, Court Fees Act.

Mr. K. L. Misra, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. Upadhiya, for the Opposite Party.

Iqbal Ahmad, J.—This is a report by the taxing officer and arises under the following circumstances. Baijnath Prasad plaintiff-appellant filed a suit for partition in the Court of the Civil Judge of Azamgarh. The suit was contested by the defendant-respondents and one of the points raised in defence was that the plaint was insufficiently stamped. In consequence of this plea raised by the defendants one of the issues raised in the case was whether the court-fee paid was sufficient. In view of the provisions of s. 6 (4), Court Fees Act, it was the duty of the Civil Judge to have decided the question of sufficiency or otherwise of the court-fee paid on the plaint before proceeding to decide the other issues in the case. It however, appears that an assurance was held out by the plaintiff's Counsel that if, while deciding the suit, the Civil Judge found the court-fee to be insufficient the insufficiency in the court-fee will be made good by the plaintiff forthwith. In view of this assurance the learned Civil Judge did not follow the procedure enjoined by s. 6 (4), Court Fees Act, and decided the issue as regards the court-fee along with the other issues framed in the case. In other words, the learned Civil Judge delivered one judgment in the case dealing with the question of the court-fees and with the question of the rights of the parties as regards the subject-matter of the suit. It is needless to observe that this procedure was in flagrant violation of the provisions of s. 6 (4), Court Fees Act, and should not have been followed by the learned Civil Judge. The learned Civil Judge held that the court-fee paid was insufficient and, by the operative portion of his judgment, directed the plaintiff to make good the deficiency in the court-fee and further ordered that the preparation of the decree be deferred till the deficiency in the court-fee was made good. The words used by the Court below were: "The decree to be prepared when the deficiency in court-fee is made good."

The Court below allowed 15 day's time to the plaintiff to make good the deficiency. The plaintiff however did not pay the deficiency within the time allowed, and filed an appeal in this Court styling the same as a first appeal under s. 96, Civil P. C. and s. 6-A, Court Fees Act. He valued his appeal at Rs. 2,.00 and paid a court-fee of Rs. 15. No less than 24 grounds were embodied in the memorandum of appeal but only some of those grounds related to the decision of the Court below on the question of court-fees, and the remaining grounds were with respect to the decision of the Court below as regards the merits of the case. The relief sought by the appeal was that the decree of the Court below be modified and the plaintiff's suit be decreed in full, or such other and further relief be granted to the plaintiff as this Court may think fit. The facts stated above gave rise to the question as to whether the appeal filed in this Court was an appeal against a decree or an appeal against an order or was in fact not an appeal at all and was merely an application in revision. The taxing officer rightly considered that the question raised was beset with difficulty and he accordingly referred the question for decision to us.

It is clear that the memorandum of appeal filed by the plaintiff in this Court cannot be treated as an application in revision for the simple reason that, in accordance with the provisions of s. 115, Civil P. C., an application in revision can be filed in this Court only in cases in which no appeal lies to this Court against the decision of the Court below. In the case under consideration the decision of the Court below will be appealable to this Court as a decree and as such s. 115 can have no application to the case. It is also obvious that the appeal filed by the plaintiff in this Court cannot be considered as an appeal against a decree for the simple reason that no decree has yet been prepared in the case There is however an order passed by the Court below calling upon the plaintiff to make good the deficiency in court-fee, and an appeal against such an order is allowed by s. 6-A, Court Fees Act. On the facts as they stand the plaintiff is entitled to assail by appeal the order of the Court below calling upon him to make good the deficiency in the court-fee and the appeal filed by the plaintiff must, therefore, be regarded as an appeal from order in accordance with the provisions of s. 6-A, Court Fees Act. In this view of the matter the only grounds that can be properly embodied in the memorandum of appeal are the grounds that question the decision of the Court below on the question of court-fees. The remaining grounds that deal with the merits of the case are superfluous and the Counsel for the appellant must be called upon to strike off the same.

Before parting with this case we desire to draw the attention of the Court below to the imperative necessity of faithfully following the provisions of cls. 2, 3 and 4 of s. 6 Court Fees Act so that anomalies of the description with which we have to deal in the present case may not arise in future.

Order accordingly.

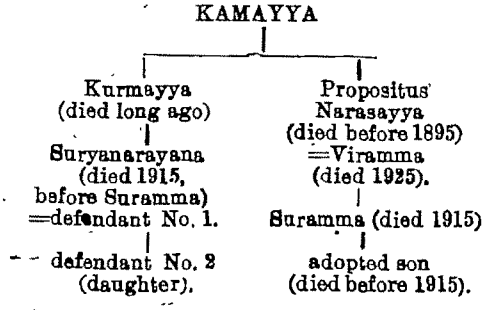
Hindu Law—Inheritance — Madras— Brother's son's daughter.

Under the Hindu Law as administered in the Presidency of Madras female bandhus are entitled to come in after the male bandhus are exhausted, provided of course they satisfy the other conditions required by law. Consequently a brother's son's daughter is entitled to inherit. Kutti Ammal v. Radhakrishna (3), relied on.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 197 of 1934.

Order of Reference

Wadsworth, J.—It seem to me that this appeal, which involves a decision of the question whether a brother's son's daughter is an heir under the Mitakshara law as administered in Madras, should be posted before a Bench, there being no direct authority so far as I am aware. The following genealogical tree shows the position :



KAMAYYA
Kurmayya (died long ago)
Suryanarayana (died 1915, before Suramma) =defendant No. 1.
defendant No. 2 (daughter).
Propositus Narasayya (died before 1895) =Viramma (died 1925).
Suramma (died 1915) adopted son (died before 1915).

The plaintiff (appellant) sues for possession of property formerly enjoyed by Viramma as heir of her husband Narasayya Plaintiff (a relative of Viramma) put forward a title based on the will of Suramma (to whom Viramma had gifted the properties) and on a surrender by the presumptive reversioner Suryanarayana, who died long before the reversion opened. Quite obviously, this title will not prevail against the right of the nearest reversioner to Narasayya's estate. The trial Court found that plaintiff was in possession at any rate during the lifetime of Viramma, that defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not reversioners of Narasayya and that plaintiff was entitled to a decree. The Subordinate Judge abstained from giving any finding on the two additional issues (relating to the possession of the plaintiff and the heirship of the defendants Nos. 1 and 2) framed by the District Judge before remand but dismissed the suit on the strength of his conclusion that plaintiff had not proved title or adverse possession. He appears to have overlooked the fact that plaintiff is entitled to claim a decree on the strength of his possessory title if defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are trespassers. With reference to the heirship of defendant No. 2, he refers to a statement that there are nearer heirs, viz., the sister of Suryanarayana and her son, which statement so far as I can find, receives no support in the evidence unless it can be deemed that a question asked in cross-examination of P. W. No. 2 which elicited the reply, "I do not know," can be deemed to be evidence. Since the heirship of defendant No. 2 was in issue and there is no evidence of nearer heirs, it must be taken that they do not exist, especially in view of the fact that plaintiff pleaded that there were no heirs at all and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 pleaded that they were the nearest heirs. If neither of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 is found to have title, a remand will be necessary to the lower Appellate Court for a finding on the second additional issue.

It cannot, I think, be contended that widow of a brother's son is an heir. She has no community of blood with the propositus and cannot be a bhinnagotra sapinda. The position of the brother's son's daughter, defendant No. 2, is however different. She is certainly a bhinnagotra sapinda or bandhu within the five degrees. On the authorities, she would be excluded in any male bandhu entitled to succeed. But in the absence of a male heir, can it be said that the brother's son's daughter will not be entitled to inherit to her great uncle? The authorities are summarized in Mayne's Hindu Law, Edn. 10, paras. 509 and 510. The learned author quotes Lakshmanammal v. Thiruvengada (1) and Venkatasubramaniam Chetti v. Thayarammal (2), and opines that the reasoning of these judgments is unassailable and applies to all descendants, ascendants and collaterals within five degrees. Hitherto, the rights of the son's daughter, the daughter's daughter and the sister have been confirmed by legislation while the rights of the father's sister, brother's daughter and sister's daughter have been recognized by Madras decisions, I do not think that the right of the brother's son's daughter to succeed has ever been expressly recognized or negatived by a Madras authority. But the following propositions seem to be established:

(1) A brother's son's daughter is a bandhu within the five degrees; (2) a female bandhu is not disentitled to inherit (in the absence of a male heir) merely by reason of her sex; (3) the heirship of female bandhus is not limited to those mentioned in express texts but is governed by the propinquity of their blood relationship. Granted the truth of these propositions, it seems to follow that in the absence of male heirs a brother's son's daughter would be entitled to inherit. But the subject being uncovered by authority and the decision being one likely to affect the position of other female bandhus of like degree, it seems to me desirable that the appeal should be placed before a Bench. The appellant should furnish typed translations of the pleadings and typed copies of the depositions which have not been printed for the use of the Bench.

(2) 21 M 263.

Mr. B. Jagannadha Das, for the Respondents.

Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.—This is a second appeal which came before Wadsworth, J. in the first instance. The question raised in it related to the right of a brother's son's daughter to inherit under the Hindu Law. The precise question is not covered by authority in this presidency and for that reason the learned Judge has referred the point for consideration by a Bench. The appellant was the plaintiff in the trial Court. He instituted the suit for the recovery of possession of property which appertained to the estate of one Narasayya who died some time before 1895. He was succeeded by his widow, Viramma, who in 1895 entered into an arrangement with the next revereioner Suryanarayana who was her husband's brother's son. By that arrangement, Suryanarayana in consideration of a sum of Rs. 100 agreed to Viramma holding the estate as absolute owner—a transaction which is admittedly invalid under Hindu Law. Viramma having thus secured, as she probably thought, a valid right to dispose of the estate, made a gift of the property to her daughter Suramma in 1908. The daughter died in 1915 having in her turn purported to bequeath the property in favour of the appellant in this second appeal. The appellant's case thus rests on the arrangement of 1895, which is totally void—a point which is not disputed. The appellant's case is that he took peaceful possession of the property under the will and continued to enjoy the property undisturbed till 1925. That was the year in which Viramma died. After her death, respondent No. 1, who is Suryanarayana's widow and respondent No. 2, his daughter, dispossessed him of the property. The District Munsif decreed the suit. On appeal by the respondents, the District Judge allowed the appeal holding that respondent No. 2 was entitled to retain possession of the property on the ground that she had succeeded to the estate as the next heir of Narasayya. It is admitted that if she is an heir under the Hindu Law, the appellant must fail, as his rights based on mere possession cannot prevail against those of the true owner. The only question then is whether respondent No. 2 is not the true owner, and whether she has not succeeded to the estate of Narasayya in the events which have happened.

Respondent No. 2 is the daughter of a brother's son of the propositus, and is only four degrees removed from Narasayya's father, the common ancestor. She is thus within the prescribed limit of proximity, being less than seven degrees in ascent and descent from the last male owner. Further the test of mutuality is also satisfied as she and Narasayya are sapindas of each other in the Mitakshara sense of the term. Her right to succeed to the estate cannot be questioned except on the ground that being a female she is not within the class of heritable bandhus But it is now too late in the day to question the proposition that under the Hindu Law as administered in this presidency, female bandhus are entitled to come in after the male bandhus are exhausted, provided of course they satisfy the other conditions required by law. A series of decisions of this Court commencing from Kutti Ammal v. Radhakrishna (3), have established their right to rank as heirs under Hindu Law. It is true that there has been no direct decision relating to the right of a brother's son's daughter to inherit. But this can make very little difference, once it is established, as we hold it to be, that females are not to be disqualified by reason of their sex only. This proposition is firmly established for such a length of time that it is unnecessary to discuss it. The second appeal therefore fails and must be dismissed with costs.

N.D. Appeal dismissed.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Appeal against dismissal of suit—Appellate Court after dismissal of appeal, if can allow plaintiff to withdraw suit with permission to file fresh one.

After dismissing an appeal preferred against the dismissal of a suit, the Appellate Court has no jurisdiction to allow the plaintiff to withdraw the suit with permission to file a fresh suit. 91 Ind. Cas. 280 (1) and 178 Ind. Cas. 319 (2), relied on.

C. R. from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, dated January 4, 1940.

Dewan Mehr Chand, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Roop Chand, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is a petition for revision of the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Lahore, allowing the plaitiff's suit to be withdrawn under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C. It appears that the request for permission to withdraw the suit was made to the learned Senior Subordinate Judge when the appeal came up before him. He recorded the statements of the Counsel of the parties and then passed the order which concludes as follows:

"Hence the appeal is dismissed with costs. The plaintiff is granted permission under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C., to withdraw the suit with liberty to institute a fresh suit in respect of the subject-matter of such suit."

The learned Counsel for the petitioner has urged that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has no jurisdiction to allow the suit to be withdrawn after he had passed the order dismissing the appeal with costs. Secondly, it was contended that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge had no power to allow withdrawal of the suit without being satisfied that there were reasons for permitting the suit to be withdrawn according to the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C. The learned Counsel for the respondent urged that the suit was allowed to be withdrawn with the consent of the parties. This is, however, not clear from the record. The learned Counsel for the petitioner, who appeared in the lower Court, simply stated that he had no objection to the appeal being withdrawn. He said nothing as regards the permission for the suit being withdrawn. The contention of the learned Counsel for the petitioner that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to allow the suit to be withdrawn after dismissing the appeal with costs is supported by Fateh Singh v. Jagannath Bakhsh (1) and Shahu v. Mst. Rahmon (2). The provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. C., also require that the Judge should be satisfied about the conditions justifying withdrawal of the suit under that rule before granting permission. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge does not appear to have considered this aspect of the matter. I accordingly, accept this petition for revision and setting aside the order of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge, remand the case to him for disposal of the application for permission to withdraw the suit under O. XXIII, r. 1, Civil P. OFFICIAL RECEIVER, COIMBATORE—RESPONDENT

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 4—Interpretation—Official Receiver party to civil proceedings as representative of estate—Decision against him—Decision, whether can be re-opened by application under s. 4—Proper remedy—Insolvency—Official Receiver—His position as regards ordinary Civil Courts—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 57—Application by Receiver under s 52, Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920)—Sale stopped and execution struck off by executing Court—Attachment, if ceases.*

It is left to the discretion of the Court to entertain a petition under s. 4, Prov. Insol. Act. The party who is bound by a decree or order of a Civil Court is not entitled to re-agitate the same question by another suit and what cannot be done by another suit cannot be achieved by means of proceedings under s 4. The procedure under s. 4 is only a substitute for a regular suit. The prior judgments against an insolvent are liable to be re-opened in the Insolvency Court at the instance of the Official Receiver only in cases in which before insolvency, judgments were obtained against debtor and they are sought to be re-opened on the daughter's adjudication to see whether they were binding on the Official Receiver as representing the general body of creditors. But where the Official Receiver is a party to a proceeding in his capacity as the representative of the estate, he is not entitled to re-open an adverse decision in an application under s. 4. His remedy is only to appeal as any other party to the proceeding against the order of the Civil Court if he is dissatisfied with it. [p. 140, col. 2; p. 141, col. 1]

The Official Receiver so far as the ordinary Civil Courts are concerned is a suitor and a suitor only, He is not entitled to send reports as he does to the Insolvency Court and if he wants to either file a plaint or a written statement or a counter-affidavit he ought to do it in the proper form. [p. 140, col. 1.]

Where as a result of an application by the Official Receiver under s. 52, Prov. Insol. Act, the executing Court stops a sale in execution of a decree and strikes off the execution petition the dismissal cannot be said to be due to default of the decree-holder and hence the attachment of property before judgment does not cease.

A. against the appellate order of the District Court, Coimbatore, dated October 22, 1934.

Mr. A. C. Sampath Ayyangar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. V. Ramachandra Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Judgment—The appellant in this second appeal is a creditor who filed O. S. No. 1375 of 1926 on the file of the District Munsif of Tirupur against one Konappa Naicken and his four sons. Konappa Naicken was defendant No. 1 and his sons were defendants Nos. 2 to 5. An application for attachment before judgment was ordered on October 14, 1926 and the attachment was duly effected. The suit was decreed on June 7, 1927. Thereafter the father, defendant No. 1, filed I. P. No. 157 of 1927 on July 14, 1927 and he was adjudicated on September 24, 1927. The decree-holder applied for execution of his decree in E. P. No. 2226 of 1929 on July 1, 1929. By that date the father was dead and the sons alone were added as parties; and the Official Receiver who had been appointed in I. P. No. 157 of 1927 was not made a party. Before this execution application came on for final orders, the Official Receiver sold the entire property including the son's shares on Febrpary 6, 1930 and there was a sum of Rs. 2,510 representing the net sale proceeds of those properties. On June 17, 1930, the Official Receiver wrote to the District Munsif of Tirupur who was executing the decree passed by him in O. S. No. 1375 of 1926 informing him that the father had been adjudicated insolvent and requesting that the sale which was to be held the next day or the day after be stopped under s. 52, Prov. Insol. Act. There was also an application filed by the Official Receiver for that purpose in E. A. No. 814 of 1930. On this an order was passed: "Sale stopped. Receiver will take possession." On June 20, 1930 the District Munisf passed an order on the execution Application No. 2226 of 1929. The order was:

"Sale stopped as per order on E. A. No. 814 of 1930, a petition by the Official Receiver, Coimbatore under s. 52 of Act V of 1920. This petition is struck off."

Then the decree-holder filed Application No. 1743 of 1931 in the District Munsif's Court requesting the Court to direct the Official Receiver to send four-fifths of the amounts realized by him representing the four shares of the sons of Konappa on the ground that they were not adjudicated insolvents, that their share of the sale proceeds cannot be dealt with by the Official Receiver and that the decree-holder was entitled to proceed against the same and have it credited towards his decree. Notice of this application was issued to the Official Receiver. He sent a letter which may be treated as a counter-affidavit, which according to the respondent contained information that the proceeds had already been distributed by him under orders of the Insolvency Court and that therefore the amount cannot be sent over. Not being satisfied with this statement the District Munsif adjourned the matter for arguments first to September 25, then to the 30th, heard arguments and reserved orders. On October 8, he made an order that the Official Receiver was not entitled to deal with the shares of the four sons in the amount realized by him by sale or the properties that it was only the father's share that could be so dealt with by the Official Receiver and made an order directing the Official Receiver to send amount representing the four-fifths share of the sons to his Court. The District Munsif referred to a decision of this Court reported in Official Receiver, Coimbatore v. Arunachalam Chettiar (1), in support of his order. After this order was passed the Official Receiver approached the Insolvency Court for directions as to what he should do and it is said that the Insolvency Court asked him to write to the District Munsif requesting him to direct the decree-holder to go to the Insolvency Court to have it decided by that Court whether he was entitled to the amount in question. The decree-holder evidently did not respect this advice. He took the course of moving the District Munsif to commit the Official Receiver for contempt for disobedience of the order of October 8, 1931 and filed E. A. No. 1748 of 1932. Having come to know of this the application out of which this appeal arises was filed in the Insolvency Court on March 15, 1933 under ss. 4 and 5, Prov. Insol. Act. In this application the Official Receiver asked the Court to adjudicate upon the question whether the decree-holder is entitled to the sum representing the four-fifths share of the insolvent's sons. The creditor filed a counter-affidavit stating amongst other things:

"Further, the Official Reciever being a party to the execution proceedings is bound by the orders passed in execution. If the Official Receiver felt aggrieved his remedy was by way of appeal. It is respectfully submitted that the Insolvency Court is not entitled to vary or modify orders duly passed against the Official Receiver as a party."

It should be mentioned here that the Official Receiver in para. 7 of his petition referred to the Application No. 1743 of 1931 and to the order of the District Munsif's Court that the money should be sent to that Court. It is this order that he complains about in his petition and in answer to this the decree-holder replied in para. 8 of the counter-affidavit. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the Official Receiver is entitled to the declaration that the sale proceeds of the sons' shares of the insolvent are liable to be distributed among the creditors and granted the application of the Official Receiver. On appeal the District Judge confirmed this order. Hence this appeal by the creditor.

It is urged by learned Counsel for the respondent that when the father's properties were sold on February 6, 1930 the Official Receiver took the permission of the Insolvency Court and distributed the amount among the creditors, that the decree-holder approached the Insolvency Court at a later stage with a request that he should be paid a sum of Rs. 500 and odd which represented the costs of his suit and execution and that on that application the Insolvency Court made an order as prayed for by the decree-holder. It is said that at the time the decree-holder did not tell the Insolvency Court that he was entitled to four-fifths share of the sons and that there was an implied representation in the petition and in the affidavit that the balance after deducting Rs. 500 and odd claimed by him may be distributed by the Official Receiver among all the creditors. It is therefore urged that the creditor is now estopped from claiming the four-fifths share he not having put forward this objection in the Insolvency Court at the time when he wanted preferential payment in respect of Rs. 500 and odd which represented the costs of his suit and execution as provided by s. 52, Prov. Insol. Act.

I propose to deal first with the question whether the order of the District Munsif in E. P. No. 1743 of 1931, dated October 8, 1931 is liable to be called in question in the Insolvency Court as was done in this case. Though the Subordinate Judge raised the question of the Insolvency Court's jurisdiction to entertain this application as point No. 5 he simply referred to s. 4 of the Act but did not deal with the question whether the order on I. A. No. 1743 of 1931 of the District Munsif's Court, Tirupur, had not become final and conclusive. The District Judge did not deal with this question at all. It will be seen that the District Munsif was acting prefectly within his jurisdiction when he was executing his decree in O. S. No. 1375 of 1926. In the course of that execution an application was made to him in E. P. No. 1743 of 1931 to send for certain moneys representing four-fifths share of the sons who were defendants Nos. 2 to 5 from the Official Receiver. The prayer was that the Official Receiver should be directed to deposit to the credit of that suit the sum representing the shares of the four sons defendants Nos. 2 to 5. Notice of this application was ordered to the Official Receiver who was made a party to that application. Presumably as the learned Advocate for the respondent tells me, the Official Receiver mentioned all that had taken place before in the letter which he sent to the District Munsif and urged that the conduct of the creditor was such that he was not entitled to an order that the four-fifths share of the sale proceeds should be paid to the credit of his suit by the Official Receiver. It will be noticed that on receiving this letter which the Official Receiver sent when notice of this application went to him, the District Munsif was not satisfied with the position urged by the Official Receiver and therefore, posted the matter for arguments. It was adjourned two or three times, arguments were heard and orders were reserved and the order was passed on October 8, 1931. The Official Receiver in the first place had no right to write a letter to the District Munsif when he got the notice on E. P. No. 1743 of 1931 asking him to show cause why he should not be directed to pay the four-fifths share of defendants Nos. 2 to 5 into Court.

The Official Receiver so far as the ordinary Civil Courts are concerned is a suitor and a suitor only. He is not entitled to send reports as he does to the Insolvency Court and if he wants to either file a plaint or a written statement or a counter-affidavit he ought to do it in the proper form. So far as suits in the ordinary Courts are concerned, he is in no better position than an ordinary suitor. We may take it that in this case he probable thought that the letter would take the place of the counter-affidavit. When after arguments were heard and the District Munsif passed the order on October 8, 1931 it was his duty to take up the matter in appeal in the regular course if he was dissatisfied with the order. He did not do it, there was no appeal and the order became final. I do not see what right he had to go to the Insolvency Court for directions; if he sought advice and such advice was given and that advice turns out to be wrong, he has himself to think. In this case the application was filed under ss. 4 and 5, Prov. Insol. Act. The procedure under s. 4 of the Act is only a substitute for a regular suit. When the Insolvency Court feels that the matter might be speedily adjudicated upon by the Insolvency Court itself, the Court has jurisdiction to deal with the matter relating to title and other questions referred to in s. 4 of the Act. It is obvious that it is left to the discretion of the Court to entertain a petition under s. 4 of the Act, which is a substitute for the ordinary proceeding in a Civil Court. The party who is bound by a decree or order of a Civil Court is not entitled to re-agitate the same question by another suit and what cannot be done by another suit cannot be achieved by means of proceedings under s. 4, Prov. Insol. Act. In that proceeding he would be bound by the same rules and by the same conditions by which he would be bound if he had agitated the matter in a regular suit. If in this case the Official Receiver had filed an ordinary suit in Civil Court objecting to the order of the District Munsif in E. P. No. 1743 of 1931 he would have been immediately met with the plea that his remedy was to take up the matter in appeal and not to file a separate suit. I do not see how he can escape that effect by approaching the Insolvency Court under s. 4 of the Act.

My attention has been drawn by learned Counsel for the respondent to the fact that prior judgments against an insolvent are liable to be re-opened in the Insolvency Court at the instance of the Official Receiver in certain circumstances. That is no doubt true, but they are cases in which before insolvency, judgments were obtained against debtor and they are sought to be re-opened on the debtor's adjudication to see whether they were binding on the Official Receiver as representing the general body of creditors. But where the Official Receiver is a party to a proceeding in his capacity as the representative of the estate, he is not entitled to re-open an adverse decision in an application under s. 4, Prov. Insol. Act. His remedy is only to appeal as any other party to the proceeding against the order of the Civil Court if he is dissatisfied with it. I therefore hold that the order on E. P. No. 1743 of 1931, dated October 8, 1931, was conclusive and that the Insolvency Court cannot go behind that order and entertain an application of this kind.

As regard the conduct of the decree-holder in approaching the Insolvency Court on which much stress was placed by the respondent it will be noticed that in the application which he filed for being paid the sum of Rs. 500 odd in the first instance, there is no express mention made that the rest of it may be distributed among the creditors. He only said that until the sum of Rs. 500 was paid the distribution should be held up. He did not receive any dividend in the Insolvency Court. He only got Rs. 500 odd which the Court adjudged he was entitled to in preference to other creditors So far as the initial order of the Insolvency Court to distribute the moneys to the various creditors is concerned, I do not see how it is binding on the creditor because it is not alleged that it was passed after notice to him.

Then as regards the order that was passed on the creditor's application for preferential payment of Rs. 500 odd, which is I. A. No. 372 of 1931, the order says :

"I therefore direct the official Receiver to pay the petitioner the amount of his charges and declare a dividend on the balance alone and distribute the same."

This order does not mean that he was authorized to distribute in any manner which is not warranted by law. No adjudication was made that the creditor was not entitled to any portion of the balance. Further, all these questions ought to have been brought before the District Munsif in E. P. No. 1743 of 1931 and Mr. K. V. Ramachandra Ayyar, the learned Advocate for the respondent, tells me that they were brought to the notice of the District Munsif in the letter which the Official Receiver wrote in reply to the notice of the said application. It is presumably after being appraised of this situation that the District Munsif felt some difficulty and posted the matter for arguments. The District Munsif's attention was evidently directed to the decision of this Court in Official Receiver Coimbatore v. Arunachalam Chettiar (1), and the District Munsif rightly or wrongly passed the order that he did on October 8, 1931. If the District Munsif's order was wrong that should have been corrected in appeal. The Subordinate Judge and the District Judge say that the attachment effected in execution of the appellant's decree ceased when on June 20, 1930, the District Munsif struck off the execution petition. What happened was that on the Official Receiver's letter appraising the executing Court that defendant No. 1 had been adjudged an insolvent and that the sale advertised should be stopped as per s. 52, Prov. Insol. Act, the District Munsif passed the order on June 17, 1930, "Letter of Official Receiver. Sale stopped. Receiver will take possession." This was passed on Official Receiver's application I. A. No. 814 of 1930. Then the execution petition was taken up on June 20, 1930. On that day the Court said :

"Sale stopped as per order an E. A. No. 814 of 1930 a petition by the Official Receiver, Coimbatore, under s. 52 of Act V of 1920. This petition is struck off."

This is held to be a dismissal of the execution petition for default of the decree-holder on the ground that the decree-holder did not implead the Official Receiver as representing defendant No. 1 and that the attachment ceased. If the Official Receiver was not made a party, it was only a ground for dismissing the execution petition against defendant No. 1 or against Official Receiver as representing defendant No. 1, but not for dismissing the entire execution petition against defendants Nos. 2 to 4 as well. The District Munsif himself did not purport to dismiss or to strike off the execution petition on that ground. He did so on the stated ground that on E. A. No. 814 of 1930, the sale had been stopped. It is not open to the Courts now to find that the execution petition was dismissed for default of the decree holder when in fact the executing Court gave another reason in its order striking off the execution petition. As pointed above there was no default of the decree-holder as regards defendants Nos. 2 to 5 ; and the execution petition might well have proceeded against them. Further, this again is a point that should have been urged in E. A. No. 1743 of 1931 before the executing Court. Whether the Official Receiver's sale was a valid sale of the sons' interest as well, whether the creditor was bound by prior orders of the Insolvency Court or of the executing Court and whether he was estopped from claiming the relief which he sought in E. A. No. 1743 of 1931 are all matters which should have been urged in that application. And if the executing Court passed an order adverse to the Official Receiver, the matter should have been rectified on appeal.

The question was expressly raised in the counter-affidavit of the appellant and he urged that in view of the District Munsif's order on E. A. No. 1743 of 1931 which had become final, the Insolvency Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the petition. The Subordinate Judge raised the question of jurisdiction, presumably on para. 8 of the appellant's counter-affidavit. Having raised the question, he did not at all deal with this question whether the Official Receiver was not bound by the order on E. A. No. 1743 of 1931. The District Judge also does not deal with this question. I reverse the decisions of both the lower Courts and dismiss the petition with costs throughout.

Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 57 of 1940

November 21, 1940

AGARWALA, J.

LIQUIDATOR, NAWADAH BAZAR CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY—

APPELLANT

versus

DOMI RAM CHAUDHARY—

RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 80—Co-operative society in liquidation—Liquidator appointed under Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1935)—Plaintiff's suit against him claiming that he being agriculturist his house could not be attached—Notice under s. 80, if essential—Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act (VI of 1935), s. 44 (3) (a), 57 (2)—Award by Registrar—Liquidator taking proceedings on award—Plaintiff aggrieved—Suit by him without sanction of Registrar, maintainability.

Section 80 Civil P. C., bars the institution of a suit unless notice has been given only when the suit is against a public officer and is in respect of any act done or purporting to be done by the public officer in his official capacity. The mere fact that the public officer concerned is a defendant in the suit is not sufficient to determine whether a notice is required under s. 80. For instance, when an Official Assignee or a Receiver is impleaded in a suit to realise a charge on the property of the insolvent which is vested in him, and no act or omission on the part of the Receiver is alleged, notice is not necessary where no relief is claimed against the liquidator of a co-operative society, the object of the plaintiff in the suit being to obtain a decision as to whether his house is liable to be attached. He being an agriculturist no notice under s. 80 is required, assuming that the liquidator appointed under the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act is a public servant within the meaning of the section. 58 Ind. Cas. 411 (1) and 182 Ind. Cas 514 (3), dissented from, 130 Ind. Cas. 903 (2), referred to.

Where the liquidator was empowered by s. 44 (3) (a), Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act to take proceedings to execute the award, and the plaintiff, being aggrieved by the liquidator's action in taking such proceedings failed to apply to the Registrar to interfere with the liquidator's act or to grant leave for the institution of a suit under s. 57 (2) and he instituted a suit without asking the Registrar to exercise his powers of revision or to grant leave for the institution of the suit :

Held, that the suit must fail in the absence of the Registrar's sanction for its institution.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of 1st Court, Gaya, dated August 10, 1939.

Mr. K. Dayal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Nandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The plaintiff-respondent is a member of the Nawadah Bazar Co-operative Society in liquidation. The Registrar of Co-operative Societies made an award against him in respect of Rs. 1,200 and odd. The liquidator thereupon took proceedings under the Bihar and Orissa Public Demands Recovery Act for realisation of this amount and the Certificate Officer has attached a house belonging to the plaintiff. The plaintiff objected to the attachment on two grounds. First, on the ground that the amount claimed from him is not due and secondly on the ground that he was an agriculturist and that consequently the house was exempt from attachment under s. 18 of the Act. The objections were overruled. The plaintiff has, therefore, instituted the present suit to restrain the liquidator from selling the house and to obtain a release of the house from attachment. The plaintiff's case was that he borrowed Rs. 290 from the Society and that in respect of this debt Rs. 214 was still due from him but he denied that anything more was due from him. He alleges that he did approach the Society for a further loan of Rs. 600 and that the Secretary of the Society induced him to sign an acknowledgment for the money in anticipation of the loan being granted but that in fact it was never granted. He averred that the Secretary had fraudulently made entries in the books to evidence the alleged loan of Rs. 600. The defendant denied the alleged fraud and pleaded that the suit was not maintainable ; the plaintiff's allegation that he was an agriculturist was also denied. Both the Courts below have found that there was no fraud. The first Court held that s. 46 of the Public Demands Recovery Act was a bar to the maintainability of the suit. The Appellate Court, however, has disagreed with that view and, holding that the plaintiff is an agriculturist, has decreed the suit.

In this appeal by the defendant-appellant the first contention is that the suit is barrad by s 80 of the Civil P. C. for want of notice, it being contended that the liquidator of the Society is a public officer within the meaning of that section. In Anna Laticia DeSilva v. Govind Balvant Parashare (1) a Receiver appointed under the Prov. Insol. Act was held to be a public officer within the meaning of s. 80 of the Civil P. C. and a similar view was taken of a Receiver appointed in a civil suit, in Prasaddas Sen v. K. S. Bonnerjee (2). In Liquidator of Society Sangakheda Kalan Co-operative Bank, Hoshangabad v. Syodhyaprasad Shiamlal (3), Pollock, J, sitting singly, held that a liquidator appointed by the Registrar under s. 42 (1) of the Co-operative Socities Act, (II of 1912) is a public officer. Assuming that the liquidator appointed under the Bihar and Orissa Co-operetive Societies Act (VI of 1935) is a public servant within the meaning of s. 80 of the Civil P. C. that alone is not sufficient to decide the question whether the present suit is maintainable or not without notice. Section 80 bars the institution of a suit unless notice has been given only when the suit is against a public officer and is in respect of any act done or purporting to be done by the public officer in his official capacity. The mere fact that the public officer concerned is a defendant in the suit is not sufficient to determine whether a notice is required under s. 80. For instance, when an Official Assignee or a Receiver is impleaded in a suit to realise a charge on the property of the insolvent which is vested in him, and no act or omission on the part of the Receiver is alleged, notice is not necessary see Skippers & Co., Ltd. v. E. V. David (4). In the present suit no relief is claimed against the liquidator of the Society. The object of the plaintiff in the suit is to obtain a decision as to whether his house is liable to be attached, he being an agriculturist as has been found by the Court of Appeal below. The facts in the Nagpur case to which I have referred were somewhat similar to those of the present case. Tnere the Registrar had issued an award against one Ramcharan for a debt due by the latter to the Co-operative Society of which he was a member, and in execution of the award the liquidator attached a house. Two other persons objected to the attachment on the ground that the house belonged to them. The objections were overruled and they instituted a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, of the Civil P. C. to establish their title. No notice having been served on the liquidator it was held that the suit could not be maintained. In the Bombay case referred to above the defendant had been appointed a Receiver in an insolvency matter. The plaintiff brought a suit out of which the appeal arose for a declaration that the property belonged to her and not to the insolvent. The Court held that since the Receiver was appointed under the Prov. Insol Act he became a public officer and was protected by s. 80 of the Civil P. C. against any plaintiff who filed a suit against him with regard to any act done by him as such Receiver without giving the requisite notice. With great respect to the learned Judges who decided that case I am unable to find what act it was that the Receiver had done or purported to do in his official capacity. The true scope of s. 80 is best illustrated by the Calcutta case to which I have referred. There the Official Receiver of the High Court had been appointed in a civil suit to act as a Receiver. A suit was instituted against him claiming damages for wilful default and neglect in his duty as Receiver and it was held that the suit could not proceed in the absence of notice under s. 80. In my opinion, the present suit is not against the Receiver in respect of any act done or purporting to be done by him in his official capacity requiring the service of notice under s. 80.

The next objection of the maintainability of the suit was based on sub-s. (2) of s. 57 of the Bihar and Orissa Co-operative Societies Act. That sub-section provides "while a society is in liquidation no suit .....shall be proceeded with or instituted against the liquidator as such or against the Society or any member thereof on any matter touching the affair of the Society, except by leave of the Registrar and subject to such terms as he may impose s. 44 (3) (a) empowers a liquidator to institute and defend suits and other legal proceedings on behalf of the Society by his name or office and cl. (b) empowers him to determine and realise all sums due to the Society from any person. By the opening words of the sub-section, however, the powers of the liquidator are made subject to the power of control and revision of the Registrar of Co-operative Societies and sub-s. (6) provides that the orders of the Registrar in revision, if any, shall be final. Section 56 empowers a Registrar on application or of his own motion to revise any order passed by a person exercising the powers of a Registrar or by a liquidator under s. 44. The result of these various provisions appears to be, in their application to the facts of the present case, that the liquidator was empowered by s. 44 (3) (a) to take proceedings to execute the award, and the plaintiff, being aggrieved by the liquidator's action in taking such proceedings failed to apply to the Registrar to interfere with the liquidator's act or to grant leave for the institution of a suit under s. 57 (2). He instituted a suit without asking the Registrar to exercise his powers of revision or could not or to grant leave for the institution of the suit. In my opinion, he was not entitled to do so and the suit must fail in the absence of the Registrar's sanction for its institution.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal and set aside the decree of the Court below. The appellant is entitled to his costs throughout.

Leave to appeal under the Letters Patent is granted.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870, as amended in Bengal in 1935), ss. 12, 8-B (3), 8-C—No question as to class of suit—Valuation of Court of first instance is final—Deficit court-fee not paid within time fixed—Proper order to be passed—S. 8-C, applicability.*

Section 12, Court Fees Act has no application when the question for decision is as to the class under which a suit fell and not merely of valuation in that class. If there is a question of valuation, there being no question as to the class in which the suit fell, the valuation made by the Court of first instance is final. 167 Ind. Cas 963 (7), referred to, 5 Ind. Cas. 18 (8), not approved, Omorao Mirza v. Mary Jones (9), explained, H. C. Studd v. Mati Mahto (10), distinguished.

Proper order for the Court to pass, when the deficit court-fee is not paid within time fixed by the Court, is an order for dismissal under the provisions of s. 8-B (3), Court Fees Act, and not an order rejecting the plaint under the provisions of O. VII, r. 11, Civil P. C.

Section 8-C, Court Fees Act, is inapplicable to a case falling within s. 7 (iv), cl. (c).

A. from original decree of the Sub-Judge, First Court, Chittagong, dated April 8, 1937.

Messrs. Krishna Kamal Moitra and Rohini Binod Rakshit, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Rama Prosad Mookerjee, Narendra Kumar Das and Durgesh Prosad Das, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The plaintiff is the appellant before us. She appeals against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated April 8, 1937 by which her plaint had been rejected for non-payment of the deficit court-fees of Rs. 1,980 which the Court below had asked her to pay. The suit was valued by the plaintiff for the purpose of jurisdiction and of court-fee at the sum of Rs. 2,100 and she paid ad valorem court-fee upon that amount at the time when the plaint was registered after presentation. After the plaint was registered, the defendants entered appearance and they raised the question of the sufficiency of the court-fees paid on the plaint. On that the learned Subordinate Judge took security for the payment of the additional court-fee that may eventually be found due and proceeded to determine the amount payable. For the purpose of determining the amount payable, he started an enquiry under s. 8-C, Court Fees Act. A Commissioner was appointed for the purpose of finding out certain details which would, according to the learned Subordinate Judge, be relevant to find out the value of the property in suit. After the Commissioner had submitted his report he took further evidence and came to the conclusion that the net profits of the property in suit were Rs. 4,000 a year. He capitalized the said amount and came to the conclusion that the value of the property in suit was Rs. 60,000 The question as to the amount of court-fees on the plaint was then argued before him.

The plaintiff first contended that Art. 5 of Sch. II, Court Fees Act, was applicable and under that Article the court-fee stamp of 12 annas was sufficient. She further contended that if Art. 5, Sch. II was not applicable, the computation must be made in accordance with the terms of cl. (xi) of s. 7, Court Fees Act. These two points raised by the plaintiff were overruled by the learned Subordinate Judge. He came to the conclusion that the case fell within s. 7, sub-s. (iv), cl. (c), Court Fees Act. He further found that the valuation given in the plaint was an arbitrary valuation and for the purpose of computing court-fee under s. 7, sub-s. (iv), cl. (c), Rs. 60,000 should be taken to be the value of the subject-matter of the suit. This finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is recorded in his order dated January 30, 1937. On the basis of the said order, he found that Rs. 2,175 was the fee payable on the plaint but inasmuch as Rs. 195 had already been paid, he demanded from the plaintiff the difference, viz., Rs. 1,980. He gave the plaintiff time to pay the said deficit amount by February 6, following. On February 6, however the plaintiff put in an application for amendment of the plaint with a view to circumvent the order of the learned Subordinate Judge passed on January 30, 1937. That application for amendment was refused on the same day and we think rightly. The Subordinate Judge however extended the time for the payment of deficit court-fee to February 20, 1937. In his order dated February 6, 1937, when extending the time up to February 20, the learned Subordinate Judge made it quite clear that no further time would be given for putting in the deficit court-fee inasmuch as the matter regarding court-fee was pending in that Court since June 17, 1936.

On February 20, however the plaintiff did not pay the deficit court fees but made an application for being allowed to continue the suit as a pauper. This last mentioned application was kept pending till April 5, 1937. On that date, the matter was fully gone into. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to establish that she was a pauper. Further, he recorded a finding that the suit was really being continued by other persons behind the scene. On April 5, the plaintiff moved this Court against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated January 30, 1937 by which the amount of court-fees payable had been determined and also the order of February 5, 1937 by which her application for amendment of the plaint had been refused. On the next day, viz., on April 6, she made an application to the learned Subordinate Judge which is printed at p. 98 of the paper-book. It is a curious application. First of all, it stated that notice ought to be issued upon the sureties to compel them to pay court-fees on her behalf. She further stated that she had moved this Court and this Court had issued a rule on her application. In the prayer she said that she wanted a further week's time for paying the deficit court-fees and at the same time prayed for a week's time for the purpose of enabling a communication to that Court of this Court's order, that is to say of the rule which had already been issued on April 5. The Court did not give further extension of time for the payment of court-fees as prayed for but only gave two days' time to the sureties to appear, and on April 8, following passed the formal order rejecting the plaint for non-payment of the deficit court-fees. It is against this order that the present appeal has been filed.

Mr. Moitra appearing on behalf of the plaintiff appellant accepts the position that neither Art. 5, Sch. II, Court Fees Act, nor s. 7 (xi) of the same Act is applicable to the case and that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the computation has to be made under the provisions of s. 7 (iv), cl. (c), Court Fees Act. He does not contend before us that s. 8-C, Court Fees Act, is inapplicable to a case falling within s. 7 (iv), cl. (c), Court Fees Act. In fact, having regard to the decision of this Court, that contention, even if it had been made before us, could not have been sustained: see the cases in Jitendra, Nath Ghosh v. Hiranmoy Kumar Saha (1) Santa Prosad Saha v. Mrinalini Saha (2) Urmila Bala Biswas v. Binapani Biswas (3), Kumudini Kanta v. Municipal Commissioners of the Barasat Municipality (4), Anath Nath Banerjee v. Kalimata Thakurain (5) and Kanai Lal Banerjee v. Satyabati Devi (6). Nor does he contend that the reliefs prayed for in the suit before us have no objective standard of valuation. In the circumstances, he raised the question that the learned Subordinate Judge was not right in valuing the subject-matter of the suit at Rs. 60,000 for the purpose of computing court-fees under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act. That is the first point he raised. The second point that he raised is that the Court ought to have given his client some further time for the purpose of enabling her to put in deficit court-fees. At least a week's time, he says, should have been granted to her as prayed for in her application printed at p. 98 of the paper-book. For deciding the first point, we will have to construe the provision of para. (1) of s. 12, Court Fees Act. That paragraph enacts :

"Every question relating to valuation for the purpose of determining the amount of any fee chargeable under this chapter on a plaint...shall be decided by the Court in which such plaint...is filed, and such decision shall be final as between the parties to the suit."

This paragraph stood in the same form since 1870. It is only para. 2 that has been amended in Bengal by the Act VII of 1935. By the same Act (Ben. Act VII of 1935) an Explanation was added to the section. The Explanation is in these terms :

"For the purposes of this section a question relating to the classification of any suit for the purpose of s. 7, shall not be deemed to be a question relating to valuation."

On the section as it stood before its amendment by Act VII of 1935 (B. C.) there was a series of decisions in which the view was maintained that s. 12, had no application when the question for decision was as to the class under which a suit fell and not merely of valuation in that class. If there was a question of valuation, there being no question as to the class in which the suit fell, the valuation made by the Court of first instance was final. Some of these cases are mentioned in the judgment in Sundar Mal v. J. C. Murray (7) and in other cases which it is not necessary for us to review because the explanation added to s. 12 by Ben. Act VII of 1935 had made the position clear. It is the statutory recognition of the effect of the decisions given on para. 1 of s. 12, Court Fees Act, as it stood from 1870. As the appellant's Advocate does not dispute before us the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge, that computation has to be made under s. 7 (iv) (c), Court Fees Act, and as the learned Subordinate Judge valued the subject-matter at Rs. 60,000 for the purpose of computing the court-fees under that section, we do not think that it is open to the appellant to challenge the correctness of the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the value of the subject-matter is Rs. 60,000.

Our attention has been drawn by the appellant to a judgment of a Division Bench in Prokash Chandra Sarkar v. Bishambhar Nath (8), where Brett, J., and Sharfuddin, J. held that para. 1 of s. 12, Court Fees Act, does not prevent an appellant from challenging the valuation made by the Court of first instance for the purpose of assessing court-fee even when there is no question as to the class in which the suit falls. This view is not in accord with series of previous decisions of this Court and of other Courts which it does not appear were cited before them. They rely upon two cases, Omrao Mirza v. Mary Jones (9) and H. C. Studd v. Mati Mahto (10). The last-mentioned case, however, does not support the view taken in that case for there the question raised in the lower Court and in this Court related to the class in which the particular suit fell. In Omrao Mirza v. Mary Jones (9), the actual decision related to the question as to whether the suit fell within a particular class or not. There is, however, an obiter in that case which would support the view taken by Brett, J. and Sharfuddin, J. In view of the fact that the Legislature had made the position clear by adding the Explanation to s. 12, Court Fees Act, and having regard to the fact that a series of cases had decided the other way, we do not feel impressed by the judgment in Prokash Chandra Sarkar v. Bishambar Nath (8). view of the fact that we have now a statutory enactment, we do not further feel inclined to refer the matter to a Full Bench for the purpose of considering the correctness of the decision in Prokash Chandra Sarkar v. Bishambhar Nath (8). We accordingly overrule the first point urged by the appellant.

With regard to the second point, we are of opinion that sufficient time had been given to the appellant to pay the deficit court-fee. The matter was hanging from June 1936. Just before the enquiry was started, security was demanded from her for court-fees which would be payable on a valuation of Rs. 60,000. She had warning from the time when the security was demanded, and that was in 1936. She had warning that she might be called upon to pay further court-fees. On January 30, 1937, the amount was assessed; she was given a week's time to pay the deficit court-fees. She did not comply with that order and got further time till February 20, 1937. On February 20, 1937, she asked for further time for seven days to put in the deficit court-fees and in that application she expressly stated that she would not pray for any further adjournment for further time. On the same day, however, she put in an application to continue the suit in forma pauperis and that application kept the suit still alive not for seven days but for nearly seven weeks. On April 5, 1937, her application to continue the suit in forma pauperis was dismissed. No final order had been passed on her plaint on that day. On the 6th she made a prayer for time for another week to pay in the deficit court-fees. But that prayer having regard to the contents of the application printed at p. 98 of the paper book and the other prayer made therein was not a bona fide prayer at all. In the circumstances, we think that the Court below was justified in rejecting the plaint on April 8, 1937. We think that the proper order for the Court would have been an order for dismissal under the provisions of s. 8-B (3), Court Fees Act, as amended in Bengal by Act VII of 1935 and not an order rejecting the plaint under the provisions of O. VII, r. 11, Civil P. C. But the form of the order is not very material to us in this case. We have proceeded on the footing of the order as actually made and even proceeding on that footing, we do not find any substance in this appeal. The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs, hearing fee six gold mohurs, to be divided equally between the appearing respondents.

Civil Revision Petition No. 581 of 1940

CHINNIYA PILLAI—PETITIONER

SUBBARATNAM PILLAI—RESPONDENT

Madras Local Boards Act (XIV of 1920), s. 55 (2) (b)—Person whose adjudication is annulled under s. 43, Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), if "undischarged insolvent" within s. 55 (2) (b)—Whether disqualified to be member of Local Board—S. 55, if controlled by s. 73, Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920).

Annulment of adjudication, under ss. 35, 39 or 43, Pro. Insol. Act, on whatever ground it is based, must be taken to put an end to the legal character of an insolvent which, adjudication under the Act confers upon a debtor, and he can no longer be regarded in the eye of the law as an insolvent. Hence a person whose adjudication is annulled under s. 43, Prov. Insol. Act, is not disqualified for election as a member of a Local Board as an "undischarged insolvent" under s. 55 (2) (b), Mad. Local Boards Act. That expression in s. 55 is not controlled by s. 73, Prov. Insol. Act.

C. R. P. to revise an order of the District Court, Trichinopoly, dated November 11, 1939.

Mr. T. A. Ramaswami Reddi, for the Petitioners.

Mr. A. V. Narayanaswami Aiyar, for the Respondent.

Order.—The question that falls to be decided in this revision petition is whether a person whose adjudication is annulled under s. 43, Prov. Insol. Act, is disqualified for election as a member of a Local Board as an "undischarged insolvent" under s. 55 (2) (b), Mad. Local Boards Act. The respondent was adjudicated insolvent in 1920 and the adjudication was annulled in 1932 as he did not apply for discharge within the time prescribed. He was elected as a member of the Samayapuram-Kannanore Panchayat Board in June 1938. Apparently no objection was raised on the ground of disqualification when he offered himself for election nor was any proceeding instituted to set aside his election after he was elected but the petitioner who was also a member of the Board applied under s. 57 on November 21, 1938, to the District Judge, Trichinopoly, in which the area of the Local Board is situated, to determine whether or not the respondent was disqualified under s. 55 of the Act. The learned District Judge held that the adjudication of the respondent having been annulled, he could not be said to be an "undischarged insolvent' and accordingty rejected the application. This civil revision petition is directed against that order.

The petitioner's learned Counsel contends that the expression 'undischarged insolvent' should be understood in a literal sense and that once a person was adjudicated insolvent he remained an 'undischarged insolvent' unless he obtained an order of discharge, though the adjudication itself was subsequently annulled. I have no hesitation in rejecting this contention, as its acceptance would lead to the obvious anomaly that a debtor who has obtained his discharge on a partial payment of his debts would be qualified for election to Local Boards, whereas a person whose adjudication has been annulled under s. 35, Prov. Insol. Act, either on the ground that he ought not to have been adjudged insolvent or that his debts have been paid in full, would continue to be disqualified for such election as he would be an 'undischarged insolvent' in the sense contended for by the petitioners' Counsel.

This certainly could not have been the intention of the Legislature in enacting s. 55 (2) (b). The petitioner's learned Counsel recognising this reductio ad absurdum endeavoured to draw a distinction between an annulment of adjudication under s. 35 and an annulment under s. 43, Prov. Insol. Act, on the ground that annulment under the latter provision does not remove the taint of insolvency but only emphasises the debtors insolvent state, and he placed reliance on s. 73 of that Act as recognizing the distinction. Apart from this section the bearing of which on the question in dispute I will presently consider, the Act makes no distinction between annulments of adjudication based on one ground or another so far as their legal effect is concerned There are three sections in the Act which provide for annulment of adjudication, namely, ss. 35, 39 and 43 and s. 37 which indicates what consequences are to follow on such annulment is made applicable in each case. It seems to me therefore that annulment of adjudication, on whatever ground it is based, must be taken to put an end to the legal character of an insolvent which adjudication under the Act confers upon a debtor. The extinction of such character due to annulment may operate to the advantage or to the prejudice of the person concerned according to the circumstances in which his adjudication is annulled, but it is clear that he can no longer be regarded in the eye of the law as an insolvent. It follows therefore that the respondent in this case cannot be held to be an 'undischarged insolvent.' It remains to consider whether this conclusion is affected by anything contained in s. 73, Prov. Insol. Act, That section relates to disqualification of insolvent debtors and so far as it is material here, runs thus :

"73.(1). Where a debtor is adjudged or readjudged insolvent under this Act, he shall, subject to the provisions of this section, be disqualified from (a) being elected or sitting or voting as member of any local authority.

(2) The disqualifications which an insolvent is subject to under this section shall be removed, and shall cease if (a) the order of adjudication is annulled under s. 35, or (b) he obtains from the Court an order of discharge, whether absolute or conditional, with a certificate that his insolvency was caused by misfortune without any misconduct on his part."

It is clear that under this provision, a person adjudged an insolvent continues to be disqualified for election as member of any local authority notwithstanding the annulment of his adjudication under s. 43 of the Act and in this respect the provision goes beyond s. 55 (2) (b), Local Boards Act. Petitioner's learned Counsel did not argue before me that s. 73 enacted by the Central Legislature ought to prevail against s. 55, Local Boards Act, passed by the Provincial Legislature. Such a contention will obviously be of no assistance to the petitioner as the application in this case was made to the lower Court under the special procedure provided by s. 57, Local Boards Act, whereby jurisdiction is conferred upon the District Judge to decide questions of disqualification under certain specific provisions only, namely, ss. 54, 55, 56 and 59 of that Act. All that was argued was that the expression 'undischarged insolvent' used in s. 55 (2) (b) must be understood in the light of the provisions of s. 73, Prov, Insol. Act, so as to avoid a discrepancy between the two provisions. I am unable to see how this can be done consistently with established principles governing construction of statutes. The two provisions, though relating to disqualification for election to Local Board, so far as it arises out of insolvency, are worded altogether differently and the expression 'undischarged insolvent' does not occur in s. 73, Petitioner's Counsel pointed out that the expression 'uncertificated bankrupt' in s. 53 (2) (b), Local Boards Act, must refer to the certificate which is provided for in s 73 (3) of the other Act and argued that the two sections must be read together. I fail to see how the meaning of the expression 'undischarged insolvent' in the former section can be controlled by anything contained in s. 73. It may be that the respondent is disqualified for membership of the panchayat board in question by virtue of the provisions of s. 73 and that, in an appropriate proceeding, he may be declared to be so disqualified. But that, in my opinion, cannot affect the question whether the respondent is disqualified under s. 55 (2) (b), Mad. Local Boards Act. The Court below was concerned only with this question in the proceeding out of which this civil revision petition arises and agreeing with its conclusion I dismiss this petition with costs.

COURT OF WARDS ESTATE OF MALIK AMIR KHAN—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
Lala TEHLA RAM—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Punjab Court of Wards Act (II of 1903), s. 32—Modification of order—Awarding additional and future interest.

Awarding additional and future interest would not amount to modification of the order of the Deputy Commissioner.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Mianwali, dated May 4, 1939.

Mr. Mohammad Monir, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. N. Sethi, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of Rs. 1,400 and a declaration to the effect that the plaintiff was entitled to charge interest on the principal sum in a bond, dated March 1, 1930, on which the plaintiff based his suit. The defendant Khan Sahib Malik Amir Khan, who had executed the bond, had come under the guardianship of the Court of Wards and the claim was notified by the plaintiff to the Deputy Commissioner; but the Deputy Commissioner allowed only the principal sum with interest at one per cent. per mensem from March 1, 1930, the date of the bond, to March 9, 1933. The plaintiff thereupon instituted the present suit to establish his claim to additional interest on the basis of the bond referred to above. The trial Court allowed him a decree for Rs. 1 211. On appeal the learned District Judge raised the decretal amount to Rs. 1,400 He also awarded future interest at Re. ·1-9-0 per cent. per mensem. From this decision the present appeal has been preferred on behalf of the Court of Wards. The learned Counsel for the appellant had challenged in the grounds of appeal the increase of the decretal amount by Rs. 189 by the learned District Judge on appeal, but this point was given up by him at the hearing. In view of the relinquishment of this claim the objection as to deficiency in the court-fee which had been raised on behalf of the respondent was not pressed. It may also be mentioned here that the respondent has made up the deficiency in the court-fee on the appeal in the lower Appellate Court as directed by my order dated February 7, 1940.

On merits the learned Counsel for the appellant has now raised only one point, namely that the additional interest which had been allowed by the Courts below amounts to an interference with the order passed by the Deputy Commissioner and the Courts had therefore no jurisdiction to allow this interest. The Courts below have held that they had power to allow the interest under s. 32, Court of Wards Act. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that according to s. 32, Punjab Court of Wards Act, a Civil Court has no jurisdiction,

"to set aside or modify the order of a Deputy Commissioner fixing a date for the payment of such claim or regulating the order in which claims against the ward or properties under the superintendence of the Court of Wards shall be paid."

The learned Counsel contended that awarding additional and future interest would amount to modification of the order of the Deputy Commissioner as the Deputy Commissioner may find it necessary to pay the amount due to the plaintiff earlier than he intended to avoid accumulation of interest. It seems to me that this is a far-fetched interpretation to place on the wording of s. 32, Punjab Court of Wards Act. The section clearly gives a right to the plaintiff to agitate in the Civil Court any claim which has been duly notified to the Deputy Commissioner but which has been disallowed by him wholly or in part. In the present instance the claim for interest which has been allowed by the Courts below, was duly notified to the Deputy Commissioner and was disallowed by him. Civil Courts had therefore jurisdiction to adjudicate on the plaint. In my opinion, the contention of the learned Counsel is not tenable in view of the language of s 32. I therefore disallow it and dismiss the appeal with costs.

Second Rent Appeal No. 35 of 1937

U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act (IV of 1937), s. 2—Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act (XVIII of 1939), s. 3—Suit for arrears of rent—Appeal pending when Act IV of 1937 came into force—No stay order passed—S. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 does not apply—U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), s. 36—Ex-proprietary rent—Liability to pay, when arises—Oudh Rent Act (XXII of 1886), ss. 19, 19-A—Remission of revenue, when entitles tenants to get remission of rent.

The words " which have been stayed " in s. 3 of U. P. Act XVIII of 1939, do not include those cases in which the proceedings were not stayed by any order of the Court though they ought to have been under s. 2 of U. P. Act IV of 1937. Hence where an appeal against a decision in a suit for arrears of rent was pending when Act IV of 1937, (U. P. Stay of Proceedings (Revenue Courts) Act) came into force but no stay order was passed, the provisions of s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939, (Stayed Arrears of Rent (Remission) Act) do not apply to the suit and the suit cannot be dismissed.

Tenant's liability to pay ex-proprietary rent arises from the date when ex-proprietary tenancy arises and from the date when mutation of names is effected. The new semindar becomes liable to pay revenue from the date of his purchase and if it has been realized from the former semindar the latter can recover it. Mahadeo Prasad v. Mathura (1), 1 Ind. Cas. 689 (2) and 15 Ind. Cas. 189 (3), relied on.

Mere remission of revenue does not by itself entitle the tenants to get remissions of rent unless so ordered by the Collector or the Assistant Collector specially empowered.

S. R. A. against the order of the District Judge of Unao, dated January 20, 1937.

Messrs. R. B. Lal and M. M. Lal, for the Appellant

Mr. Haider Husain, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This second appeal arises out of a suit for arrears of rent brought by the respondent No. 1 Badri Prasad against the appellant Daya Shankar and the respondent No. 2 Mst. Gomti. The suit was in respect of the years 1341, 1342 and 1343 Fasli.

The Assistant Collector dismissed the suit for Kharif 1341 Fasli but decreed it in full for Rabi 1341 and 1342 and allowed the defendants Rs. 13-8 on account of remission of rent for the year 1343. He also allowed part interest at the rate of 9 per cent. per annum and future interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. There was an appeal to the District Judge, Unao by the plaintiff and the defendants filed cross-objections. The appeal was allowed to this extent that the claim for 1341 Kharif was also decreed. The cross-objections were dismissed. An appeal to this Court was filed on April 16, 1937, by one of the defendants. The grounds taken were that the plaintiff was not entitled to recovery of rent for Kharif 1341 Fasli and that remission of rent ought to have been allowed for the years 1341, 1342 and 1343. It was also pleaded that the plaintiff ought not to have been awarded any interest and that the appellant was entitled to a credit of Rs. 72-12 paid by him towards land revenue and expenses for Kharif 1341 Fasli. An application was filed on December 17, 1940, that a further ground be added to the grounds of appeal that the plaintiff's suit was not maintainable at all in consequence of s. 2 of Act IV of 1937 and Act XVIII of 1939 passed after the filing of the appeal.

The first point which I have to consider is whether the plaintiff's suit is not maintainable under Acts IV of 1937 and XVIII of 1939. Act IV of 1937 received the assent of the Governor of the United Provinces on September 21, 1937, and was published under s. 75 of the Govt. of India Act on September 25, 1937, s. 2 of this Act provides :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Agra Ten. Act, 1926, or the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, or the Civil P. C., 1908, all proceedings in suits and applications of the classes specified in the Schedule to this Act, pending on the date when this Act comes into force, or instituted during the period this section remains in force, shall be stayed for such period as this section shall remain in force....."

When this Act was in force another Act (XVIII of 1939) was passed. It received the assent of the Governor of the United Provinces on January 30, 1940, and was published in the United Pro- vinces Gazette on February 17, 1940. Section 3 of this Act provides :

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Agra Ten. Act, 1926, or the Oudh Rent Act, 1886, or any other Act for the time being in force but subject to the provisions of s. 5, all suits or applications for the recovery of arrears of rent which have been stayed under the provisions of the United Provinces Stay of Proceedings Act, 1937 (Act IV of 1937) shall be dismissed, and no Court shall entertain any suit or application for the recovery of arrears of rent which if instituted or made during the period in which the United Provinces Stay of Proceedings Act is in force would have been stayed under the provisions of that Act."

It is contended on behalf of the appellant that when Act IV of 1937 came into force his appeal was pending and so the suit ought to have been dismissed under s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939. It was contended on behalf of the appellant that an appeal is a proceeding in the suit but the respondents contested this point. I think it is not necessary to decide the point. Under s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 only those suits or applications will be dismissed which have been stayed under the provisions of Act IV of 1937. This suit or the appeal was never stayed by any order of the Court. It is argued that the appeal ought to be considered to have been stayed automatically without any order being passed. I think the words "which have been stayed" in s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 do not include those cases in which the proceedings were not stayed by any order of the Court though they ought to have been under s. 2 of Act IV of 1937. Had the Legislature meant it, the words would have been "which have been stayed or ought to have been stayed". Act IV of 1937 is no longer in force and no stay can be made now. I think that the provisions of s. 3 of Act XVIII of 1939 cannot apply to this suit and that the ground taken by the appellant subsequent to the filing of the appeal has no force.

I now proceed to the appellant's grounds originally mentioned by him in his memorandum of appeal. The first two grounds are in respect of the rent for Kharif 1341, the claim about which was dismissed by the trial Court but allowed by the learned District Judge. The plaintiff purchased the plots in question at an auction sale on October 27, 1933. He obtained possession on November 17, 1933. Mutation of names in favour of the plaintiff was effected on April 27, 1934. The defendants were held to be ex-proprietary tenants of the plots in question on July 18, 1934, and a rent of Rs. 144-2-9 was fixed. The appellant's contention is that as mutation of names in favour of the plaintiff was effected after the expiry of Kharif 1341, so he is not entitled to rent for that fasal. Section 36 of the Land Revenue Act provides that the rent fixed shall be payable from the date the ex-proprietary tenancy arose and subject to the law of limitation as to arrears of rent and save as provided by s. 41 of the Agra Ten. Act or s. 35-B of the Oudh Rent Act shall not be liable to enhancement or abatement for a period of ten years except by an order of a settlement officer under s. 87. It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that the tenant's liability to pay rent does not begin from the date the ex-proprietary tenancy arises but that no enhancement or abatement for a period of ten years can be made from that date I see nothing in the wording of this section to put that interpretation upon it. The point has been decided by the Allahabad High Court and by this Court. It was held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Mahadeo Prasad v. Mathura (I. L. R. 8., All., 189) (1), that a landlord is entitled to recover rent from the date the ex-proprietary tenancy arises. Their Lordships observed that the tenancy was created by the plaintiff's purchase of the original landlord's interest and the rent when fixed under the statute which provides the means for determining the rent payable, becomes the rent which is to be paid during the whole tenancy, or the rent of the land held by the tenant during the whole of his tenancy, and as soon as that has been fixed the landlord can put his remedy in force if the tenant fails to pay the debt. In Hardeo Bakhsh Singh v. Sri Pargash Singh (12 O. C., 35) (2) and Bhan Partab Sahi v. Sheo Dat Bahadur Singh (15 O. C., 45) (3), it was held that a zemindar's right to claim rent against an ex-proprietary tenant at the rate fixed by the Revenue Court accrues not merely from the date on which the rent is so fixed but from the date on which the ex-proprietary tenancy arises. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that the late zemindar is liable to pay revenue as long as his name remains in the khewat and it would be very unfair if he is made liable for the rent. This argument has no force. The new zemindar becomes liable to pay revenue from the date of his purchase and if it has been realized from the former zemindar the latter can recover it. I see no reason to go contrary to the law laid down by the Allahabad High Ocurt and this Court. I therefore think that the learned District Judge was justified in decreeing the suit for Kharif 1341 Fasli.

(1) 8 A 189; A W N 1886, 52.
(2) 12 O C 35; 1 Ind. Cas. 689 (2).
(3) 15 O C 45; 15 Ind. Cas. 189.

Grounds Nos. 3 and 4 of the memorandum of appeal relate to the remissions of rent for the year 1341 Fasli. It was said that there was remission in the land revenue and so there should be a corresponding remission in rent also. Reliance is placed on ss. 19 and 19 A of the Oudh Rent Act. The evidence of the patwari shows that no remission was allowed to ex-proprietary tenants. It was said that the khetauni for 1341 shows that revenue was remitted but that does not by itself entitle the tenants to get remissions of rent unless so ordered by the Collector or the Assistant Collector specially empowered. It is not shown that there was any such order. These grounds therefore have no force.

Grounds Nos. 5 and 6 relate to the remissions in 1342 and 1343. The lower Courts have allowed remissions in 1343 and the evidence of the patwari shows that there was no remission allowed to ex-proprietary tenants in 1342. These grounds have no force.

Ground No. 7 relates to interest. The lower Courts had discretion in awarding interest and I see no reason to differ from them.

The last ground is that the appellant paid Rs. 72-12 on account of revenue in Kharif 1341 and he should get credit for that amount. I see no reason to allow that amount to the defendant in this case.

If he has paid anything on account of revenue, he can bring a fresh suit.

The appeal has no force and I dismiss it with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Equitable mortgage—Letter signed and delivered to mortgagee at time of depositing title-deeds, by way of security for loans—Letter, held required registration.

One S borrowed money on a promissory note and deposited with the creditor title-deeds of certain property as security. At the time of the deposit S signed and delivered to the mortgagee a letter which stated that S had received the amount in cash and for that amount had kept with the mortgagee as security, the original title-deeds relating to certain property. The letter further stated that at the time of the discharge of the bond, S would take back the letter as well as the title-deeds. In a subsequent mortgage the said letter was described not only as collateral security letter but as security for the loan;

Held, that the letter constituted the bargain between the parties and operated to declare the rights of the mortgagee in the property. Consequently, the memorandum fell within s. 17, Regis. Act, and ought to have been registered. Not having been registered it could not be admitted in evidence with the result that the equitable mortgage could not be proved. 181 Ind. Cas. 922, reversed. [p. 155, col. 1.]

A. from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Wadsworth, reported in 181 Ind. Cas. 922.

Messrs. Srinivasaraghavan and Thayagarajan, K. Narasimha Ayyar and T. V. Subramania Ayyar, for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—This appeal raises the question whether an equitable mortgage is unenforcable by reason of the non-registration of a letter signed by the mortgagor at the time of the deposit of the title deeds. One P. M. Sadasiva Chetty, his sons Subramanian and Somasundaram, (respondents Nos. 3 and 4), his brother Gangadhara Chetty, and Gangbdhara Chetty's son Thayamanaya (defendant No. 3 in the suit) constituted an undivided Hindu family. The family owned immovable property in Madras, 2.10 acres of land in Arasur, village, Chingleput District, and .42 acres of land and a rice mill in Ponneri village, which is also in the Chingleput District. The properties in Madras consisted of three houses and their sites, known as 16 Audiappa Chetti Street, 41 Guruvappa Chetty Street and 105 Egmore High Road, respectively. On August 2, 1930, Sadasiva, who was the manager of the family, borrowed from respondents Nos. 1 and 2 Rs. 1,900, on a promissory note and as security deposited the title deeds of No. 16, Audiappa Chetty Street. Before us it has not been disputed that this money was borrowed for the purposes of the family. At the time of the deposit Sadasiva signed and delivered to the mortgagees a letter in

Tamil of which the following is the official translation :

"On August 2, 1930, the collateral letter executed in favour of two persons (1) C. V. Krishnaveni Ammal and (2) C. Sundaram Chetty, residing in house No. 3, Cuddapah Rangiah Chetty Street, Periamet, Madras, by P. M. Sadasiva Chettiar, son of the late P. Munisami Chetti, Vannia Vaisya Caste, Saivaite, merchant, residing in house No. 16, Audiappa Chetti, Street, Chintadripet, Madras. On executing a pro-note to you this date Rs. 1,900 (rupees one thousand and nine hundred) has been received in cash from you. For this sum, I have kept with you as security, house No. 16, Audiappa Chetty Street, said petta, said Madras, and the original title deeds relating to the property. At the time when I discharge, the aforesaid bond, I shall take back this letter as well as the aforesaid title deeds.

To this effect have I executed this collateral letter with consent."

On August 22, 1931, 41, Guruvappa Chetty Street, and 105, Egmore High Road were mortgaged to defendant No. 6 in the suit. He having died he is now represented by his executrix, respondent No. 6. This mortgage was effected by a registered instrument signed by Sadasiva for himself as manager of the joint family and as guardian of defendant No. 3, whose father was then dead. On April 19, 1932, Sadasiva and his eldest son, respondent No. 3, executed two mortgage deeds in favour of respondents Nos. 1 and 2, one to secure Rs. 2,000, made up of the Rs. 1,900 borrowed on August 2, 1930, and a further advance of Rs. 100, and the other to secure Rs. 500. The security for the first of these mortgages was No. 16, Audiappa Chetty Street and this mortgage was intended to take the place of the equitable mortgage. The security for the sum of Rs. 500 was the .42 acres of land and the rice mill in Ponneri village. The suit out of which the appeal arises was filed to enforce the mortgages.

On March 24, 1931, the minor defendant No. 3 through his mother, the appellant, instituted a partition suit on the original side of this Court (C. S. No 471 of 1931). The minor died during the pendency of the suit and the appellant was made a party as his legal representative. The mortgage of April 19, 1932, which replaced the equitable mortgage of August 2, 1930, having been created after the partition suit had been filed did not affect the minor's estate and the mortgagees are relegated to their rights if any under the equitable mortgage. The learned trial Judge (Wadsworth, J.) held that the letter which was given with reference to the deposit of title deeds did not require registration and therefore the minor's estate was bound by the equitable mortgage. On this basis he granted the mortgagees a mortgage decree in respect of the Rs. 1,900. Other contentions were raised before the learned Judge but the appeal has been confined solely to the question whether equitable mortgage of August 2, 1930, can be enforced. In the mortgage deed of April 19, 1932, for Rs. 2,000, made up of the Rs. 1,900 borrowed on the equitable mortgage and the further advance of Rs. 100, there is the following recital :

"A sum of Rs. 1,900 (rupees one thousand and nine hundred) has already been borrowed from you on August 2, 1930, by executing a bond and by giving you a collateral security letter as security thereof."

The appellant's case is that the letter given by Sadasiva at the time of the deposit of title deeds, read in the light of the recital in the mortgage deed of April 19, 1932, just quoted, must be construed as a declaration of the mortgagee's rights on the property and therefore required registration under s. 17, Regis. Act. Not having been registered it could not be admitted in evidence by reason of s. 49, Regis. Act. The learned Judge treated the letter as a mere memorandum of a transaction previously completed and on this footing held that it did not require registration.

Before considering certain authorities which have been quoted to us I will revert to the facts. As I have already stated, the execution of the promissory note, the deposit of the title deeds and the execution of the letter all took place on August 2, 1930. It may be taken that the signing of the promissory note and the deposit of title deeds took place before the letter was signed in actual point of time. The evidence discloses that five or six days before August 2, the title deeds were handed over to the mortgagees to enable their representative to scrutinise them, the understanding being that if the title deeds proved to be in order, they would advance money on equitable mortgage. The learned Judge has held that inasmuch as respondent No. 2 said that the examiner of the documents had approved of the title five or six days before August 2, 1930, it was reasonable to infer that for these five days the title deeds remained with respondent No. 2 as security for the loan and therefore there was a completed mortgage agreement some days anterior to August 2, 1930. I find myself unable to share this opinion. The title deeds were handed over for the purpose of examination of the title and they must be deemed to have remained with the mortgagees for that purpose until they intimated to Sadasiva on August 2, 1930, that they were willing to advance the money. On the evidence both of respondent No. 2 and of the person who examined the deeds it is clear that they were handed over merely for the purpose of examination of title and that there was no deposit by way of equitable mortgage until August 2, 1930. The case therefore cannot be decided on the basis that there was a completed transaction before that date. With these observations I will now proceed to the examination of the authorities. In Subramanian v. Lutchman (1), the Privy Council had to consider a memorandum which was signed and delivered by the mortgagors at the time of the deposit of title deeds by way of equitable mortgage It was held in that case that oral proof of the mortgage was inadmissible because the document drawn up constituted the bargain between the parties. There the memorandum was in the following terms :

"We hand you herewith title deeds relating to Fifth Class Lot Nos. 78, 79 and 80, Block E, each measuring 25 by 50, with building thereon belonging to Saleman Ahmad Seedat, also his promissory note for rupees sixty-three thousand (Rs. 63,000) due to us, this; please hold as security against advances made to us; we also hand you second mortgage executed in our favour by C. Rangaswamy Moodaliar on First Class Lot No. 6 in Block F-1. On this we had advanced Rs. 32,000. Please also hold this as further security against advance made to us. We promise not to deal with same till your amount due is fully paid and satisfied."

Lord Carson who delivered the judgment of the Board said that their Lordships had no doubt that the memorandum in question was the bargain between the parties, and that without its production in evidence the plaintiff could establish no claim, and as it was unregistered it ought to have been rejected. Their Lordships were here applying the principles laid down in Pranjivandas Mehta v. Chan Ma Phee (2) at p. 900 and Shaw v. Foster (3). The question of the admissibility of a memorandum relating to a deposit of title deeds was considered by the Privy Council in Obla Sundarachariar v. Narayana Ayyar (4). There the memorandum consisted of a list of title deeds with the following introductory words :

"Written to E. N. A. Samoo Battar by Krishnaswami Ayyar, of S. V. Ramaswami Ayyar and Brothers. As agreed upon in person I have delivered to you the undermentioned documents as security."

Section 17, Regis. Act, requires registration of non-testamentary instruments which purport or operate to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish, whether in present or in future, any right, title or interest, whether vested or contingent, of the value of Rs. 100 and upwards, to or in immovable property. Lord Tomlin, in delivering the judgment of the Board, pointed out that the question which fell to be determined was whether the memorandum, having regerd to its true construction and the circumstances in which it came into existence and passed into the hands of the plaintiff, was an instrument of this nature. Their Lordships regarded the memorandum as a list of the documents deposited and nothing more. It did not embody the terms of the agreement between the parties, and therefore did not require registration. While their Lordships did not think that the language of Lord Carson in Subramanian v. Lutchman (1), conveyed or was intended to convey the meaning that no memorandum relating to a deposit of title deeds could be within s. 17, Regis. Act, unless it embodied all the particular of the transactions of which the deposit formed part, they were of opinion that no such memorandum could be within the section unless on its face it embodied such terms and was signed and delivered at such time and place and in such circumstances as to lead legitimately to the conclusion that so far as the deposit was concerned, it constituted the agreement between the parties. In the recent case in Hari Sankar Paul v. Kedar Nath (5), the Privy Council after reviewing their earlier decisions expressed themselves thus :

"Their Lordships are of opinion that where, as here, the parties professing to create a mortgage by deposit of title deeds contemporaneously enter into a contractual agreement, in writing, which is made an integral part of the transaction and is itself an operative instrument and not merely evidential, such a document must under the statute be registered."

Therefore what is to be considered in the present case is whether the memorandum of August 2, 1930, was made an integral part of the transaction and is an instrument intended to declare the right of the mortgagees in the property and not merely a record of what had transpired. The memorandum under discussion is written in part in the past tense. It states :

"On executing a pro-note to you this date Rs. 1,900 has been received in cash from you. For this sum, I have kept with you as security house No. 16, Andiappa Chetti Street, said petta, said Madras, and the original title deeds relating to the property."

But it goes on to say :

"At the time when I discharge the aforesaid bond, I shall take back this letter as well as the aforesaid title deeds," and concludes with this statement : "To this effect have I executed this collateral letter with consent." If the letter is read as a whole there is a great deal to be said for the argument that it was intended to constitute the bargain between the parties, but our attention has been drawn to the decision of Schwabe, C. J., and Ramesam, J. in Krishnaiya v. Ponnuswami Aiyar (6), where it was held that a memorandum in the following terms did not require registration :

"Collateral security letter in respect of a house executed in favour of Messrs. Peruru Viswanadham and Koneti Desikacharayulu Co. of Madras. As you have this day obtained an assignment of the sum of Rs. 1,945 due by me to Messrs. Peruru Viswanadham & Co, the same being the sum of principal and interest due, I have this day executed a pro-note in your favour for this sum and the sum of Rs. 500 taken to-day, i. e., the total of Rs. 2,455; so let it be known that for that I have retained with you as collateral security my document of the Collector's certificate No. 815 in respect of my house bearing door No. 11 in Tiruvattiswaranpet, Madras."

This memorandum has much in common with the memorandum under consideration in the present case. It is described as a collateral security and states what had preceded its execution. The learned Judges however treated it merely as a record of a completed transaction made for the purpose of regarding facts for the information of a new firm. The position here is not analogous and there is the further factor that in the mortgage deed of April 19, 1932, which the mortgagees obtained from the mortgagor the memorandum of August 2, 1930 is described not only as a collateral security letter but as security for the loan. Can it be said in these circumstances that the parties were merely contemplating a record of a completed transaction and not an operative instrument ? When the memorandum is read in the light of the recital in the subsequent deed of mortgage it seems to me that the only conclusion open is that it constituted the bargain between them and operated to declare the rights of the mortgagees in the property. Consequently I hold that the momrandum falls within s. 17, Regis. Act, and ought to have been registered. Not having been registered it cannot be admitted in evidence which means that the equitable mortgage cannot be proved. I would allow the appeal with costs both here and below against respondents Nos. 1 and 2.

ALLIANZA UND STUTTAGARTER LABENS VERSICHERUNGS BANK AKTIENGESALLSCHAFT, GERMANY KNOWN IN INDIA AS ALLIANZ UND STUTTGARTER LIFE INSURANCE BANK, LTD. AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS

Insurance—Life — Fraud — Person effecting insurance must be actually dependent on or expect advantage from continued existence of person insured —Person effecting insurance on his younger brother's life held had no insurable interest and hence the insurance contract was void under ss. 23 and 30, Contract Act (IX of 1872) — Insurance Company can under s. 92, Evidence Act (I of 1872), prove that person effecting insurance was doing it for his own use and benefit and not for use and benefit of person insured.

To give the person effecting the insurance an insurable interest in the life of the person insured, there must be actual dependence of the person effecting the insurance on the person whose life is insured or he must have an expectancy of some advantage from the continued existence of the person insured. Harse v. Peral Life Assurance Co. (3), referred to. [p. 157, col. 2.]

A doctor insured the life of his younger brother who was carrying on a money-lending business on his own behalf and was not rendering any valuable services to the doctor. He was receiving Rs. 11 per month from his brother on account of the price of a house that he had transferred to him. He was also receiving maintenance and in lieu of that maintenance he used to assist his brother as a compounder. No such services were being rendered by him as could be enforced by the doctor in a Court of Law. The voluntary services rendered by him were also of an insignificant and perfunctory nature and in lieu thereof he used to receive maintenance from his brother. In the policy he was shown as a money-lender carrying on an independent business and was not insured as a compounder rendering services to his brother. Shortly afterwards, the policy was assigned in favour of his brother doctor and the assignment was registered in the office of the company. The company continued to receive premiums from doctor by means of cheques. On the death of his brother the doctor demanded a sum of Rs. 20,000, but the company refused to pay on the ground that the contract of insurance was void on account of fraud and misrepresentation, that the real person securing the insurance was the doctor and that his younger brother was merely a figurehead.

Held, that it could not be held that doctor was in any way dependent on his brother or that he expected to receive any substantial advantage from the continued existence of the life of his brother. In insuring his younger brother's life for a sum of Rs. 20,000 he was not insuring the life of a compounder but he was entering into a wagering transaction hoping to make money if his younger brother disappeared. The insurance contract was therefore against public policy and was also a wagering contract under the provisions of ss. 23 and 30, Contract Act. Alamai v. Positive Government Security Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (1), referred to. Barnes v. London Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co. (2), distinguished. [p. 158, col 2]

Held, also that under proviso (1) to s 92, Evi. Act, the insurance company was entitled to prove facts showing that the insurance was really effected by the doctor for his own use and benefit and not for the use and benefit of his younger brother. Shilling v. Accidental Death Insurance Co. (4), relied on. Messrs. Mehr Chand Mahajan, Nand Lal Bhalla and Jindra Lal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—The facts, bearing on the question of law involved in this appeal, may be shortly stated. On March 5, 1932, Dr. Mani Shankar Someshwar Pandya (hereinafter referred to as Dr. Pandya), defendant, sent a post-card to the plaintiff Company stating that he desired to insure the life of his younger brother Ganpat Lal Someshwar Pandya and that a copy of the prospectus of the Company should be sent to him. On June 1, 1932, the Company received a proposal from Dr. Pandya proposing to insure the life of his brother G. S. Pandya for a sum of Rs. 20,000 After the receipt of this proposal the Company wrote to its agent pointing out that Dr. Pandya had no insurable interest in the life of his younger brother G. S. Pandya, and suggesting that the proposal form should be filled in and signed by G. S. Pandya himself. On June 10, 1932, the agent of the Company secured a second proposal form which had been filled in by Dr. Pandya but which was signed by G. S. Pandya. Thereafter, G. S. Pandya was examined by two medical men and the Company accepted the proposal and issued a policy of insurance on the life of G. S. Pandya on October 26, 1932. Shortly afterwards, the policy was assigned by G. S. Pandya in favour of his brother Dr. Pandya, and the assignment was registered in the office of the Company on December 21, 1932. The Company continued to receive premiums from Dr. Pandya by means of cheques. G. S. Pandya died on July 24, 1933. Dr. Pandya demanded a sum of Rs. 20,000, but the Company refused to pay and instituted the present suit for the cancellation of the policy on April 7, 1936. It was stated by the Company that the contract of insurance was void on account of fraud and misrepresentation, that the real person securing the insurance was Dr. Pandya, and that his younger brother G. S. Pandya was merely a figurehead. It was further pleaded that as Dr. Pandya had no insurable interest in the life of his younger brother G. S. Pandya, the contract was a wagering contract, and was, therefore, void ab initio under the provisions of ss. 23 and 30, Contract Act. The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that no fraud had been committed and no misrepresentations had been made to the Company. It was also pleaded that the defendant had an insurable interest in the life of his younger brother G. S. Pandya as he used to work as a compounder of the defendant. It was denied that the contract was a wagering contract or that it was against public policy. The trial Court held that no fraud or misrepresentation had been established. The Company's claim was, however, decreed on the ground that Dr. Pandya had no insurable interest in the life of his younger brother and that the policy of insurance was therefore void under ss. 23 and 30, Contract Act. Against this decision Dr. Pandya preferred an appeal in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Delhi. This decision of the trial Court having been affirmed on appeal, the defendant has preferred a second appeal to this Court. Mr. Bhagwat Dayal, who argued the case of the defendant appellant with great ability, contended that the lower Courts had erred in applying the restrictive provisions of the English Insurance Act of 1774 to the present case. It has been enacted by

s. 1, Insurance Act of 1774 that

"No insurance shall be made by any person or persons . . . on the life or lives of any person or persons, or on any other event or events whatsoever, wherein the person or persons for whose use, benefit, or on whose account such policy or policies shall be made shall have no interest, or by way of gaming or wagering."

Section 2 of the Act lays down that:

"It shall not be lawful to make any policy or policies on the life or lives of any person or persons, or other event or events, without inserting in such policy or policies the person or persons' name or names interested therein, or for whose use, benefit, or on whose account such policy is so made."

The argument of the learned Counsel was that the above-mentioned sections greatly restrict the meaning of the words "insurable interest," and that as these sections are not in force in India, the English Law on the subject should not have been applied by the lower Courts to the facts of the present case. In England it has been held (i) that a person has an insurable interest in his own life; (ii) that a wife has an insurable interest in the life of her husband, and (iii) that a husband has an insurable interest in the life of his wife. It has been held that in all other cases relationship per se does not create an insurable interest when one relation effects an insurance on the life of another. The learned Counsel contended that as the restrictive provisions of the Insurance Act of 1774 are not applicable to India, we must follow the American decisions wherein it has been held that relationship as such, on account of affection and moral obligation, creates an insurable interest when one relative effects an insurance on the life of another relative. Reliance was placed in this connection by Mr. Bhagwat Dayal on Basu's Law of Insurance (1940 Edition) p. 108. It is stated in Basu that in an American case it has been held that a sister has an insurable interest in the life of her brother. In another case insurable interest was presumed in the case of a parent and a child, and it was held that:

"the interest required need not be such as to constitute the basis of any direct claim in favour of the plaintiff upon the party whose life is insured; it is sufficient if an indirect advantage may result to the plaintiff from its life."

In another American case it has been held according to Basu that

"except in cases where there are ties of blood or marriage the expectation of advantage from the continuance of the life of the insured in order to be reasonable, as the law counts, reasonableness must be founded on the existence of some contract between the person whose life is insured and the beneficiary, the fulfilment of which the death will prevent."

In the case of Loomis v. Eagle Life and Health Insurance Company (1) Shaw, C. J., observed that:

"In this common wealth (Massachussetts) . . a parent has an interest in the life of a child and vice versa a child in the life of a parent; not merely on the ground of a provision of law that parents and grandparents are bound to support their lineal kindred when they may stand in need of relief, but upon considerations of strong morals, and the force of natural affection between near kindred, operating often more efficaciously than those of positive law.

In reply Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan referred to Barwell's Law of Insurance in British India (Edn. 1940). It has been stated in Barwell that the American Courts admit an insurable interest in the life of any relative where, apart from any legal liability in the matter, there is actual dependence on that relative. It was contended that even in America it cannot be held that a person insuring the life of a relative has an insurable interest in the life of the person insured unless there is actual dependence of the one on the other. The American reports in original are not available, but it appears to me that the effect of the American decisions has been too widely stated by Basu, and that Barwell's Summary of the American decisions represents the American Law correctly. In other words there must be actual dependence of the person effecting the insurance on the person whose life is insured to give the person effecting the insurance an insurable interest in the life of the person insured. Reference may be made in this connection to Macgilivray on Insurance Law (Edn. 2), p. 224. The following quotation from Macgilivray may be reprodnced in extenso:

"There are numerous decisions in America relating to insurable interest as among relatives. The settled rule appears to be that if there is a de facto state of dependence the dependant has an insurable interest in the life of the person who supports him even although he has no legal claim to be supported, but where a person is independent he has no insurable interest in the lives of relatives on the ground that he might in the future have a legal or moral claim to be supported by them. Thus, where there is actual dependence, and a reasonable expectation of the benefit continuing a granddaughter is held to have an interest in the life of her grandfather, and an adopted daughter in the life of a stranger who adopted her, and a woman in the life of her brother. But where there is no actual dependence or immediate pecuniary benefit the American Courts hold that a child has no interest in the life of a parent or a parent in the life of a child, and a fortiori in the case of remoter relationship. Where a child contributes his earnings to the joint support of the household some of the American Courts have held that the parent has an insurable interest; "Loomis v. Eagle Life and Health Insurance Company (1)."

(1) 23 B 191.

Mr. Mehr Chand Mahajan also referred to a Division Bench ruling of the Bombay High Court reported in Alamai v. Positive Govt. Security Life Assurance Co., Ltd. (1), where it was held that in India an insurance for a term of years on the life of a person in which the person effecting the insurance has no interest is void as a wagering contract under s. 30, Contract Act.

Mr. Bhagwat Dayal relied strongly on an English case, Barnes v. London Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co. (2). In this case the plaintiff had promised the mother of a child to take care of the child and help to maintain her (the child being the plaintiff's step-sister) and there was no evidence that the child's father was alive. It was held that the undertaking to incur expense created an insurable interest. It was strongly urged that there was no dependence of the plaintiff on the child whose life had been insured and still the plaintiff was held to have an insurable interest in the life of the child. This is a border line case. This case was explained in Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co. (3), at p. 96. It was observed that in Barnes v. London Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co. (2), the Court proceeded upon the ground that plaintiff having given a promise to the child's mother to look after the child and help to maintain it and having in discharge of that promise expended money in maintaining the child and having a reasonable expectation that the child, if it lived, would repay the money so expended on its behalf had an insurable interest in the child's life up to the amount of the payments actually made on its account analogous to that which a creditor has in the life of his debtor. It was further remarked that if the Court meant to go further in Barnes v. London Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co. (2), and hold that an expectation of having some day to pay the funeral expenses of a person whom the plaintiff is under no legal obligation to bury is sufficient to create an insurable interest, the decision could not be supported. The case in Barnes v. London Edinburgh and Glasgow Assurance Co. (2), in view of the observations made in Harse v. Pearl Life Assurance Co. (3), cannot be held to govern the present case.

The question for consideration therefore is whether Dr. Pandya had an insurable interest in the life of G. S. Pandya in the sense that he expected any advantage from the continued existence of his younger brother. Both the lower Courts have held that G. S. Pandya was carrying on a money-lending business on his own behalf and that he was not rendering any valuable services to Dr. Pandya. He was receiving Rs. 11 per month from his brother on account of the price of a house that he had transferred to him. He was also receiving maintenance and in lieu of that maintenance he used to assist his brother as a compounder. No such services were being rendered by G. S. Pandya as could be enforced in a Court of Law by Dr. Pandya. The voluntary services rendered by him were also of an insignificant and perfunctory nature and in lieu thereof he used to receive maintenance from his brother. In these circumstances it cannot be held that Dr. Pandya was in any way dependent on G. S Pandya or that he expected to receive any substantial advantage from the continued existence of the life of his brother. Within a period of two years Dr. Pandya effected "insurance on the life of his younger brother to the extent of Rs. 20,000. Dr. Pandya has taken five policies on his own life but he has not chosen to inform the Court whether he has effected insurance for a heavy sum on his own life or whether the policies on his own life are much smaller in value than those of G. S. Pandya. It appears to me that in insuring his younger brother's life for a sum of Rs. 20,000 he was not insuring the life of a compounder but he was entering into a wagering transaction hoping to make money if his younger brother disappeared. In the insurance policies G. S. Pandya was shown as a money-lender carrying on an independent business and he was not insured as a compounder rendering services to his brother. The contract was therefore, in my opinion, against public policy and was also a wagering contract under the provisions of ss 23 and 30, Contract Act.

It was next contended by Mr. Bhagwat Dayal that the insurance company cannot go behind the policy and plead that G. S. Pandya had not taken out the policy but the real person who had insured the life of G. S. Pandya was his elder brother Dr. Pandya. He urged that by means of a letter the company had informed its agent that G. S. Pandya should sign the proposal form. It had not imposed any restriction on Dr. Pandya paying the premiums on the life of his brother. According to the learned Counsel the Company was estopped from denying that G. S. Pandya was the person who had effected the insurance on his own life. The lower Courts have gone into the entire oral and documentary evidence produced by the parties and have given a finding to the effect that G. S. Pandya merely affixed his signatures to the proposal form, and that the real person effecting the insurance was Dr. Pandya on the life of his brother. Holding that Dr. Pandya had no insurable interest in the life of his younger brother, the contract has been held to be void and unenforceable. Proviso 1 to s. 92, Evi. Act, lays down that any fact may be proved which would invalidate any document, or which would entitle any person to any decree or order relating thereto; such as fraud, intimidation, illegality, want of due execution, want of capacity in any contracting party. In my opinion, it is open to the company to prove facts which show that the contract of insurance was illegal from the very beginning in this case. By proving that the insurance was really effected by Dr. Pandya and not by G. S. Pandya they are showing the illegality of the contract forming the basis of the claim of Dr. Pandya. Reference may also be made in this connection to the case in Shilling v. Accidental Death Insurance Co. (4). In this case the insurance company was allowed to prove that the policy of insurance was in truth and in fact made and effected by one Thomas Shilling in the name and in the pretended behalf of the James Shilling, but for the use, benefit and on account and behalf of the said Thomas Shilling himself. I therefore hold that under proviso (1) to s. 92, Evi. Act, the insurance company was entitled to prove facts showing that the insurance was really effected by Dr. Pandya, for his own use and benefit and not for the use and benefit of his younger brother G. S. Pandya.

In view of the findings of fact given by the lower Appellate Court no other question of law arises in the present case. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. Mr. Bhagwat Dayal states that his client wishes to file a Letters Patent Appeal. I certify that this is a fit case for a further appeal under the Letters Patent.

U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934), s. 45—Revision against appellate order of District Judge passed before amendment of Act, filed subsequent to amendment, is incompetent—It cannot even be treated as second appeal.

Where an application for revision of an order of the District Judge passed in appeal on August 31, 1939, was filed on October 6, 1939 and the Encum. Estates Act as amended by Act XI of 1939, had come into force on September 30, 1939:

Held, that the revision was incompetence and it could not even be treated as a second appeal as under s 45, a second appeal could lie only in respect of appellate orders or decrees passed after the amending Act came into force and not to those passed before it. 189 Ind. Cas. 265 (1), relied on.

C. R. App against the order of the District Judge of Unao, dated August 31, 1939.

Mr. Syed Mohammad, for the Applicants.

Mr. Mohammad Ayub, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application for revision of an order of the District Judge of Unao upholding an order of the Special Judge second grade under the U. P. Encum. Estates Act. The order of the District Judge was passed in appeal on August 31, 1939 and this revision was filed on October 6, 1939. The Encum. Estates Act was amended by Act XI of 1939 which into force on September 30, 1939. Under the law as it stood before the amendment an appeal against any decree or order of a Special Judge second grade lay to the District Judge under s. 45. Under s. 46, the order of the Appellate Court was final. It was held by a Full Bench in Ali Mohammad v. Khwaja Khalil Ahmad, (1940 O. A., 463) (1), that the finality given to appellate orders in s. 46, could not be challenged by appeal or revision. The revision was therefore, incompetent.

Under the amendment, a second appeal has been provided from an appellate decree or order of the District Judge on certain grounds. I have been asked by the learned Counsel for the applicant to treat this revision as a second appeal. It was held in the Full Bench case above referred to that the Amended Act XI of 1939 had no retrospective effect. The learned Counsel for the applicant says that this revision was filed after the Act had come into force and so the application for revision can be treated as a second appeal. The decree of the Appellate Court was passed before Act XI of 1939 came into force and the opposite party acquired certain rights under it. As remarked in the Full Bench case, the advantage gained by a party cannot be taken away by the provision of a second appeal after September 30, 1939. I think a second appeal can lie only in respect of appellate orders or decrees passed after the Amending Act came into force and not to those passed before it.

I, therefore, hold that no revision lay and I cannot treat the revision as a second appeal. The application is rejected with costs.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Self-acquired property—Person by will giving absolute estate to wife—Son adopted by widow on death of husband and property devised to him by will—Property in hands of adopted son is self-acquired.

A person made a will by which he conferred the absolute estate in the property on his widow. On the death of the testator his widow adopted a son under the authority given to her by her husband and made a will devising the property to her adopted son :

Held, that the absolute estate given to the widow would not be avoided by the adoption. The property was self-acquired in the hands of the widow. It was also the self-acquired property in the hands of the adopted son as he got it under the will of his adoptive mother.

F. A. from the decree of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Lahore, dated January 24, 1939.

Messrs. Feroze-ud-Din Ahmad and Mela Ram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. C. Mahajan and Duni Chand Kapur, for the Respondents.

Dalip Singh, J.—In this case the plaintiff sued for a declaration alleging that certain property attached in execution of a decree against his father, one Parshotam Das, could not be attached and sold in execution of that decree because the property was ancestral qua him and the debts for which the property was being sold were tainted with immorality and illegality. The trial Court held that these allegations were not proved, that the property was not ancestral and that the debts were not proved to be either illegal or immoral and therefore dismissed the suit. It is unnecessary in appeal to go into the second question because it appers to me that the question is really concluded by the decision on the first question. It is obvious that if the property is not ancestral qua the present plaintiff he has during the life time of his father no right therein and therefore his suit must fail. It is common ground that the property belonged to the maternal grandfather of the debtor, one Natha Singh, that he made a will dated December 19, 1883, (at p. 57 of the printed paper-book) by which he conferred the absolute estate in the property in dispute on his widow. Next, by a deed dated April 8, 1898 (at p. 59) the same testator, Natha Singh gave authority to his widow to adopt a son after his own demise. He added that the will of December 19, 1883, remained good, in other words, that the absolute devise to the widow would not be avoided by the adoption. Subsequently, it appears from a registered award dated May 17, 1914, that the widow devised the property to her grandson whom she had adopted under the deed dated April 8, 1898.

The trial Court has held, on these facts, that the property was self-acquired in the hands of the widow as it came to her by will from her husband. Similarly, the property was self-acquired in the hands of Parshotam Das, the original debtor in this case, as it came to him by will from his adoptive mother the widow of Natha Singh. It is contended, on the basis of the opinion of a Single Judge in Sukhdev Doss Ramprashad v. Chotibai (1), that the case of a widow stands on a different footing to other devisees. It is conceded that in the case of a devise made before the adoption and where the adoption takes place after the death of the testator property devised to the legatees would not be affected by the subsequent adoption, but it is contended that the case of a widow is different and as she herself creates the situation by which an adopted son comes into being, any estate or property bestowed on her by the will must be taken to have vested in the adopted son and to have been divested from the widow. There does not appear apart from the opinion of the Single Judge in Sukhdev Doss Ramprashad v. Chotilbai (1) an other authority for this proposition. On the other hand in Krishnamurthi Ayyar v. Krishnamurthi Ayyar (2) at p. 525 their Lordships of the Privy Counsil examined the question in principle and they state as follows :

"When a disposition is made intra vivos by one who has full power over property under which a portion of that property is carrid away, it is clear that no rights of a son who is subsequenty adopted can affect that portion which is disposed of. The same is true when the disposition is by will and the adoption is subsequently made by a widow who has been given power to adopt. For the will speaks as at the death of the testator, and the property is carried away before the adoption takes place."

As I read this judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council it would seem that their Lordships based their decision not on the ground that it would be inequitable to deprive devisees of property left by a will or on the ground that the devisees had taken no action subsequently which deprived them of the property but on the short ground that the property having already passed out of the testators's possession any subsequent adoption by the widow would not affect such donees or devisees. I see no reason therefore why a widow devisee should be an exceptional case for the reasoning that the property has been carried away applies equally to her as to other devisees. I would therefore hold that the trial Court was right in holding that this property was not ancestral qua Parshotam Das and was his self-acquired property. His son, therefore, had no right in the property and therefore had no right to maintain the present suit. The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The words in the deed of gift duly executed and registered that the donor had put the donee in possession and occupation of the land gifted from the date of its execution, show the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in præsenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee. Where it is also stated in the deed that the donor stipulated and reduced it to writing that he had no concern of any sort left in the land gifted and that all the rights which he had would hereafter be enjoyed by the donee the gift is not invalid merely for the reason that possession was not delivered. Where a Muhammadan executes a deed of gift of immoveable property in favour of his wife which declares that he had delivered possession over it to her as absolute owner and the deed is handed to and retained by her the gift is valid though the donee has not obtained actual possession until after her husband's death. 136 Ind Cas. 385 (2), relied on. [p. 163, col. 1.]

Where there is evidence that the woman gave her consent to the marriage and that the man agreed to the dower, this was sufficient proposal and acceptance. The Muhammadan Law does not prescribe that the proposal and acceptance should be made in any particular form. Moreover, after the lapse of a long time, all the formalities required should be presumed to have been complied with. [p. 164, col. 2; p. 165, col 1.]

An acknowledgment by a man that a certain woman is his wife, is sufficient in the eyes of the Muhammadan Law to invest the woman with the status of a married wife and the subsequent born children with the status of legitimacy, unless the marriage is shown to have been legally impossible. By reason of the acknowledgment a presumption in favour of the marriage is raised. If direct evidence of marriage is adduced and the Court disbelieved it, the effect of presumption arising from the acknowlengment is not lost and the failure does not absolve the opposite party from disproving or proving the impossibility of marriage and thereby rebutting the presumption. 60 Ind. Cas. 147 (3), and 125 Ind. Cas. 311 (4), relied on. [p. 165, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a woman has described herself in deeds executed by her as the wife of one G when there was no dispute about her marriage with G, the statements made by her in such deeds are admissible and can be proved by her in a subsequent dispute wherein her marriage with G is questioned as she had special means of knowledge about her marriage with G.

Under s. 68, Evi. Act what is necessary is that an attesting witness if available should be called in evidence. If he is not able to prove the document there is no bar to its being proved by other evidence. [p. 164, cols. 1 & 2.]

F. C. A. against the decree of the Civil

Judge of Bahraich, dated January 30, 1937.

Mr. S. Mohammad Hafeez, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Ali Hasan, for Respondents Nos. 1 to 3.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Mst. Bashiran, for possession over certain plots of land measuring 30.49 acres and other reliefs. Her case is that she was married to one Ghulam Mohammad in the year 1907 and that he made a gift of these plots in her favour on February 20, 1935. Ghulam Mohammad died in the month of July 1935 and after his death she was dispossessed from the plots by the defendants in the month of August 1935 though she had obtained possession under the deed of gift. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are the heirs of her husband's brother, Tassaduq Husain. She stated that the plots were under-proprietary muafi free of rent and if she is not held to be an under-proprietor, she was entitled to possession as the sole heir of Ghulam Mohammad and that in any case she was entitled to one-fourth as her legal share and a decree for the remaining three-fourths on the ground that she was entitled to possession over it as her dower amounting to Rs. 2,100 remained unpaid. She also claimed Rs. 250 on account of mesne profits.

The suit was contested by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 the sons of Tassaduq Husain, brother of Ghulam Muhammad. They stated that the plaintiff was not married to Ghulam Muhammad and the connection between Ghulam Muhammad and the plaintiff was illegal. They also pleaded that Ghulam Muhammad remained ill from the beginning of 1935 and the deed of gift if executed in favour of the plaintiff was invalid as Ghulam Muhammad at the date of its execution was suffering from marz-ul-maut and was under the influence of the plaintiff and her well-wishers and that the land in question was not transferable and so the plaintiff could acquire no rights.

The learned Civil Judge held that the plaintiff's marriage with Ghulam Muhammad was not proved, that Ghulam Muhammad did execute the deed of gift in favour of the plaintiff but as it was not followed by delivery of possession, it was invalid. He further held that it was not proved that when the deed of gift was executed Ghulam Muhammad was suffering from marz-ul-maut. The plea of the defendants that the plaintiff got it executed through undue influence was held not proved and the land was held to be transferable. As a result of his findings he dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff has contended in appeal that her marriage was proved and the gift was valid.

The findings on the issues decided by the lower Court in favour of the plaintiff have not been challenged before us. We have therefore to determine two points, (1) whether the deed of gift was valid and (2) whether the plaintiff was married to Ghulam Muhammad.

The deed of gift (Ex. 1) dated February 20, 1935 is a registered document which has been held by the lower Court to be duly executed. It has also been held that the donor was not suffering from marz-ul-maut when he executed it, and that it was not obtained through undue influence. It is said that as possession was not delivered under it, it was not valid. Ordinarily a gift by a Muhammadan must be accompanied by delivery of possession of the property gifted. It is stated in this document that the donor made the gift in favour of his wife Bashiran in lieu of her dower debt. We shall discuss later on whether the plaintiff was the married wife of Ghulam Muhammad and whether any dower was due to her. We assume for the present that the plaintiff was married to Ghulam Muhammad and her dower was due from him. If this is so it was not a pure gift but was a hiba-bil-ewaz. In the case of Chaudhri Mehdi Hasan v. Muhammad Hasan (L. R. 33 I. A. 68) (1) it was held by the Privy Council that under Muhammadan Law the holder of property may alienate it by a deed of gift accompanied by delivery of the thing given so far as it is capable of delivery or by a deed of gift coupled with consideration in which case although delivery of possession is unnecessary, yet actual payment of consideration must be proved and also a bona fide intention on the part of the donor to divest himself in præsenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee. The other authorities on the point are Baillie's Muhammadan Law and Mulla's Muhammadan Law. The relevant portion in Baillie's Muhammadan Law at p. 123 is :—

"The transaction which goes by the name of hiba-bil-ewaz in India is therefore in reality not a proper hiba-bil-ewaz but a sale and has all the incidents of the latter contract. Accordingly possession is not required to complete the transfer of it though absolutely necessary in gift."

Mulla is also of the same opinion (vide para. 141, 11th edition). The words in the deed of gift that the donor had put the donee in possession and occupation of the land gifted from the date of its execution show the bona fide intention of the donor to divest himself in præsenti of the property and to confer it upon the donee. It is also stated in the deed that the donor stipulated and reduced it to writing that he had no concern of any sort left in the land gifted and that all the rights which he had would hereafter be enjoyed by the donee. We think that the gift is not invalid for the reason that possession was not delivered.

There is also the evidence of the plaintiff that three days after the execution of the deed (when it was probably returned from the Registrar's Office) the document was handed over to her. We see no reason to disbelieve this statement of the plaintiff. In the case of Mohammad Sadiq Ali Khan v. Fakhr Jahan Beyam (L. R. 59 I. A., 1) (2) it was held that where a Muhammadan executed a deed of gift of immoveable property in favour of his wife which declared that he had delivered possession over it to her as absolute owner and the deed was handed to and retained by her but there was no mutation of names, the gift was valid though the donee had not obtained actual possession until after her husband's death.

Reliance was placed on a statement made by the plaintiff on August 10, 1935, after her husband's death which took place in July 1935. She stated that the muafi land which was in the name of Ghulam Muhammad who died fifteen days before, be entered in her name in the patwari's papers as she was the heiress. It is argued that she claimed the property on the ground of her being an heiress and not under the gift. We think that it was merely due to ignorance that the plaintiff claimed mutation on the ground of her being an heiress, and that there was no reason for the donor to keep the plaintiff ignorant of the deed of gift.

(2) 59 I A 1; 136 Ind. Cas. 385; 8 O W N 1378; A I R 1932 P C 13, 36 C W N 137; 62 M L J 320; Ind. Rul. (1932) P C 81; 6 Luck 556; (1932) A L J 663 (P C).

The respondents have produced some pattas and qabuliyats to prove their possession but they are all of August 1935, after Ghulam Muhammad had died. They also produced the village patwari to prove that the plaintiff was never in possession of these plots but it is not necessary for the plaintiff to have obtained actual possession. There was sufficient delivery of possession to make the gift valid.

Now we have to consider whether any dower of the donee, the plaintiff, was outstanding against the husband, the donor. For this we shall first have to consider whether there was any valid marriage between the plaintiff and Ghulam Muhammad.

The plaintiff has produced documentary and oral evidence to prove the factum of marriage. P. W. No. 20 Muhammad Abid Ali produced a register of marriages which shows that the plaintiff was married to Ghulam Muhammad on November 28, 1907. He stated in examination-in-chief that he had entered the details of the marriage in the register but in cross-examination he stated that the entry in question was in the handwriting of his son. He was sixty years old in 1936 and so at the time of the marriage he must have been about 31 years old. His son at that time could not have been sufficiently old to make an entry in the register. The plaintiff's other witness P. W. No. 21 Irshad Ali Khan stated that the son of this witness who is said to have made this entry is thirty years old now. If this is so, he was only a baby in arms at that time. The entry does not show that it is in the handwriting of a boy. The entries in the register do not appear to have been made from day to day but it appears that they have been copied from some other book. The witness Abid Ali admits that he would not have been able to depose about the plaintiff's marriage if the registers had not been before him. We think that the evidence of this witness and the register are not worthy of reliance. But there is other evidence on this point. Mumtaz P. W. No. 11 states that he learnt from his mother, Tassaduq Husain and Ghulam Muhammad that the plaintiff was the wife of Ghulam Muhammad. Irshad Ali Khan P. W. No. 21 states that the marriage was performed in his presence, that he was a witness to the nikah and that the dower fixed was Rs. 2,100. Mohammad Baksh P. W. No. 22 Ghulam Nabi P. W. No. 23 and the plaintiff herself state the same. The plaintiff executed two sale-deeds one on December 17, 1908 and the other on December 18, 1908 (Exs. P. W. No. 2-30 ought to be P. W. No. 1-30 and P. W. No. 2-31) and in both of them she described herself as the wife of Ghulam Muhammad. The lower Court has refused to rely on these documents on the ground that they are admissions of the plaintiff herself. Under s. 21, cl. (1) of the Indian Evi. Act an admission may be proved by or on behalf of the person making it when it is of such a nature that if the person making it were dead it would be relevant as between third parties under s. 32. Under s. 32 a statement relating to the existence of any relationship by blood, marriage or adoption between the persons as to whose relationship the person making the statement had special means of knowledge and when the statement was made before the question in dispute was raised, is relevant. The plaintiff had special means of knowledge about her marriage with Ghulam Muhammad and therefore her statement is admissible and can be proved by her. There is nothing to show that there was any dispute about the plaintiff's marriage with Ghulam Muhammad in 1908.

The next document relied on behalf of the plaintiff is a copy of a mortgage-deed dated September 21, 1915 (Ex. 27). This document was executed by Ghulam Muhammad, his brother Tassaduq Husain, father of the respondents Nos. 1 to 3 Mst. Jengala wife of Tassaduq Husain and the plaintiff herself. Almost double of the property now in question was mortgaged under that deed. The plaintiff was described in the deed as the wife of Ghulam Muhammad. One of the defendants Nazir had identified Mst. Bashiran, plaintiff at the time of registration. The lower Court's objection is that this document has not been duly proved. The document purports to be witnessed by Ambika Prasad and Sant Baksh and to have been scribed by Suraj Prasad. Ambika Prasad was produced and he stated that he did not recollect anything about the deed. Sant Baksh and Suraj Prasad are dead. The plaintiff produced the mortgagee Mahabir Prasad P. W. No. 16 Ghulam Nabi, P. W. No. 23 and herself to prove it. The learned Civil Judge appears to be of the opinion that a mortgage-deed can be proved only by an attesting witness. Under s. 68 what is necessary is that an attesting witness if available should be called in evidence. If he is not able to prove the document there is no bar to its being proved by other evidence. The document has been proved by the evidence of the plaintiff, Ghulam Nabi and Mahabir Prasad. There is also a proviso to s. 68 of the Indian Evi. Act that it is not necessary to produce an attesting witness when the document is not a will and is registered unless its execution is specifically denied by the executors. This was not done in this case. We therefore think that this document was duly proved. It goes a long way to prove the plaintiff's case. The plaintiff was described in this document as the wife of Ghulam Muhammad and the document was also executed by Ghulam Muhammad himself and his brother Tassaduq Husain father of the respondents Nos. 1 to 3. This document goes to show that Ghulam Muhammad acknowledged the plaintiff as his wife and she consented to it. In the deed of gift also Ghulam Muhammad stated that the donee was his wife whom he married approximately 22 years ago. It is argued that according to the evidence produced by the plaintiff, the marriage took place in 1907 but according to the deed of gift it would be somewhere about the year 1913. We think that Ghulam Muhammad had no correct idea of the date of his marriage with the plaintiff and hence the mistake. The learned Civil Judge has criticised the evidence of the plaintiff's witnesses on the ground that there are certain contradictions in their statements and they have deposed about the details of the plaintiff's marriage and not of others. Contradictions after a lapse of about thirty years are natural. Considering the documentary evidence above discussed, we think there is no reason to disbelieve the plaintiff's witnesses on whom we have relied.

The learned Civil Judge has also remarked that it was not proved that there was a proposal on behalf of one party to the marriage and acceptance on behalf of the other. Irshad Ali Khan P. W. No. 21 has stated that the plaintiff gave her consent to the marriage and Muhammad Baksh P. W. No. 22 has stated that Ghulam Muhammad agreed to the dower. We think this was sufficient proposal and acceptance. The Muhammadan Law does not prescribe that the proposal and acceptance should be made in any particular form. Moreover, under the circumstances of the case and after the lapse of such a long time all the formalities required should be presumed to have been complied with. More than two male persons were present at the time of the marriage and so the objection of the learned Civil Judge on that ground has no force.

The learned Civil Judge has also remarked that Ghulam Muhammad was the tabalchi of the plaintiff and so it seemed improbable that he married her. We do not think there is anything improbable in it. It is also said that Ghulam Muhammad had another wife. But there was nothing to bar him from taking a second wife. We think that the evidence on the record proves the marriage. Besides this the mortgage-deed (Ex. 27) and the deed of gift (Ex. 1) contain acknowledgments by Ghulam Muhammad that the plaintiff was his wife. Under the Muhammadan Law acknowledgment of a man is valid with regard to five persons, his father, mother child, wife and mowla (vide Baillie's Muhammadan Law, p. 407) and Amir Ali's Muhammadan Law, Vol. 2, p. 230. In the case of Muhammad Ali Khan v. Ghazanfar Ali Khan, (60 Ind. Cas. 147) (3), it was held that though an acknowledgment may be open to the objection that it might have been made from ulterior motives, to conceal what might otherwise have been a result of shame it is sufficient in the eyes of the Muhammadan Law to invest the woman with the status of a married wife and the subsequent born children with the status of legitimacy, unless the marriage is shown to have been legally impossible. There is nothing in this case to show that there could not be a legal marriage between the plaintiff and Ghulam Muhammad. By reason of these acknowlegdments a presumption in favour of the marriage is raised. The learned Civil Judge has held that the presumption is a weak one because the evidence to prove the marriage is not satisfactory we hold that there is satisfactory evidence to prove the marriage and if there is any presumption at all by reason of the acknowledgment, the burden of proof is shifted to the other side. The evidence on behalf of the respondents on these points consists of the statement of Mohammad Zahir respondent, Shabrati D. W. No. 11, Maqbool Ahmad, D. W. No. 9, Ashraf Ali D. W. No. 7 and Chammi Khan, D. W. No. 5. Mohammad Zahir states that Ghulam Muhammad never married the plaintiff. He is an interested witness. Shabrati states that Ghulam Muhammad was not married to the plaintiff but she had illicit connection with him and that he asked Ghulam Muhammad either to leave the plaintiff or to marry her but he refused to marry her. He admits that Ghulam Muhammad contracted illicit connection with the plaintiff about twenty years ago. Maqbool Ahmad also states that he asked Ghulam Muhammad to marry the plaintiff but he refused. Ashraf Ali states that Ghulam Muhammad had illegal connection with the plaintiff and that Tassaduq Husain had told him that Ghulam Muhammad had not married her Chammi Khan states that Ghulam Muhammad told him that he would not marry the plaintiff but would keep her as his mistress. It appears from the evidence of these witnesses that there was connection between Ghulam Muhammad and the plaintiff but we think that their evidence is not sufficient to rebut the presumption raised by reason of the acknowledgment. The learned Civil Judge did not rely on the presumption raised by their long co-habitation as husband and wife on the ground that the plaintiff was a prostitute but he has given no reason for not relying on the presumption raised by reason of the acknowledgment made by the husband. It was held in Ahasanulla v. Nejabatali, (A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 682) (4), that if direct evidence of marriage is adduced and the Court disbelieved it, the effect of presumption arising from the acknowledgment is not lost and the failure does not absolve the opposite party from disproving or proving the impossibility of marriage and thereby rebutting the presumption.

After considering all the evidence we are of opinion that the marriage of the plaintiff with Ghulam Muhammad is proved. It is also proved that the dower was fixed at Rs. 2,100. There is nothing to show that the dower was ever paid and so it was outstanding when the deed of gift in favour of the plaintiff was executed.

The result of our findings is that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for possession of the entire property and to mesne profits from August 1935 when she was dispossessed till the date she gets possession. The appeal is allowed and the plaintiff will get her costs in both Courts on the relief for possession. She will be entitled to have a final decree for mesne profits under O. XX, r. 12, Civil P. C.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XVI, r. 1—(Lahore amendment)—Court has discretion to allow examination of witness even if he is not mentioned in the list.

Rule 1 of O. XVI, Civil P. C., is a technical one and in the absence of any prejudice to either party the Court is not justified in refusing to examine the witnesses on the ground that they were not mentioned in the list. The rule gives the Court discretion to allow witnesses to be examined even if they are not mentioned in the list if it is satisfied that there are sufficient reasons for doing so.

F. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Sargodha, dated February 2, 1939.

Dr. Shuja-ud-din, Messrs. Kundan Lal and Aslam Khan, for the Appellant.

Messrs. M. C. Mahajan, R. C. Soni and Farrukh Hussain, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 3, respectively.

Bhide, J.—The plaintiff sued in this case to challenge an alienation of ancestral land made by his father Qadar Baksh in favour of the firms Thakar Das-Ram Lal and Jiwan Das-Ram Singh for a sum of Rs. 15,900. The suit was resisted by the alienees on the grounds that the land was not ancestral, that the members of the Nangiana tribe to which the plaintiff belongs had unrestricted power of alienation and lastly that the alienation was made for consideration and necessity. The suit has been dismissed by the trial Court and from this decision the plaintiff has preferred the present appeal. One of the grounds of appeal was that the plaintiff was not allowed to lead all the evidence that he desired to produce. In support of this ground an affidavit has now been filed by the plaintiff showing the number of witnesses whom he wanted to produce and who were disallowed by the trial Court. The facts bearing on this question appear to be as follows: Issues were framed on June 15, 1938, and the parties were directed to produce their evidence on October 7, 1938. The plaintiff produced some witnesses on the issue relating to the question of the ancestral character of the property of which the onus lay on him and reserved his right of rebuttal on November 21, 1938. The defendant's witnesses were then examined and thereafter the plaintiff produced three witnesses in rebuttal on December 15, 1938. He wanted to examine some more witnesses on that date but these witnesses were not mentioned in the list which had been filed by him in compliance with the provisions of O. XVI, r. 1, Civil P. C., as amended by this Court. The learned Judge therefore, refused to allow these witnesses to be examined although they were apparently present in Court.

The learned Counsel for the appellant has urged that the refusal of the learned Judge of the trial Court to allow these witnesses (the number of the witnesses is stated to be seventeen) has prejudiced the trial of the case and therefore the case ought to be remanded for a re-decision after examination of these witnesses. The learned Counsel for the respondents, on the other hand, contends that as these witnesses were not mentioned in the list put in by the plaintiff before the commencement of the hearing of his evidence on October 7, 1938 the plaintiff was not entitled to examine these witnesses and the order of the learned Judge was correct. Rule 1 of O. XVI, Civil P. C. as amended by this Court, runs as follows:

"At any time after the suit is instituted, the parties may obtain, on application to the Court or to such officer as it appoints in this behalf, summonses to persons whose attendance is required either to give evidence or to produce documents:

Provided that no party who has begun to call his witnesses shall be entitled to obtain process to enforce the attendance of any witness against whom process has not previously issued, or to produce any witness not named in a list, which must be filed in Court on or before the date on which, the hearing of evidence on his behalf commences and before the actual commencement of the hearing of such evidence, without an order of the Court made in writing and stating the reasons therefor."

The language of the proviso which has been added by this Court seems to be rather involved; but, as I understand, the Rule requires each party to put in a list of his witnesses on the date on which the hearing of his evidence commences and before he begins to examine his witnesses. In the present case there is no doubt that the examination of the witnesses of the plaintiff commenced on October 7, 1938, and the plaintiff rightly put in a list of witnesses on that date before the hearing. He did not state at the time that he intended to put in any further list of witnesses to be produced in rebutal, nor did he make any such statement at the time when he closed his evidence on issue No. 1 and reserved his right of rebuttal: vide proceedings of November 21, 1938. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that he was entitled to put in a fresh list when he produced his evidence in rebuttal but the provisions of r. 1 of O. XVI, do not appear to me to confer any such right on him. However, as the language of the Rule is not perhaps as clear as it might have been, and the appellant may have misunderstood his position, the learned Judge should have, in my opinion, allowed the plaintiff an opportunity to produce his witnesses especially as they were in attendance and no adjournment was asked for.

It is not alleged that the production of these witnesses at this stage would have prejudiced the defendants in any way. The Rule is a technical one and in the absence of any prejudice to either party I do not think the learned Judge was justified in refusing to examine the witnesses. The property in dispute was of large value and an important question of custom was also involved. The Rule gives the Court discretion to allow witnesses to be examined even if they are not mentioned in the list if it is satisfied that there are sufficient reasons for doing so. The learned Judge has however not considered the matter from this standpoint at all and seems to have applied the rule mechanically. The decision of the learned Judge of the trial Court proceeds on incomplete evidence. The decree passed by him cannot in the circumstances be allowed to stand. I would accept the appeal and setting aside that decree remand the case for re-decision after taking down the evidence of the witnesses mentioned by the plaintiff in the list accompanying his affidavit in this Court. The costs will follow final decision. The parties are directed to appear before the trial Court on May 1, 1940.

Din Mohammad, J.—I agree.

Arbitration Act (IX of 1899), s. 19—Proceeding within the meaning of s. 19, when commences—Defendant supplied with copy of plaint—Grant of time by Court for filing written statement, whether step taken by defendant in proceedings.

Having regard to the provisions of O. V, r. 2, Civil P. C., the proceedings cannot be said to have commenced within the meaning of s. 19, Arbitration Act until the defendant has been supplied with a copy of the plaint. The fixing of time by the Court for filing a written statement when the defendant has been supplied with a copy of the plaint cannot, in any sense, be regarded as a step taken by the defendant in the proceedings inasmuch as time for filing written statement is necessarily given by the Court. 81 Ind. Cas. 846 (1), distinguished.

C. R. from the order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Amritsar, dated April 30, 1940.

Mr. Girdhari Lal Malhotra, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Sant Singh, for the Respondent.

Order.—The facts of the present case are simple. A suit was brought against the defendant in the Small Cause Court at Amritsar. By some mistake no copy of the plaint was attached to the summons as required by O. V, r. 2, Civil P. C. The defendant appeared on the date fixed and brought the defect to the notice of the Court. He was supplied with a copy of the plaint. The case was adjourned in order to give him time to prepare a written statement. On the date fixed for the submission of the written statement the defendant applied for stay of proceedings under s. 19, Arbitration Act, 1899.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has rejected the application on the ground that the grant of the adjournment meant that the defendant had taken a step in the proceedings. In coming to this decision he relied on Karnani Industrial Bank Ltd v. Satya Niranjan (1). The facts of that case were slightly different. The defendant in that case had received full notice of the suit and only asked for a further adjournment after the time for putting in a written statement had expired. Since the provisions of the Civil P. C. require that a copy of the plaint should be attached to the summons, as it may obviously be impossible for a defendant to know what the case is about until this is done. The proceedings cannot be said to have commenced until the defendant has been supplied with a copy of the plaint and if time is then fixed for the preparation of the written statement, the time for this purpose is necessarily given by the Court and I do not think that it can be regarded in any sense as a step taken in the proceedings by the defendant. It is quite a different matter if, when he has had time to prepare a written statement, he then asks for a further adjournment for his own convenience. For the reasons given above, I think that the Court acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction by refusing to stay the proceedings under s. 19, Arbitration Act. The petition for revision is accepted and the proceedings are returned to the Small Cause Court with a direction that the proceedings be stayed as requested by the defendant. The costs of the hearing of this petition will be borne by the plaintiff.

Adverse possession—Minor—Possession against, when becomes adverse—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 44, s. 28—Art. 44, scope of—Ward's failure to sue within time prescribed by Art. 44—Effect—Whether extinguishes right to property under s. 28—Manager loosely described as de facto guardian is no guardian at all—Applicability of Art. 44—Minor—Voidable transaction—Repudiation by minor—Whether should institute suit—Failure to sue within three years of his majority—Whether ipso facto perfects title of person claiming under voidable transaction.

Possession against minor does not become adverse until he attains majority.

Article 44, Lim. Act has nothing whatever to do with suits for possession. The only thing which becomes barred at the expiry of time prescribed by Art. 44, is the ward's right to set aside a transfer. The failure to sue within the time prescribed does not extinguish the right to the property under the provisions of s. 28 of the Act.

Article 44 refers to the relationship of guardian and ward. A manager, loosely, described as a de facto guardian, is not a guardian at all. The article applies only if the transfer is binding unless it is set aside by a suit.

A transaction which is voidable at the instance of the minor may be repudiated by any act or omission of the late minor, by which he intends to communicate the repudiation, or which has the effect of repudiating it. It is not necessary that he should bring a suit. Hence the minor's failure to institute a suit within three years of his majority does not ipso facto perfect the title of the person claiming under the voidable transaction. 70 Ind. Cas. 990 (1), distinguished.

Judgment.—This appeal has arisen in connection with a dispute to four annas share in a certain tank. Eight annas of this tank originally belonged to one Durga Charan which was inherited by his sons Khagendra and Jogendra, pro forma defendants Nos. 6 and 7. Khagendra sold it to the plaintiffs' father during the minority of Jogendra. Subsequently, Jogendra sold it to the appellants after attaining his majority. The question in dispute therefore is which of these sales is to prevail. The Munsif dismissed the plaintiffs' claim on the ground that Khagendra was not the guardian of Jogendra. The Subordinate Judge reversed this finding holding that Khagendra was the de facto guardian. He allowed the plaintiffs' claim on two grounds: (1) that Jogendra's title was extinguished by adverse possession and (2) that the sale was for legal necessity.

These findings have been challenged here, firstly, because no such cause was made in the pleadings and secondly because there is no evidence upon which they can be supported. It is quite true that neither of these cases was made in the plaint and no issues were framed to deal with them. It was asserted in the written statement that there was no legal necessity for the transfer. The plaintiffs should therefore have raised an issue if they wished to press it. Inasmuch as I am going to allow the appellants to call evidence on another matter I shall allow the plaintiff to call evidence on this question. Then in the second place the evidence is quite insufficient to justify either finding. This of course is not unnatural in view of the fact that no issues were framed. Furthermore the possession of the plaintiffs could not be adverse to Jogendra until he attained his majority. There is a finding of fact that he attained his majority in 1926. Accordingly twelve years had not elapsed when the suit was filed and the appellants had entered into possession at a still earlier date. The result is that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court as it stands cannot be supported.

Mr. Rakshit, however, attempted to support the decree on another ground which was overruled by the Munsif and not decided by the Subordinate Judge. His contention is that the plaintiffs' title was perfected by the failure of Jogendra to take proceedings within three years of his majority in view of Art. 44, Lim. Act. Article 44 prescribes the period of limitation of suits by a ward who has attained majority to set aside a transfer of property by his guardian. The first argument advanced is that after this period of three years has elapsed Jogendra's title would be extinguished under the provisions of s. 28. Section 28 provides for the extinguishment of a right to property at the termination of the period limited for instituting suits for possession. Article 44 has nothing whatever to do with suits for possession. The only thing which will become barred at the expiry of that time would be Jogendra's right to set aside a transfer. I am aware that it is sometimes said that when a person is bound to set aside a document before he can obtain possession, the failure to sue within the time prescribed will extinguish the right to the property under the provisions of this section. I am bound to say that this appears to me to be due to some confusion of thought. A suit by the appellants after their purchase to recover possession would not have been barred by limitation. A suit by their vendor to set aside the transfer was already barred before their purchase. In such circumstances the appellants' suit would fail not because their right was extinguished under s. 28 but because their conveyance was defeated by an earlier conveyance which could no longer be impugned. It is really only after the lapse of 12 years from Jogendra's attainment of majority that this section would come into play at all. Then in the second place Art. 44 has no application either. This article refers to the relationship of guardian and ward. A manager, loosely, described as a de facto guardian, is not a guardian at all. Further the article would only apply if the transfer was binding unless it was set aside by a suit.

This brings in the second argument to the effect that altogether apart from s. 28 the failure of Jogendra to institute a suit within three years of his majority ipso facto perfected the title of the plaintiffs. This argument would be unanswerable if a suit is the only method of repudiating a transaction. In this connection Mr Rakshit very fairly drew my attention to Trevelyan's Law relating to Minors. At p. 202 the learned author says this :

"A transaction which is voidable at the instance of the minor may be repudiated by any act or omission of the late minor, by which he intends to communicate the repudiation, or which has the effect of repudiating it.....It is not necesary that he should bring a suit....."

Reliance was however placed on the decision in Dwijendra Mohan v. Monorama Dassi (1). In that case however the learned Judges were dealing with quite a different question. They were not considering a repudiation by the late minor. They were considering the effect of s. 30, Guardians and Wards Act. Consequently it throws no light upon the present question.

Finally Mr. Rakshit pointed out that the appellants could not succeed unless there is a finding that Jogendra did repudiate the former sale. No issue was raised on this question and there is no evidence. The conveyance in favour of the appellants does not refer to the former transaction at all. It may be that Jogendra had never heard of it and unless he knew of it, he could not repudiate it. The decree of the lower Appellate Court is accordingly set aside and the case is remanded for rehearing in accordance with these directions. The learned Judge will remit to the first Court the following two issues : (1) Was there legal necessity to justify the kobala by Khagendra in favour of the plaintiffs' father ? and (2) Did Jogendra after attaining majority repudiate this transaction ? Both sides will be at liberty to adduce evidence. The Munsif will then submit the evidence with his findings to the lower Appellate Court for final determination. If the former issue is answered in the affirmative the defendant's appeal will be dismissed. If it is answered in the negative the learned Judge will then proceed to come to a finding on issue No. 2. If this is answered in the affirmative the appeal in the Court below will be allowed, otherwise it will be dismissed. I make no order as to costs in this Court. Other costs

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476—Company Judge, if Court—Preliminary inquiry, if essential.

Company Judge conducting proceedings under s. 195, Companies Act is a "Court" within the meaning of s. 476, Criminal P. C.

Section 476, Criminal P. C., does not make a preliminary enquiry essential in law, and the proceeding under s. 476 without such enquiry would not be illegal. If the Court does not think it necessary, it may not order such an inquiry.

Cr. A. from the order of Mr. Justice Monroe, Liquidation Judge, Lahore, dated May 10, 1940.

Mr. Jowala Parshad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Nazir Ahmad, Special Official Receiver and R. L. Anand, for the Respondent.

Young, C. J.—This is an appeal from the order of Monroe, J., ordering the prosecution of K. S. Saadat Ali Khan and Mohammad Tahir under ss. 192, 193, 465, 471 and 477, I. P. C. Rai Bahadur Jowala Parshad appears for Mohammad Tahir and Khwaja Feroze-ud-Din appears for Khan Sahib Saadat Ali Khan. It appears that the Kanwal Movietone Co., Ltd., was ordered to be wound up by the Court. In proceedings under s. 195, Companies Act, evidence was led before the learned Company Judge that these two officers of the company had forged a resolution appearing in the minute book of the directors. The original resolution was to the effect that the managing agent, that is Mohammad Tahir, could accept advances from the share-holders only at 6 per cent. per annum. It is alleged that in order to support a claim for Rs. 20,000 on behalf of Mohammad Tahir's firm, namely the Soho House Ltd., the words "or their firms" were inserted in this resolution after the words "share-holder". In addition to the documents in the case there was before the learned company Judge the evidence of K. S. Saadat Ali Khan himself taken before the Official Liquidator of the Company to the effect that the resolution originally dealt only with 'share-holders' and not with 'their firms.' There was other evidence also and on this evidence the learned Company Judge thought fit to act under s 476, Criminal P. C.

In the grounds of appeal it is alleged that the learned Company Judge was not a Court within the meanin of s. 476. In our opinion there is no force in this ground and Counsel on behalf of Mohammad Tahir or K. S. Saadat Ali Khan has not pressed this ground of appeal. It was next argued that the learned Company Judge should have ordered a preliminary enquiry before making an order under s. 476. The terms of s. 476, however, are perfectly clear. The relevant words are "such Court may, after such preliminary inquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary." It is quite clear from the words of the section itself that the Court need not order a preliminary enquiry if it does not think it necessary to do so. Counsel for the appellants relied on the authority reported in Imam Ali v. Emperor (1) a decision by Sulaiman, J. in which he says an enquiry under the circumstances of that particular case might be desirable. There is no authority which lays down that a proper construction of this section makes an enquiry essential in law and that the proceeding under s. 476 without such enquiry would be illegal. In our opinion any such decision would be impossible in view of the clear wording of the section itself. We therefore find there is no force in this argument. Further, we do say in this case that we agree with the learned Company Judge that the material on which he ordered the prosecution was ample to establish a prima facie case and that we also agree with him that in the circumstances of this case a preliminary enquiry was not necessary.

As regards the case of Mohammad Tahir, therefore we find that the action of the learned Company Judge was entirely proper and justified and we dismiss his appeal. With regard to K. S. Saadat Ali Khan, it is argued by Counsel on his behalf that he had no interest whatever in the Soho House Ltd., or in their claim and that he was probably deceived into initialling this alteration by his relative Mohammad Tahir who was benefited by the alteration. Counsel asks that his client should appear before this Court and be allowed to explain his action in initialling this alteration. We are influenced by the fact that K. S. Saadat Ali Khan on the face of it obtained no benefit by this alteration. We therefore allow the prayer of his Counsel and give an opportunity to K. S Saadat Ali Khan to appear before this Court on Monday July 1, 1940 at 10, o'clock in the morning. His appeal is kept pending meanwhile. The proceedings against K. S. Saadat Ali Khan will in the meantime be stayed.

Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act (IV of 1938), s. 8 Explanation—Whether covers case in which debt due by A is discharged on debt due by B to same creditor being substituted for it.

Explanation to s. 8, Mad. Agri Relief Act was intended to cover the case of a debt by A in favour of X renewed by another debt by A in favour of X or included in a fresh document executed by A in favour of X for the original advance plus some further sum. It does not cover a case in which a debt due by A is discharged on a debt due by B to the same creditor being substituted for it. 186 Ind. Cas 722 (1), relied on, C. R. P. Wadsworth, J.—This revision petition raises the question of the meaning of the explanation to s. 8 of Mad. Act IV of 1938. Does the term "renewed or included in a fresh document" cover the case in which a debt due by A is dicharged on a debt due by B to the same creditor being substituted for it? The facts are that one Arunachala was indebted to the plaintiff under a promissory note Ex. E of the year 1918. That promissory note was discharged and in lieu of it on the same day (October 3, 1934) a promissory note Ex. D was executed by the defendant who is a distant relative of Arunachala. This has been renewed by a series of documents terminating the suit promissory note by defendant to the plaintiff dated August 19, 1936. There is a missing link in 1925, but the lower Court has found that the evidence is sufficient to prove that the missing promissory note of 1925 was part of the chain of renewals. It follows therefore that in scaling down the debt the defendant is at least entitled to go back to Ex. D of 1924. The lower Court has found that he is also entitled to go back to Ex. E of 1918 executed by his relative Arunachala and the plaintiff seeks to revise this order.

It was held by Somayya, J., in In re Ramaswami Chettiar (1), that when B takes over a debt due by A. the new document is not a renewal of A's debt nor is it an inclusion in a fresh document so as to bring in the explanation to s. 8. There is a very brief judgment of Stodart, J., in C. R. P. No. 1962 of 1939 where our learned brother held that in the case of a debt by A renewed by his legal representative B the explanation to s. 8 applies and that B's debt was a renewal of that of A. It is possible that different considerations may govern the case of two debts, one incurred by the legal representative of the debtor under the earlier debt. We are not however concerned with such a case here. The defendant was not the legal representative of Arunachala. The fact seems to be that by some private arrangement the debt due by the defendant was substituted for the debt due by his relative Arunachala. Can it be said in such circumstances that the defendant's debt is a renewal of the debt of Arunachala? We have no doubt that in ordinary parlance, when we speak of a renewal of a debt, we ordinarily mean the substitution of a fresh contract between the same parties for the same amount or the same amount plus accrued interest. That is the view taken by the Court of Appeal in Barber v. Mackrell (2) Lindley, L. J., says :

"A bill is renewed when another bill is taken in its place, the parties to the bill and the amount of it being the same, though perhaps in some cases the interest due on the one bill is added."

It seems to us clear that this is the sense in which the word 'renewed' is employed by the Legislature in the explanation to s. 8. It has been contended that though the defendant's debt may not be a renewal of the debt of Arunachala, it may be said to be an inclusion in a fresh document of Arunachala's debt and that the explanation can therefore be applied. We consider that this interpretation of the explanation to s. 8 involves violence to the language. Reading that explanation as a whole, we have no doubt that it was intended to cover the case of a debt by A in favour of X renewed by another debt by A in favour of X or included in a fresh document executed by A in favour of X for the original advance plus some further sum. This view is confirmed by reference to the later words of the explanation regarding the principal originally advanced with such sums, if any, as have been subsequently advanced and especially by reference to the final words 'principal sum repayable by the agriculturist.' Obviously, the Legislature was dealing with the same debtor throughout. We say nothing on the question whether when A dies and B inherits his liability and executes a new promissory note in substitution for that executed by A, the explanation would or would not apply.

(1) (1939) 2 M L J 609; 186 Ind. Cas. 722; A I R 1940 Mad. 53; (1939) M W N 990; 50 L W 523 ; 12 R M 667.

In the result therefore we hold that the defendant will be entitled in scaling down the debt to go back only to the promissory note Ex. D, dated October 3, 1924. There is one other point with respect to which the lower Court's order appears to be defective. No provision is made in the lower Court's order for the costs in the suit. This is not a case to which s. 18 (1) applies as the suit appears to have been filed before October 1, 1937. The omission to provide for the costs in the suit seems to have been due to inadvertance. This will be remedied by the trial Court if the petitioner's statement that the suit was filed before October 1, 1937, is found to be correct. The civil revision petition is therefore allowed with costs and the application is remitted to the trial Court for disposal in the light of this judgment.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 111, 116, 83—Sale and mortgage of lands by A in favour of B—Sale consideration left with B to be paid to A's creditor for debts due under mortgage and handnotes—Default by B—Handnotes paid by A—Same lands subsequently sold in execution of decree against A—Suit for possession and recovery of consideration—Suit held governed by Art. 111, read with Art. 116 and time-barred—Time held began to run when handnotes were paid by A—Mortgage—Mortgagee put into possession under registered sudbharna bond but no consideration paid—Suit by mortgagor after expiry of term of mortgage for possession—Suit should be treated as for redemption after taking accounts—Mortgagee is liable to account for income of property.

The plaintiffs owed some amount to R on two mortgages and two handnotes. They executed in favour of the defendants a sale deed and a sudbharna bond and the defendants were put in possession of the land thus sold and mortgaged to them. The consideration was left with the defendants for payment to R. Defendants failed to pay to R. Plaintiffs themselves paid off the handnotes on March 25, 1929, and R sued them on the mortgages and obtained a decree. Subsequently the plaintiffs executed a sale deed in favour of X in respect both of the lands which had been sold to the defendants and mortgaged to them. Subsequently the same lands were put up for sale in execution of a money decree against the plaintiffs and purchased by Y. The suit was instituted on September 24, 1935, to recover possession of the land covered by the sale deed and mortgage of the defendants and the consideration which the defendants had failed to pay:

Held, that the consideration for the sale deed in favour of the defendants could not be split up into two parts, namely, the amount payable on the handnotes and the amount payable on the mortgages of R. That as the mortgage debts had fallen due prior to the execution of the sale deed there was a breach on the part of the defendants to pay the consideration money for the sale deed when they declined to pay the debts on the handnote. As there was an express agreement to pay the consideration money and as this agreement was contained in a registered document the period of limitation was that provided by Art. 111 read with Art. 116, namely 6 years and the suit having been filed beyond such period the plaintiffs' claim to recover the unpaid consideration money for the sale deed was barred. Even if the suit was viewed as a suit on a contract of indemnity to which case Art 83 would apply, the suit was barred as the plaintiffs were damnified on March 25, 1929. [p. 174, cols. 1 & 2.]

[Case-law referred to]

The term "successive breaches" in Art. 115, Lim. Act refers only to cases in which there is a promise to pay periodically, as for instance, payment of rent, annuities, interest, maintenance, etc. [p. 174, col. 2; p. 175, col. 1.]

Where under a registered sudbharna bond the mortgagees were actually given possession but the consideration was never paid by the mortgagees, a suit brought by the mortgagor for possession, after the expiry of the term of the mortgage should be regarded, as a suit for redemption after taking of accounts. In such a suit the mortgagor would be entitled to possession on payment of the consideration and such other sums as might be due to him after taking of the accounts. In such a case as nothing is payable by the mortgagor on account of the principal, for the consideration was never paid by the mortgagee, the mortgagee is liable to account for the income of the property during the time he was in possession as mortgagee. [p. 175, col. 1]

As. from a decision of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Darbhanga, dated December 19, 1938, modifying a decision of the Munsif of Samastipur, dated June 19, 1937.

Mr. Rati Kanta Chaudhury, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Janak Kishore and Ramnandan Prasad, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These are two appeals by the defendants. The facts are as follows :— The plaintiffs 2nd party owed Rs. 495-9-6 to Puran Rai on two mortgages and two handnotes. Being pressed by their creditor to repay their debts they executed in favour of the defendants two documents in order to raise the necessary money on July 2, 1928. One was a sale deed for Rs. 300 and the other a sudbharna bond for Rs. 195-9-6. The defendants were put in possession of the land thus sold to them and of the land mortgaged to them. The consideration for the sale of the land and the mortgage was not paid to the plaintiffs 2nd party but left with the defendants for payment to Puran Rai. Defendants failed to pay to Puran Rai. Plaintiffs 2nd party themselves paid off the handnotes on March 25, 1929 and Puran Rai sued them on the mortgages and obtained a decree on February 7, 1934. On August 6, of the same year, in order to meet the costs of this litigation, the plaintiffs executed a sale deed in favour of the plaintiffs 1st party for a consideration of Rs. 700 in respect both of the lands which had been sold to the defendants and of the land which had been mortgaged to them in 1928. Subsequently the lands mortgaged in 1928 to the defendants were put up for sale in execution of a money decree against the plaintiffs 2nd party and purchased by plaintiffs 3rd party. The present suit was instituted on September 24, 1935. The plaintiffs sought to recover possession of the land covered by the sale deed and mortgage of 1928 and the consideration which the defendants had failed to pay.

The defence was that Puran Rai's handnotes had been paid off by the defendants and that the money due on Puran Rai's mortgages had been paid to the plaintiffs 2nd party at their request when they were in need of money for the expenses of a sradh ceremony. Neither of the Courts below has accepted either of these defences. So far as the lands sold to the defendants in 1928 are concerned the first Court held that as the title had passed to the defendants the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover them. So far as the lands mortgaged with the defendants in 1928 are concerned, the trial Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession and mesne profits. Against the decision of the trial Court two appeals were preferred. Plaintiffs appealed against the decree disallowing their claim to the recovery of the lands which were the subject matter of the sale deed and out of that appeal has arisen Second Appeal No. 575. The defendants appealed with regard to the lands which were the subject-matter of the mortgage and out of that appeal has arisen Second Appeal No. 576. It will be convenient to deal with these two appeals separately.

Second Appeal No. 575 of 1939.

The sale deed of 1928 provided that out of the consideration of Rs. 300, Rs. 185 was to be paid to Puran Rai in respect of the dues on a mortgage of July 6, 1924, Rs. 19-0-9 in respect of a mortgage of April 30, 1922 and Rs. 95-15-3 in respect of the dues on a handnote of Chaith 2, 1333 Fasli. The dues on the handnote were in fact paid not by the defendants but by the plaintiffs 2nd party on March 25, 1929. Puran Rai obtained a decree in the suit on his mortgages on February 7, 1934. The Appellate Court held that the plaintiffs' claim to recover the consideration was barred so far as the amount on Puran Rai's handnote was concerned but so far as the money due on Puran Rai's mortgages was concerned it was held that the suit was within time. The plaintiffs were, therefore, given a decree "for compensation for breach of the contract in regard to the mortgage bonds" with interest at 6% from July 2, 1928, till September 24, 1935, the date of the suit.

In second appeal it is contended on behalf of the defendants that the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the mortgage money of Puran Rai was also barred by limitation. The contention is that the consideration for the sale deed of 1928 was one and that there was a breach of the contract to pay Puran Rai as soon as the defendants repudiated their liability to pay his handnotes, or at the latest on March 25, 1929, when these handnotes were discharged by the plaintiffs 2nd party. For the respondents, however, it was contended that the handnotes were payable on demand and that in view of the defence raised there could be no finding of the Courts below that there ever was a demand for the payment of the dues on Puran Rai's handnote. The Appellate Court, however, has accepted the evidence given by the prosecution witness No. 1, who was one of the plaintiffs 2nd party, describing how he asked defendant No. 1 to pay the demands of Puran Rai on the handnote and how the latter put off the matter until the plaintiffs were forced to raise the money elsewhere and to pay Puran Rai. The Appellate Court observed that this evidence was amply corroborated by the evidence of Puran Rai himself and other witnesses. In this view of the matter it must be held that on or before March 25, 1929, there had been a demand made to the defendants to fulfil the obligation which they had undertaken by the terms of the sale deed to pay the money due from the plaintiffs 2nd party to Puran Rai. Nor do I think that it can be held that the consideration for the sale deed can be split up into two parts, namely, the amount payable on the handnotes and the amount payable on the mortgages of Puran Rai. The consideration for the sale deed was Rs. 300 and it is immaterial that part was to be used for the payment of the dues on the handnote and part for the payment of dues on the mortgages. The position would have been different if the due dates of the mortgages in favour of Puran Rai were subsequent to the date on which the payment of the dues on the handnote was demanded ; but it is the admitted case of both parties that the mortgage debts had fallen due prior to the execution of the sale deed of 1928. In my view, therefore, there was a breach on the part of the defendants to pay the consideration money for the sale deed when they declined to pay the debts on the handnote. As there was an express agreement to pay the consideration money and as this agreement was contained in a registered document the period of limitation is that provided by Art. 111 read with Art. 116, namely 6 years. Ram Rachhya Singh Thakur v. Raghunath Prasad Missir (1). As the present suit was not instituted until September 24, 1935, the result is that the plaintiffs' claim to recover the unpaid consideration money for the sale deed is barred. It was suggested that the suit should be viewed as a suit on a contract of indemnity to which case Art. 83, would apply. Such a contention was negatived in Keshwar Sao v. Guni Singh (2), but was accepted in Mehdatunnissa Begum v. Halimatunnissa Begum (3). That article provides for a period of three years from the date when the plaintiffs were actually damnified. Even so regarded, the plaintiffs were damnified on March 25, 1929, Mehdatunnissa Begum v. Halimatunnissa Begum (3). Whether the plaintiffs' claim in respect of the sale deed of 1928 be viewed as governed by Art. 83 or Art. 97 read with Art. 116, the claim is barred. If Art. 83, applies the plaintiffs were damnified on March 25, 1929 and if Art. 97, applies the defendants must be held to have failed to pay the consideration money on that date, and as that date is more than six years before the institution of the suit, this claim is barred. Similarly, if the claim be viewed as a claim for compensation for breach of a contract the contract was broken on March 25, 1929 and time runs from that date. It was suggested on behalf of the respondents that the date on which Puran Rai instituted the suits on his mortgage should be regarded as the date on which the defendants broke their contract. So far as this part of the consideration of the sale deed was concerned that appears to have been the view taken by the Court below. But as I have already held the consideration for the sale deed was one and it was payable to one person, Puran Rai. As soon as the defendants refused to pay the debts on the handnote there was a breach of the contract and that occurred at the latest on March 25, 1929, see Keshwar Sao v. Guni Singh (2). A reference was made to the language of the third column of Art. 115, which refers to successive breaches of contract. It has been held that the term "successive breaches" in this article refers only to cases in which there is a promise to pay periodically, as for instance, payment of rent, annuities, interest, maintenance, etc. The result, therefore, is that Appeal No. 575 must be allowed. In view of the false defence set up by the appellants regarding the payment of the consideration money I disallow costs.

Second Appeal No. 576 of 1939.

Out of the consideration for the sudbharna of July 2, 1928, the defendants agreed to pay Rs. 127-8-9 to Puran Rai on account of a mortgage of April 30, 1922 and Rs. 69-0-9 on account of a hand-note of Baisakh 15, 1334. The sudbharna is a registered document and the defendants were actually given possession. It is, therefore, contended on behalf of the defendants-appellant that the plaintiffs' remedy was by a suit for redemption. On behalf of the plaintiffs-respondent, on the other hand, it is pointed out that the mortgagor was entitled to redeem in 1311 Fasli, that is to say, before the date of the present suit and that the consideration for the mortgage not having been paid there was nothing to redeem. From the judgment of the trial Court it appears that at the trial the defendants admitted that if it were found that they had not paid off Puran Rai the plaintiffs would be entitled to possession and mesne profits for 3 years prior to the institution of the suit. Apart from this admission, however, the present suit, I think, should be regarded, in the circumstances of the case, as a suit for redemption after taking of accounts. In such a suit the mortgagor would be entitled to possession on payment of the consideration and such other sums as might be due to him after taking of the accounts. In the present case nothing is payable by the mortgagor on account of the principal, for the consideration was never paid by the mortgagee. As to accounts, as the mortgagee never parted with the consideration, he is not entitled to any interest on it. He was put in possession in lieu of interest; as no interest was payable on account of the consideration not having been paid he is liable to account for the income of the property during the time he was in possession as mortgagee. In other words, he is liable to accounts for the income of the property during the period of his possession. The decree of the Court below awarding mesne profits in effect ensures that the plaintiff will obtain the profits of the property during the time when the defendants were in possession as mortgagees and nothing more. Although, therefore, the form of the decree is wrong, in substance it is not open to objection, for the same result will follow if the decree be in form a decree for redemption on taking accounts, except that such a decree would work out more favourably for the respondents as they would be entitled to bring into account the income for the entire period of the defendants' possession whereas the defendants' liability for mesne profits is limited. The plaintiffs, however, have not appealed against the decree awarding them mesne profits only. Second Appeal No. 576 of 1939 is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151—Interim order—Suit for recovery of certain property alleged to be allotted to plaintiff under agreement—Defendant not admitting that plaintiff is entitled to such property—Court, if can pass interim order of maintenance.

There is no inherent power in a Court to act without findings, so that if a matter is asserted by the plaintiff and denied by the defendant, the Court cannot presume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and give some interim relief pending disposal of the suit. Where therefore a plaintiff brings a suit for certain property alleging it to have been allotted to him in accordance with certain agreement and the defendant does not admit that the plaintiff is entitled to the property claimed by him, the Court has no jurisdiction to pass an interim order of maintenance in favour of the plaintiff. C. R. P. No. 1312 of 1930 and 77 Ind. Cas. 718 (1), relied on.

C. R. P. to revise an order of the District Court, West Godavari at Ellore, dated October 5, 1938.

Mr. V. Viyanna, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondent.

Order.—The plaintiff brought the present suit against his brother and his father for the B Schedule properties which, he said, were allotted to him in accordance with an agreement. In the alternative, he prayed for partition. The defendant's case is that the property is for the most part his self-acquired property and that the only property to which the plaintiff is entitled is that in Sch. I. During the pendency of the suit the plaintiff made an application to the Court for an interim maintenance of Rs. 800 a month. The learned District Judge has awarded Rs. 250 a month.

The plaintiff is not entitled to an order of the nature passed. In Gopal Saran Narayan Singh v. Sita Debi, 77 Ind. Cas. 718 (1), a Divisional Bench of the Patna High Court held that a Court has no inherent power under s. 151 to pass such an order. That case was very like the present, in that the plaintiff sued on a maintenance agreement, and only differed from it in that the defendant there did not admit that the plaintiff was entitled to anything. Here, the defendant does admit that the plaintiff is entitled to something: but he does not admit that the plaintiff is entitled to any part of the land that he claims. Jackson, J. in C. R. P. No. 1312 of 1930, quotes Gopal Saran Narayan Singh v. Sita Debi, 77 Ind. Cas. 718 (1), as an authority for the position that the Court has no inherent power under s. 151 to pass an interim order of maintenance and pertinently adds that "a Court cannot interfere with a private person's property merely because he happens to be a defendant on behalf of another person merely because he happens to be a plaintiff. There is no inherent power in a Court to act without findings, so that if a matter is asserted by the plaintiff and denied by the defendant, the Court cannot presume that the plaintiff's allegations are true and give some interim relief pending disposal of the suit."

In the face of the above decisions, I do not feel justified in taking into account the document in the plaintiff's favour, the validity of which is denied by the defendant. The defendant does however admit that the plaintiff is entitled to some property, but it would be inconvenient, I consider, during the pendency of this suit which, I hope, will not be very much longer, to compel the plaintiff to take possession of property which he does not claim and with regard to which he may have some difficulty in collecting rent. Some maintenance in proportion to the property admittedly belonging to the plaintiff can be given; and I think the fairest course would be to reduce the amount granted to the plaintiff by the lower Court to Rs. 50 a month from the date of the last payment. If it is subsequently found that Rs. 50 a month is in excess of the mesne profits from the land to which the Court finds the plaintiff is entitled, the excess will be charged on the land awarded to the plaintiff. The petition is allowed to the extent indicated. There will be no order as to costs.

A memorandum of cross-objections has been filed asking for an enhancement of the allowance. This has to be dismissed, whether on the ground that the plaintiff cannot be given even as much as was granted by the lower Court or on the ground that a memorandum of cross-objections cannot be filed in a revision petition. It could no doubt be treated as a revision petition if it had been filed within three months from the date of the passing of the order. Apparently this was not done. The memorandum has not been argued and it is not necessary to pass any order as to costs. The trial Court should expedite the disposal of the suit.

N.-S. Petition partly allowed.

Bihar Money-lenders' Act (III of 1938), ss. 13, 14—Application under s. 13—Matters required by section determined—Sale under s. 14—Fresh proclamation is essential — Previous waiver before application under s. 13, if gives jurisdiction to hold sale under s. 14, without fresh proclamation.

Section 14, Bihar Money-lenders' Act, makes it clear that after the property has been valued or such portion of it as is sufficient to satisfy the decree, a sale proclamation of the actual property to be sold must be drawn up, and in it must be stated the value of the property as determined by the Court under s. 13. Whatever has happened earlier, once an application is made under s. 13, a fresh sale proclamation must be drawn up under s. 14 after the property actually to be sold has been decided upon and its value fixed. The waiver of a fresh sale proclamation in the earlier stages of the case, before an application under s. 13 was put in cannot possibly be construed as a waiver of an entirely new sale proclamation which s 14 of the Act requires the sale without the issue of a new sale proclamation containing the matters set out in s. 14, is without jurisdiction and must be set aside.

A. from an order of the Additional District Judge, Purulia, dated March 16, 1940.

Messrs. S. C. Mazumdar, Ramanugrah Narayan Sinha and V. D. Narayan, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. K. Mitra, for the Respondent.

Harries, C. J.—This miscellaneous second appeal and civil revision are directed against an order of learned Munsif dated June 21, 1939, passed in an execution case directing the immediate sale of certain property. The judgment-debtor-appellant appealed against that order to the Court of the learned Additional District Judge of Purulia, and that appeal was dismissed by an order of the learned Additional District Judge, dated March 16, 1940. Against that order of the learned Additional District Judge this second appeal from order has been preferred, and the application for revision is in the alternative, that is to say, it is an application directed against the order of the learned Munsif in the event of this Court holding that no appeal lies.

In my view it is unnecessary to consider whether an appeal lies or not in this case, because the facts of the case make it necessary that this Court should interfere. If no appeal lies, then we would be bound to interfere in our revisional jurisdiction, and that being so, it is unnecessary definitely to decide whether an appeal or revision lies in this case.

The decree-holder-respondent put into execution a decree for Rs. 1,071-0-3 and attached eleven lots of the appellant's property. The execution case was a protracted one, and the sale proclamation of all the eleven lots was published on May 15, 1939. Thereafter the judgment-debtor applied and obtained two adjournments postponing the sale on payment of small sums on each occasion towards the decretal dues. The judgment-debtor in obtaining these adjournments waived the necessity of the issue of a fresh sale proclamation.

On June 10, 1939, the judgment-debtor filed an application under s. 11, Bihar Money-lenders Act, for permission to pay the decretal sum in instalments; but this application was refused by the learned Munsif. Subsequently on June 16, 1939, she filed another application under s. 13, Bihar Money-lenders Act, claiming that the properties should be valued and only such part of the properties sold as would be sufficient to satisfy the decretal amount. The learned Munsif acceded to this application and proceeded to value the properties, and evidence was given by the parties. The learned Munsif fixed the valuation of lot No. 7 at Rs. 1,100, and the parties agreed that this lot alone should be sold in satisfaction of the decree as its value was sufficient to satisfy that decree. Immediately afterwards on the very same day the learned Munsif put up lot No. 7 for sale, and it was sold to the decree-holder for Rs. 1,069-1-9 in full satisfaction of his dues.

While the sale was going on, the appellant-judgment-debtor filed a petition before the learned Munsif claiming that the property could not be sold until a fresh sale proclamation had been issued. The property, however, was sold in the manner I have stated. The learned Additional District Judge in appeal held that no appeal lay to him and consequently refused to interfere.

It has been urged on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the property which was sold, namely lot No. 7, could not be sold without the issue of a sale proclamation containing the details which are required by s. 14, Bihar Money-lenders Act Section 13 of that Act enjoins the Court when application is made to it to value the property and of that portion of such property the proceeds of the sale of which the Court considers will be sufficient to satisfy the decree. On application being made to the Court, it valued lot No. 7 at Rs. 1,100 which was sufficient to satisfy the decree. When the Court has valued the property under s. 13, then the provisions of s. 14 of the Act come into operation. That section is in these terms:

"Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contrained in any other law or in anything having the force of law the proclamation of the intended sale of property in execution of a decree passed before or after the commencement of this Act in respect of a loan or the interest on a loan shall include only so much of the property of the judgment-debtor the proceeds of the sale of which the Court considers will be sufficient to satisfy the decree and shall state the value of the property or portion of the property to be sold, as determined under s. 13; and such property or portion of the property, as the case may be shall not be sold at a price lower than the price specified in the sale proclamation....."

This section makes it clear that after the property has been valued or such portion of it as is sufficient to satisfy the decree, a sale proclamation of the actual property to be sold must be drawn up, and in it must be stated the value of the property as determined by the Court under s. 13. It appears to me that whatever has happened earlier, once an application is made under s. 13, a fresh sale proclamation must be drawn up under s. 14 after the property actually to be sold has been decided upon and its value fixed. In the present case it is common ground that no such proclamation was drawn up, and the property was in fact straightaway sold to the decree-holder.

It has been urged on behalf of the decree-holder-respondent that the judgment-debtor had waived the necessity of a fresh sale proclamation. As I have stated earlier, the judgment-debtor had obtained two adjournments of the proposed sale of the eleven lots and had waived the necessity of a fresh sale proclamation. Had the sale which actually took place been the sale of these eleven lots, no fresh sale proclamation would be necessary. However, application was made under s. 13 of the Act, and lot No. 7 was valued and that that alone directed to be sold. Once the Court had arrived at that conclusion and valued the property, it was, in my view, bound to issue a fresh sale proclamation of that property and that property alone, and such proclamation was bound to contain the value of that property as ascertained by the Court. The waiver of a fresh sale proclamation in the earlier stages of this case cannot possibly be construed as a waiver of an entirely new sale proclamation which s. 14 of the Act requires. In the earlier stages when a fresh sale proclamation was waived no application under s. 13 of the Act had been made, and the moment that was made the parties' rights was governed by the statute. It was urged at one stage that the judgment debtor had no right to apply for valuation under s. 13 of the Act because she had obtained adjournments of the earlier sale and waived the need of a fresh sale proclamation. Whatever be the merits or demerits of such a contention it is unnecessary to consider. An application was made, and this point was never raised in opposition. An order was passed by the learned Munsif fixing a valuation and directing what property should be sold, and that order has never been challenged by the decree-holder. In my view the learned Munsif was bound to direct the issue of a new sale proclamation containing the matters set out in s. 14, and he had no right or jurisdiction whatsoever to direct an immediate sale without first directing the issue of a fresh sale proclamation. In my view the order of the learned Munsif dated June 21, 1939, directing an immediate sale cannot be sustained and must be set aside.

In the result, therefore, I set aside the order of the learned Munsif and direct that the execution proceedings should be proceeded with from this stage in accordance with law. In the circumstances, I make no order as to costs upon the appeal or the petition for revision.

Manohar Lall, J.—I agree.

Advancing of funds to a male Hindu minor for meeting his own marriage expenses is not supplying him with necessaries suited to his condition in life within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act, and a person advancing such funds is not entitled to be reimbursed from the property of such a minor. The Hindu Law does not enjoin the marriage of a Hindu male before the age of majority. The case of Hindu females is, however, different. If funds are supplied to a minor owning ancestral property, for the marriage of a minor female in the family the person who supplies may be able to get himself reimbursed from the estate of the minor. Mr. C. B. Parakh, for the Applicant.
Messrs. S. P. Kotval and R. N. Padhye, for Non-Applicants Nos. 1 to 4.
Mr. W. B. Pendharkar with Mr. G. T. Bhide, for Non-Applicant No. 5.

Order.—The plaintiffs sued the defendants for recovery of Rs. 987. Their case is that defendant No. 1 Gulabchand with the other defendants as sureties sold to them a half share in a house in Seoni for a consideration of Rs. 600 on November 5, 1932, under a sale-deed (Ex. P-1) and placed them in possession thereof after receiving Rs. 150, on the date of registration and Rs. 50 on May 6, 1932, the balance remaining in deposit with them; the defendant No. 1 and his sureties represented to the plaintiffs that defendant No. 1 was a major when the sale-deed was executed, and acting on that representation the plaintiffs parted with Rs. 200 and became the purchasers. The plaintiff allowed defendant No. 1 to remain in possession of the house as their licensee, but taking advantage of his possession he sold the house to one Hukumchand on April 7, 1937, and it was then that the plaintiffs learnt on enquiry that the defendant No. 1 was a minor on the date of the sale in their favour and that a false representation was made to them that he was a major. The plaintiffs now realizing that the sale in their favour was void claim Rs. 200 paid by them to defendant No. 1 together with damages which they suffered on account of the transaction falling through, from all the defendants in the case. They claim Rs. 200 paid by them, Rs. 287 interest on Rs. 200 at 2 per cent. per mensem as provided for in the sale-deed by way of damages, and Rs. 500 on account of the difference in the sale price and the present price of the house. Rupees 987, is the amount of the claim. The plaintiffs assert that Rs. 200 paid as consideration under the sale-deed was paid to defendant No. 1 to meet his marriage expenses and that he is bond to refund the same under s. 68 of the Contract Act.

Defendant No. 1 admits that he was a minor on the date of the sale, but pleads that he thought he was a major and executed the sale-deed under that belief. He wanted the plaintiffs to pay the balance and take possession, but they did not, with the result that he sold the house for Rs. 550, on April 7, 1937, to one Hukumchand. He admitted that he received Rs. 200, for his own marriage and pleaded that it cannot be regarded as a necessity of life under s. 68 and that the plaintiffs cannot recover the same on that ground. He also pleaded that the contract being void, the plaintiffs could not claim to recover anything under it.

The sureties who are the other defendants in the case deny that they misrepresented the age of defendant No. 1 as above 18 and pleaded that they were not sureties for the defect in title and that as the original contract between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 was void, there could be no contract of suretyship regarding a void contract. They denied the damages claimed and stated that the claim was not leviable against them. It was also pleaded on behalf of the defendant No. 1 that the plaintiffs' claim was barred by time.

On these facts the lower Court set forth the necessary points for determination and decreed the claim of the plaintiffs for Rs. 212 against the sureties only. The plaintiffs feeling themselves aggrieved have filed an application for revision (Civil Revision No. 869 of 1938), claiming a decree for the full amount claimed against all the defendants, while the surety Tekkilal (defendant No. 2) has filed an application for revision (Civil Revision No. 868 of 1938) claiming that there should be no decree against the sureties and that the plaintiffs' suit should have been dismissed against them also. This order will govern both these revision applications which were argued together before me as arising out of the same suit.

The plaintiffs contend that the trial Court having rightly found that all the defendants represented defendant No. 1 to be a major, though he was a minor on the date of the sale, should have ordered the payment of Rs. 200 not only by the sureties but also by defendant No. 1 who actually received it for his own marriage. The plaintiffs also lay claim to this amount from defendant No. 1's estate on the ground that they supplied funds to the minor for necessaries suited to his condition of life within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act.

Though defendant No. 1 also misrepresented his age and claimed to be a major, he is not estopped from proving that he was really a minor on the date of the contract. This proposition is not disputed by the plaintiffs in this case. That being so, the plaintiffs cannot lay claim to recover anything from him on the basis of a contract which was admittedly void ab initio. Defendant No. 1 was incompetent to enter into any contract and as held in Gulabchand v. Chunilal (1), no cash payment made under such a contract is recoverable from him. I was asked to decree the claim for Rs. 200 admittedly received by defendant No. 1 under s. 65 of the Contract Act, and it was argued that in equity the plaintiffs were entitled to claim refund of what they paid to defendant No. 1 and that he should not be allowed to retain the benefit that he obtained by his own misrepresentation; Khan Gul v. Lakha Singh (2) and Appaswami Ayyangar v. Narayanaswami Ayyar (3) and Asaram v. Ludheswar (4), were relied on.

The case in Khan Gul v. Lakha Singh (2), was referred to in Gulabchand v. Chunilal (1), and the view of Harrison, J. was preferred to that of Shadi Lal, C. J. and the suit for refund of money was dismissed.

Appaswami Ayyangar v. Narayanaswami Ayyar (3), was a case in which the minor on the date of contract had sued for a declaration that the contract be declared void on the ground of minority, and while speaking of a suit of this kind it was stated that such a plaintiff must be put on terms. It is doubtful if the Madras High Court would have taken the same view if the minor was a defendant who had received cash. Reilly, J. observed that the same result is reached by applying the general principle that no plaintiff can be allowed to make the Court an instrument of fraud. The distinction has been clearly brought out in the judgment of Reilly, J. at pp. 130 and 131*. Appaswami Ayyangar v. Narayanaswami Ayyar (3), is not thus an authority for decreeing the claim against a minor or an ex-minor for refund of cash consideration though he represented himself to be a major when he was in fact a minor.

Asaram v. Ludheshwar (4), was also a case in which the plaintiffs wanted the help of the Court and claimed cancellation of a deed executed by them on the ground that it was forbidden by law, and this Court before giving a decree to the plaintiffs thought it equitable to put such plaintiffs on terms.

None of the cases cited before me lay down a proposition contrary to the decision in Gulabchand v. Chunilal (1), where it was laid down that a decree against a minor or ex-minor defendant cannot be passed for the refund of money borrowed either on a contract or for money had and received for the use of the minor; such a suit ought to fail.

The view taken in Gulabchand v. Chunilal (1), was a reiteration of the view taken in Muliabai v. Garud (5), which in its turn was based on Mohori Bibi v. Dharma Das Ghose (6), where their Lordships clearly stated that s. 65 of the Contract Act will not apply to a contract which could not be entered into by reason of s. 11 of that Act.

Harimohan v. Dulu Miya (7) is also a case in point on the same subject. The Court must take care to see that under the guise of restitution the very contract which is void is not virtually enforced against the minor. To permit the plaintiff to recover the money paid to the minor is tantamount to enforcing the contract against the minor, and in the absence of any authority to the contrary, I decline to depart from the rule laid down in Gulabchand v. Chunilal (1).

This brings me to the consideration of the applicability of s. 68 of the Contract Act. This is incidentally decided by the ruling in Gulabchand v. Chunilal (1) as is stated there that no decree can be passed against an ex-minor for money had and received for the use of the minor. I am further clearly of the opinion that advancing of funds to a male Hindu minor for meeting his own marriage expenses is not supplying him with necessaries suited to his condition in life within the meaning of s. 68 of the Contract Act, and a person advancing such funds is not entitled to be reimbursed from the property of such a minor.

Marriage under Hindu Law is no doubt a sacrament and a holy union, but I am not aware of any Hindu Law text which enjoins the marriage of a Hindu male before the age of majority. The case of Hindu females is different. The marriage of a daughter or a sister born in a Hindu family ought to be performed before she attains the age of puberty according to Hindu Law texts, and if it be not so performed, those whose duty it is to perform it, viz. mother, father or brother, go to the infernal region (see Yama 22 and 23). In such a case, if funds are supplied to a minor owing ancestral property, the person who supplies may be able to get himself reimbursed from the estate of the minor, but I cannot persuade myself to apply the provisions of s. 68 of the Contract Act when funds are supplied to a male minor or the guardian of such a minor for the marriage of the minor himself. My attention is invited to the observations in Sadasheo v. Firm Hiralal Ramgopal (8), Makundi v. Sarabsukh (9) and Pathak Kali Charan, v. Ram Devi Ram (10).

Sadasheo v. Firm Hiralal Ramgopal (8) refers to Makundi v. Sarabsukh (9), and Bose, J. stated in general terms that reasonable marriage expenses of a minor have been upheld in Makundi v. Sarabsukh (9) and Juggessur Sircar v. Nilambur Biswas (11). I also agree that they are necessaries. With due respect I cannot concur in this. Makundi v. Sarabsukh (9), relied on, only baldly states that under the peculiarities of the Hindu Law, the marriage of a minor may be perhaps a legitimate cause for the alienation of the property by his guardian. This is hardly a statement which tackles the point.

Pathak Kali Charan v. Ram Devi Ram (10) is a case in which funds were supplied for the marriage of the brother of a minor owning ancestral property, and it was held that the funds could be recovered from the estate under s. 68 of the Contract Act though the amount was advanced really as an earnest money for a contract of sale. This was dissented from in Raghunathan v. Ravuthakanni (12) on the ground that money paid as earnest money could not fall under s. 68 of the Contract Act. Pathak Kali Charan v. Ram Devi Ram (10) is based on Vaikuntam Ammangar v. Kallipiram Ayyangar (13) which was a case where funds were advanced for a daughter's marriage to a Brahmin widow and were held recoverable by such a widow from the estate of her husband in the hands of her husband's brother under s. 69 of the Contract Act. It did not lay down that if funds are advanced for a brother's marriage or the marriage of a minor himself, the case would be covered by s. 68. This shows that Pathak Kali Charan v. Ram Devi Ram (10). was wrongly decided.

Sundrabai v Shivnarayan (14), Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Bam Upadhia (15) and Gopalakrishnam Raju v. Venkatanarasa Raju (16) relied on by the plaintiffs, do not apply to the facts of the present case. Sundrabai v. Shivnarayana (14) lays down that one who cannot lead the life of a celibate ought to get himself married, otherwise he is a patita, but no text is cited enjoining marriage even before the age of majority. This was also a case of an alienation for legal necessity. It may be necessary for the manager of a joint Hindu family to get co-parceners in the family married out of the funds of the family even by alienating family property, but to say that even the marriage of a minor co-parcener is one of the necessaries of life is stating the law very widely. Chandavarkar, J. adverts to this at p. 96*, but sums up by saying that though the Shastras discourage early marriage, they do not prohibit it and that usage has sanctioned such marriages. I do not think this view can be accepted when even the law of the land makes it an offence to get a minor male married. Bhagirathi v. Jokhu Ram Upadhia (15) follows Sundrabai v. Shivnarayana (14), and was a case of second marriage of a major male member of the family for which family property was alienated, and it was held to be a legal necessity in the peculiar circumstances of that case. Gopalakrishna Raju v. Venkatanarasa Raju (16) was also a case of alienation of family property for the marriage of a major male, and it was held that the alienation was justified. These are all cases of alienation and the alienation of the minor's property was sought to be justified. Bose, J. in Sadasheo v. Firm Hiralal Ramgopal (8) has pointed out the distinction between cases of alienation justified by legal necessity and cases of supply for necessaries. It is not permissible to confuse the two kinds of cases. Moreover the view taken in these cases is very much shaken by the decision in Ramjas Agarwalla v. Chand

Mandal (17), where it was laid down, differing from Sundrabai v. Shivnarayana (14) (and presumably similar cases), that a marriage of a minor male is not a legal necessity justifying his guardian to alienate his property. Ramjas Agarwalla v. Chand Mandal (17) refers to Manu, Chap. IX verse 94 :

"Let a man of 30 years marry an agreeable girl or a man of 38 years a girl of 8 years ; one marrying earlier deviates from his duty."

If the personal law of the Hindus nowhere lays down that the marriage of a Hindu male before he attains the age of majority is a duty enjoined on such a person, and if marriage of a male before the age of majority is not approved of by social usage and the law of the land (viz. the Child Marriage Restraint Act), it will be wrong to hold that a person supplying funds for such marriage of a minor male Hindu supplies the same for necessaries of life. It is the duty of Courts to discourage breach of the laws of land, but if Courts were to decree a claim of this nature under s. 68, of the Contract Act, it will be putting a premium on a breach of the law of restraint of child marriage.

Cases decided before the Child Marriage Restraint Act ought not to be held as guides in deciding the cases of necessaries after the Act came into force in British India.

When the law of the land does not permit a minor Hindu male to marry before the age of 18 and on the contrary holds him guilty if he were to contract a marriage before the age of 18, and when his personal law does not cast a duty on him to get himself married before the age of 18, I fail to understand how such a marriage can be regarded as one of the necessaries of life suitable to his status in life. Though Courts have widened the definition of the term "necessaries" within the meaning of s. 68, of the Contract Act, it will be travesty of justice to include in the term a marriage which is prohibited by law and thus not permitted by social usage.

I hold that the sum of Rs. 200 advanced by the plaintiffs to defendant No. 1, though advanced and spent for his own marriage, cannot be recovered by the plaintiffs from the minor's estate under s. 68, of the Contract Act. The plaintiff's suit was thus rightly dismissed against defendant No. 1.

The plaintiff's further contention is that their claim against the sureties at any rate ought to have been decreed fully, while the sureties contend that the plaintiff's suit against them should fail as it is barred by time and that they could not be held liable when in fact there was no contrart between their principal and the plaintiffs, their principal being a minor. The finding of the trial Court that the minor and the sureties represented to the plaintiffs at the time of the transaction that defendant No. 1 was a major was not challenged in argument before me. The finding that the plaintiffs discovered on April 7, 1937, that the defendant No. 1 was a minor on the date of the transaction is not also challenged.

The sureties, however, contend that the cause of action for the suit accrued when the plaintiffs paid Rs 200 to defendant No. 1, and that as the suit was filed more than three years after that date, it was barred. There is, however, a clear finding by the Court below that these sureties represented to the plaintiffs when they paid Rs. 200 that the defendant No. 1 was a major, and that the plaintiffs discovered this to be false when defendant No. 1 sold the house to another on April 7, 1937, and made enquiries thereafter and learned that the defendant No. 1 was in fact a minor on the date of the transaction. On these findings the cause of action for recovery of compensation for breach of contract or even for refund of the amount paid to defendant No. 1 under the suretyship of the sureties accrued when the fraud was discovered. The plaintiff's claim is thus within three years from April 7, 1937, and well within time. I need not enter into an elaborate discussion about the article of the Lim. Act applicable to the case as the suit has been filed within three years of the accrual of the case of action.

The contention of the sureties that as the defendant No. 1 was incompetent to contract and his contract is void, the suretyship which is fastened on it also falls through, cannot be accepted. Defendant No. 1 was incompentent to contract and may not be liable under the contract, but the recital of the stipulation in the sale deed by the sureties that if there after anything was found wrong with the contract of defendant No. 1 and the plaintiffs suffered any damage, the sureties would compensate the plaintiffs with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem, makes the sureties liable to the plaintiffs. The sureties were competent to contract though defendant No. 1 was not and it is the sureties who represented to the plaintiffs that defendant No. 1 was competent to contract and made them enter into this transaction, agreeing to compensate them if their (sureties') representations proved false or any defect was discovered in the contract thereafter. The sureties must under the terms of their contract compensate the plaintiffs. The suretyship contract is a collateral and almost an independent contract and can be enforced: Kashiba v. Shripat Narshiv (18), I hold that the sureties are liable.

The only other point left for decision is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to claim damages to the full extent of the claim as laid. The trial Court has granted them a decree for Rs. 200 and interest thereon at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the accrual of the cause of action. The plaintiffs failed to prove that the house fetched better price than they had agreed to pay. In fact the portion purchased by the plaintiffs was sold by defendant No. 1 for Rs. 550 i. e., Rs. 50 less than the price agreed to be paid by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs did not pay the entire consideration but paid only Rs. 150 first and Rs. 50 afterwards. The rest of the amount remained with them. They did not suffer any damage in price. They are thus entitled to get back Rs. 200 which they paid to defendant No. 1 and some compensation on this amount by way of interest. Though the sureties stipulated to compensate at 2 per cent. per mensem, it is not obligatory on the Court to grant full compensation as stipulated. The condition of 2 per cent. per mensem is by way of penalty under s. 74 of the Contract Act. I am of the opinion that in the circumstances of the case the Court was right in allowing only 6 per cent. per annum by way of compensation to the plaintiffs in addition to a refund of Rs. 200 as against the sureties.

The result is that the decision of the the Court below is maintained though for slightly different reasons, and the applications for revision filed in this Court are dismissed with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 25 for each contesting party.

Application dismissed.

Second Appeal No. 30 of 1938
March 4, 1940
DAVIS, J. C. AND WESTON, J.

WADERO SHAHBAZKHAN WADERO FATEHKHAN—APPELLANT

KAKALMAL BUDHUMAL AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 15 (1) and (2)—Execution application by one of two joint decree-holders — Adjustment binding on both decree-holders, if can be recorded where executing decree-holder proves express authority — Absence of authority —Provisions of O. XXI, r. 15 must be looked into—Application by one decree-holder stating that other decree-holder will be produced at time of recovery of money — Application, if on behalf of both—Where other decree-holder is produced at time of payment of money, the payment is binding on him — Fact that payment was made out of Court is immaterial.

In the case of an execution application by one of the joint decree-holders if express authority of the executing decree-holder to receive the decretal amount on behalf of all joint decree-holders is proved or if it is established that in fact all decree-holders have received their shares of the amount then an adjustment binding all decree-holders can and should be recorded. But when no express authority or receipt by other joint decree-holders has been established then the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15, Civil P. C., have to be looked to. 35 Ind. Cas. 157 (1) and 148 Ind. Cas. 860 (2), relied on.

Rule 15 of O. XXI, Civil P. C., does not require that any particular form of words should be used to express the undertaking required by cl. 1 of that Rule.

Where one of the two decree-holders make an execution application stating that the other decree-holder will be produced at the time of the recovery of the money the application must be held to be on behalf of the both. If that undertaking is observed, and if the other decree-holder produced when the money is paid, all necessary protection of his interest would be secured. It would make no difference if payment under these conditions is made out of Court; and provided that the other decree-holder is produced at the time of any payment or adjustment and is aware that the payment or adjustment is made in satisfaction of the decree, the payment or adjustment would be binding upon him.

S. A. from the judgment of the First Class Sub-Judge, Shikarpur, dated March 5, 1938.

Mr. Kundanmal Dayaram, for the Appellant.

Weston, J.—The facts necessary to be stated for disposal of this second appeal are as follows: By Suit No. 111 of 1929 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Jacobabad, a final decree for sale of mortgaged property was obtained on May 17, 1933 by the two mortgagees Chugomal and Kakomal, the defendant in the suit being present appellant Shabazkhan, and on the same day one of the two decree-holders, Chugomal, filed an execution application for sale of the mortgaged property. In the execution application so filed there appeared the following statement :

"Plaintiff No. 1 (Chugomal filed this execution application, and he will produce plaintiff No. 2 at the time of the recovery of the money."

On May 19, 1933 the Subordinate Judge passed an order directing registration of the execution application and as defendant was an agriculturist transferring the decree for execution to the Deputy Commissioner. On January 6, 1936 before execution had been effected by the Deputy Commissioner, Shahbazkhan, the judgment-debtor filed an application under O. XXI, r. 2 before the Subordinate Judge stating that the 'plaintiff' (Chugomal) with another person on July 25, 1935 had taken a lease of all the lands of applicant at Rs. 7 a jireb and Chugomal had agreed to credit his share of the lease money in satisfaction of the decree, that the decree had been fully satisfied in this manner, that the adjustment of the decree should be recorded and the execution application dismissed. On this applictaion notice was issued to Chugomal and also to the joint decree-holder Kakomal. Both appeared. Chugomal denied the adjustment and Kakomal claimed that he was not a party to it and was not bound by it. The learned Subordinate Judge held that an adjustment of the form alleged was a valid adjustment, that Chugomal had taken the lease on the terms alleged by Shahbazkhan, that he acted as agent and partner of Kakomal, that the amount of lease money applied to payment of the decree exceeded the amount due under the decree, that Kakomal was bound by the adjustment and that the decree was fully satisfied. In appeal by Kakomal, the First Class Subordinate Judge, Shikarpur, with appellate powers, held that it was not established that Chugomal and Kakomal were partners in the suit mortgage, and that even if they were partners the adjustment of the decree was not shown to have been done by Chugomal in his capacity as a partner, that payment to one decree-holder does not amount to an acquittance by all the decree-holders, and that Kakomal was not bound by the adjustment. He therefore set aside the order of the original Court and directed further execution proceedings to continue so far as the half of the decretal amount due to Kakomal was concerned.

The learned Advocate for respondent Kakomal has contended before us that the agreement or lease deed of July 25, 1935 relied upon by appellant Shahbazkhan in his application under O. XXI, r. 2 as the adjustment of the decree was made more than ninety days before the application was made, that the agreement shows that immediate credit was to be given to the judgmen-debtor for the amount of the lease money, and that the adjustment not having been certified by the judgment-debtor within the period allowed by Art. 174, Lim. Act, it cannot be recognized by the executing Court. This point does not seem to have been urged in either of the Courts below, and the reason for this probably is, as pointed out by the learned Advocate for appellant, that s. 71, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, is a complete answer to it. This section is as follows :

"The last clause of s. 258, Civil P. C. [O. XXI, r. 2 (3)] shall not apply to payments out of Court made in any proceeding under this Act, in any case where an acknowledgment by the judgment-creditor for the same is produced, or when payment is either admitted by him or proved."

It is admitted that the execution proceedings were proceedings under this Act. The payment to Chugomal although denied by him has been held proved, and Shahbazkhan could plead it at any time. It has not been suggested before us that the adjustment pleaded by Shahbazkhan was not a valid adjustment, and there can be no doubt that it was a valid adjustment. The question we have to decide is whether it is binding upon respondent Kakomal. It is admitted that it is binding to the extent of Chugomal's share, and that this share is one-half. We think that the lower Courts were wrong in basing their decisions upon considerations of the power of one partner to bind other partners. We would agree with the following observations made in Mahomed Silar v. Nabikhan (1) quoted with approval in Muthusamy Ayyar v. Narasimha Ayyar (2), at page 702 :

"The right of two out of three partners to receive on behalf of the partnership a partnership debt which has not merged into a decree so as to bind the third partner has no bearing on the decision of the question whether when the three partners have become joint decree-holders (and are not merely joint private creditors) two of them as such decree-holders can receive the joint decree debt so as to release the judgment-debtor from liability in execution for even a portion of the decree debt."

In Muthusamy Ayyar v. Narasimha Ayyar (2) at p. 702 it was held that if satisfaction of a decree should be entered on the report of one of the join decree-holders it would amount to a violation of the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15, Civil P. C. We think that if express authority of the executing decree-holder to receive the decretal amount on behalf of all joint decree-holders is proved or if it is established that in fact all decree holders have received their shares of the amount then an adjustment binding all decree-holders can and should be recorded. But when as in the present case no express authority or receipt by other joint decree-holders has been established then the provisions of O. XXI, r. 15, Civil P. C., have to be looked to. This rule is as follows :

"15. (1) Where a decree has been passed jointly in favour of more persons than one, any one or more of such persons may, unless the decree imposes any condition to the contrary, apply for the execution of the whole decree for the benefit of them all, or where any of them has died, for the benefit of the survivors and the legal representatives of the deceased."

(2) Where the Court sees sufficient cause for allowing the decree to be executed on an application made under this rule, it shall make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the interests of the persons who have not joined in the application."

In the present case it is not contended for Kakomal that the execution application filed by Chugomal was other than an application for the benfit of all, and no doubt the learned Advocate has been influenced by the necessity of supporting the application as being in accordance with law' in order that the benefit of that application may be available to him under Art. 182, Lim. Act. But apart from his admission we think the statement in the application set out in the earlier part of our judgment that Kakomal will be produced at the time of recovery of the money shows sufficiently that Chugomal purported to make the application on his own behalf and on behalf of Kakomal. Rule 15 of O. XXI, Civil P. C., does not require that any particular form of words should be used to express the undertaking required by cl., of that Rule. Clause 2 imposes a duty upon the Court to make such order as it deems necessary for protecting the intersts of the persons who have not joined with the applicant in applying for execution. In the present case no express order was made by the Court, but we think when ordering execution to proceed on the undertaking given by Chugomal to produce Kakomal, the Court must be taken to have accepted that undertaking and to have made it a condition of the execution of the decree. If that undertaing was observed, and if Kakomal was produced when the money was paid, all necessary protection of his interest would be secured. We do not think it would make any difference if payment under these conditions was made out of Court: and provided that Kakomal had been produced at the time of any payment and was aware that the payment was made in satisfaction of the decree, this payment would be a payment binding upon him.

It has been held by the first Appellate Court and by that finding we are bound, that Kakomal was not present when the agreement of July 25, 1935 was made. There was therefore no compliance with the protective order impliedly made under cl. (2) of r. 15 and Kakomal cannot be held bound by the adjustment pleaded by the present appellant. We therefore agree with the first Appellate Court, although for somewhat different reasons, that satisfaction of the decree to the extent of one-half share of Chugomal only can be recognized. We think, however, that the proper order to be made in the execution proceedings is that the execution application of Chugomal should be dismissed. Kakomal has not applied that his name should be brought on the record in the application, and if he wishes to proceed by execution he should be required to file an execution application. It may be that he will prefer to take the alternative and possibly the more honest remedy by a suit against Chugomal for his share in the benefits secured from the judgment-debtor by the lease dated July 25, 1935, although we should not be understood to express any opinion as to the maintainability of such a suit. While upholding the order that the one-half share of Chugomal in the decree only has been satisfied, we order that the execution application filed by Chugomal should be dismissed. As to costs, we think, the present parties should bear their own costs throughout. Order accordingly.

Second Appeal No. 500 of 1940
October 4, 1940
BECKETT J.

JALAL DIN AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
versus
NAWAB AND OTHERS PLAINTIFFS AND ANOTHER, DEFENDANT—RESPONDENTS

Practice—Pleadings—Technicalities should not be insisted—Legal effect of facts stated by both sides should be determined—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 18—Witness—Party, if bound by statement of his witness—Custom (Punjab) — Alienation—Widow—Reversioners' suit for declaration that widow's alienation cannot affect their reversionry rights—Other reversieners impleaded as defendants along with widow and alienee—Suit compromised and decreed—Plaintiff reversioners to get possession from alienee on certain payment—Defendant reversioners held entitled to benefit of declaration alone and not to share in compromise.

Too much insistence should not be laid on the technicalities of pleadings. If the facts on both sides are stated with sufficient correctness and precision, the legal effects which flow from them are a matter for determination by the Court which conducts the trial or hears any subsequent appeal. [p. 187, col. 1.]

There is no rule of law with regard to the statement of witnesses, that a party must be bound by the statement of his witness though the belief in such a rule is not uncommon and does great harm in judicial trials in some of the Subordinate Courts. [p. 188, col. 1]

The reversioners instituted a suit for a declaration that their reversionary rights were not affected by the alienation made by the widow. Along with the widow and the alienee they impleaded other reversioners as defendants. The suit was compromised and the declaration was granted. By the terms of the compromise the plaintiffs were to take over possession from the alienee on payment of the certain amount by them alone:

Held, that so far as the reversionary rights were concerned, the defendant reversioners were entitled to share in the benefit of the compromise to the extent to which it must be taken as covering the rights of all the reversioners on the death of the widow i e., the extent of the declaration in favour of the plaintiffs but were not entitled to share in any additional benefit which the active reversioners might secure for themselves by inducing a person in lawful possession to forgo his rights in return for a cash payment to be made by themselves alone. The fact that the plainntiff reversioners obtained possession without making actual payment could not affect the rights under the compromise. [p. 187, col. 2; p. 188, col. 1.]

S. A. from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, dated February 23, 1940.

Mr. Mehr Chand, for the Appellants
Mr. Darbari Lal, for the Respondents-Plaintiffs.

Judgment.—Nizam Din had three sons, Bura, Chanan Din and Qamar Din. Bura and Qamar Din both left families but Chanan Din died childless and his property passed to his widow Mst. Hayat Bibi, for her lifetime. The present suit relates to the land left by Chanan Din. Mst. Hayat Bibi sold this land on August 24, 1936 to one Abdul Hakim. Jalal Din and Feroze Din, two of the three sons of Chanan Din's brother Qamar Din, then brought a suit for a declaration that this transfer by Mst. Hayat Bibi would not affect their reversionary rights on the termination of her life estate. Their remaining brother, Mehr Din, and the descendants of Bura were also impleaded as defendants. On March 1, 1938 the principal parties stated that they had come to a compromise whereby Jalal Din and Feroze Din were to be granted a decree for possession of the land in suit against Abdul Hakim, with the condition that the plaintiffs were to pay Abdul Hakim a sum of Rs. 300. A week later, Abdul Hakim stated in Court that he had received Rs. 200 out of this sum and had remitted the balance. Possession was to be given up to Jalal Din and Feroze Din after the crops had been cut. It is said that Mehr Din subsequently contributed a sum of Rs. 100 and was given joint possession along with his brothers. The descendants of Bura have now brought the present suit against the three sons of Qamar Din for possession of half the land left by Chanan Din. To this they have added a small claim for Rs. 30 on account of gear said to have been removed from a well. The trial Cout excluded one of the plaintiffs on the ground that he was not in fact one of the parties to the suit and granted the remaining plaintiffs a decree for possession of 3/8ths of the land on payment of Rs. 150. An appeal to the senior Subordinate Judge by Jalal Din and Feroze Din was dismissed. On cross-objeetions by the plaintiffs, they were granted a decree for possession of half the land on payment of Rs. 100 only. Against this decree a second appeal has now been preferred by Jalal Din and Feroze Din.

The case for the appellants, as now argued by Diwan Mehr Chand, is that the plaintiffs in the present suit are not entitled as reversioners to share in the benefit of the decree for possession which was obtained by the appellants in their own favour, but are only entitled to succeed on the death of Mst. Hayat Bibi. The same case appears to have been argued before the lower Appellate Court, where it was held this argument could not be entertained in view of the pleadings put in by the parties. It had been claimed in the plaint that the previous suit had been instituted and compromised for the benefit of the plaintiffs and with their consent. The contesting defendants chose to traverse this plea with the allegation that, on being asked to contribute towards the expenses of the previous litigation, the present plaintiffs had simply relinquished their rights in the land. It has now been held as a matter of fact that the present plaintiffs did not relinquish their rights in the land. On the further question arising whether in that case they are entitled to the benefit of the previous decree for possession granted in favour of Jalal Din and Feroze Din, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the contesting defendants must be held to have admitted this inasmuch as they did not specifically deny that the compromise was to the benefit of the present plaintiffs.

I do not think this view is correct. If the assertion made in the plaint is to be taken as an allegation that the plaintiffs were active parties in the earlier proceedings, then I think it was sufficiently traversed by the counter-statement of fact to the effect that they had relinquished their interest in the subject-matter of the suit. On the other hand, if it is taken as a mere assertion of a legal right to share in the benefit of the compromise by virtue only of their position as reversioners, then it raises purely a legal question, which is a matter for argument rather than for pleadings. It has frequently been held in this country that too much insistence should not be laid on the technicalities of pleadings. If the facts on both sides are stated with sufficient correctness and precisions, the legal effects which flow from them are a matter for determination by the Court which conducts the trial or hears any subsequent appeal. In the present instance I do not think that it can be taken that the plaintiffs intended to assert by their pleadings that if it was not proved that there had been any definite relinquishment of their rights in the land then it should be assumed a matter of law that they were entitled to share the benefit of the compromise as reversioners.

On behalf of the appellants it is not denied that the previous proceedings were instituted by Jalal Din and Feroze Din in a representative capacity and that the other collaterals would have been entitled to benefit by any decree which might be granted in respect of reversionary rights to which the suit was primarily confined. So far as the reversionary rights are concerned, it is even now conceded that the plaintiffs are entitled to share in the benefit of the compromise to the extent to which it must be taken as covering the rights of all the reversioners on the death of Mst. Hayat Bibi. What is contended by Diwan Mehr Chand on behalf of the appellants, however, is that this is the limit of the benefit to which the other reversioners are entitled. When Jalal Din and Feroze Din entered into an agreement with Abdul Hakim whereby he agreed to surrender immediate possession on cash payment by them, a relief which was outside the scope of the original suit and which could not have been claimed, on behalf of the reversioners in general, it is contended that this benefit is not one which can be regarded as having been secured in a representative capacity for the sake of other collaterals.

Although the point is one which might be expected to have arisen often enough before now, it does not appear to be governed by any direct authority. In an attempt to meet the argument advanced by Dewan Mehr Chand, Counsel for the plaintiffs has referred me to Devi Dial v. Uttam Devi (1). That was a case in which certain reversioners brought a similar suit for a declaration that their ultimate rights would not be affected by an alienation made by a widow. The parties entered into a compromise whereby the reversioners obtained immediate possession of certain property but gave up all present or future claims regarding the remainder. Many years afterwards, an attempt was made by the sons of one of the reversioners to upset this arrangement and to set up a title to the land which had thus been surrendered. It was held that they could not do so, as the whole body of the reversioners had entered into the compromise in good faith and had enjoyed the benefit of it for so long, it was held that the arrangement was binding on both reversioners who were parties to the suit and also their successors-in-title. It is clear that the facts of that case were entirely different from the circumstances of the present suit. The earlier proceedings had been brought by all the reversioners who had themselves entered into a compromise and obtained possession. The case was decided on equitable grounds and the parties to the suit in the second instance were regarded as successors-in-title to those persons who had obtained a benefit for themselves in the first instance by surrendering a part of their claim. In such circumstances, the reasons for holding that they were bound by original compromise are obvious. In the present instance, the parties are not in the same position nor do the same equities exist. Whether they relinquished their claim on the land or not it has not been suggested that the present plaintiffs took any active steps to prosecute the original suit. There is no equitable ground for holding that reversioners who are impleaded as defendants in a declaratory suit of that kind are not only entitled to the benefit of any declaration which may be obtained by the active reversioners, but are also entitled to share in any additional benefit which the active reversioners may secure for themselves by inducing a person in lawful possession to forgo his rights in return for a cash payment to be made by themselves alone. If regard is to be had to the equities they would appear to lie on quite the opposite side.

The other rulings to which Counsel for the plaintiffs has referred do not seem to be to the point, inasmuch as they only deal with the application of the rule of res judicata to matters decided in declaratory suits of the kind ordinarily brought by reversioner. The rule of res judicata can apply only to matters which are in issue. The only matter now in contest between the parties is the right to immediate possession before the death of Mst. Hayat Bibi. This right was never in issue in the suit originally brought which was only concerned with the right of succession after her death and it could not have been placed in issue. To this extent the compromise decree went quite beyond the scope of that suit. I do not think it is necessary for the purpose of the present proceedings to decide whether the compromise decree can be properly regarded as a decree relating to the subject-matter of the suit which is all that a Court is entitled to pass under O. XXIII, r. 3. On the ground that the whole includes the part, it may be argued that the decree accepted the right of the plaintiffs to succeed after the death of Mst. Hayat Bibi. Even so, the provision which entitled them to possession before her death did not purport to decide that they were entitled to this relief as reversioners which is the only ground on which the reversioners could claim that anything had been decided in their favour.

Moreover, I think that the actual form of the decree itself is not without significance. While it merely includes in a sort of slipshod manner the statement taken down from the mouth of the contesting parties, it distinctly grants a right of possession in favour of Jalal Din and Feroze Din alone and the payment was also to be made by them alone The other collaterals were parties to the suit. When the question was not one of future rights but one of almost immediate possession, a right which was intended to be shared by all the reversioners could and should have been so expressed. If the plaintiffs are telling the truth when they state that they gave their consent to this compromise, the position would be that they gave their consent to the grant of possession to Feroze Din and Jalal Din, on payment by them of the stipulated sum.

Some stress has been laid on the fact that the lower Appellate Court has accepted the story to the effect that no money actually passed, but that Abdul Hakim merely agreed to say that he had received payment under threat of criminal proceedings. Even if this fact were relevant, I am doubtful whether it would be taken as a conclusive finding of fact. The only reason given by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge for accepting this story is that Abdul Hakim has given the story himself, and that as he appeared as a witness for the defendants, they must be bound by his statement. There is no such rule of law with regard to the statement of witnesses, though the belief in such a rule is not uncommon and does great harm in judicial trials in some of the Subordinate Courts. On the face of Abdul Hakim's story, he can have no great reason to love the defendants and there is no reason for supposing that he would be inclined to depose in their favour merely because he was called by them. This fact however does not appear to me to be relevant in view of the legal position indicated above. If the intention and the legal effect of the compromise were to give a right of possession on payment to Jalal Din and Feroze Din alone, that position would not be altered by reason of the fact that they entered into a subsequent agreement with Abdul Hakim whereby they obtained possession without making any actual payment.

For the reasons given above I accept the appeal and dismiss the plaintiffs' suit with the proviso that this decision shall not affect their reversionary rights on the death of Mst. Hayat Bibi, so much having been conceded by Counsel for the appellants in the course of his arguments. Since the defendants are to some extent responsible for the costs which the proceedings entailed by their unproved allegation that the plaintiffs had relinquished their rights in the land, the parties are left to bear their own costs throughout. Counsel for the plaintiffs has asked for leave to appeal in Letters Patent. As the point involved is one which may be of considerable importance in other suits and does not appear to be already coverved by authority, leave to appeal is granted.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 556 of 1939

October 4, 1939

MOHAMMAD ISMAIL, J.

ROSHAN SINGH—APPLICANT

EMPEROR THROUGH SAMPURAN SINGH TANDON—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 482, 486—Trade mark—Infringement—Ingredients of ss. 482 and 486, stated—What prosecution must prove — False and counterfeit trade mark, distinction — Accused, if can be convicted under both ss. 486 and 482—Accused held not guilty under s. 486 but only under s. 482—Order as to costs or confiscation of goods, if can be passed by High Court in revision — Criminal trial—Revision—Finding of facts depending on correct interpretation of law—Case can be examined on merits.

To establish the charge under s. 482, I. P. C., it is necessary to prove that the accused's article is marked in a manner reasonably calculated to be believed that they are the marks of the article manufactured by the complainant. An accused would render himself liable to conviction under s. 482 if he uses a false trade mark on any goods which may or may not have been manufactured by him. On the other hand, the ingredient of an offence under s. 486 is the sale or exposing or possessing for sale, goods or things with a counterfeit trade mark. The offence under the first section will be complete as soon as a false trade mark has been used, but under the latter section it will be necessary that goods should be sold or be possessed or exposed for sale. Therefore, it is perfectly legal to sustain the conviction under both sections provided that the mark on the goods of the accused is a false trade mark and also a counterfeit trade mark. The distinction between false trade mark and counterfeit trade mark is somewhat subtle. It depends on the degree of resemblance between the false and genuine trade marks. 27 Ind. Cas. 902 (1), relied on. [p. 191, col 1.]

Held, that the accused could not be convicted under s. 486 as it could not be said that the No. 301 used by the accused as trade mark upon his goods was a counterfeit of No. 501 the registered mark of the complainant; nor could it be said that words "India" were a counterfeit of "tomco". The accused however could be convicted under s. 482 as the accused's goods were a colourable imitation of the complainant's goods. Surja Prasad v. Mahabir Prasad (2), distinguished.

In the case of an infringement of a trade mark the prosecution must prove that the trade mark on the accused's goods is likely to deceive a purchaser who is acquainted with the complainant's "get-up" but who trusts to his memory. Mere differences in detail do not prevent the two designs being essentially the same. What degree of resemblance is necessary is a matter incapable of definition a priori. [p. 192, col. 1.]

In cases of a prosecution for infringement of a trade mark the High Court will not pass any order in revision in respect of costs or confiscation of accused's goods. If the complainant has in fact suffered any damage, he must seek his remedy in Civil Court.

Ordinarily, it is not the practice of the High Court to disturb findings of fact in revision, but where the finding of fact depends on a correct interpretation of the law it can examine the case on the merits: [p. 190, col. 1.]

Cr. R. App. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated June 15, 1939.

Mr. K. D. Malaviya, for the Applicant.

Messrs. B. B. Chandra and Ram Narain Verma, for the Opposite Party.

The Deputy Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Order.—This is an application in revision against on order of the Court below. The complainant, Messrs. the Tata Oil Mills Company Limited of Bombay, made this complaint through Mr. Tandon, who is the Manager, Tomco Sales Department, Delhi, against the applicant Roshan Singh, who is the proprietor of Agra Soap and Chemical Works, under ss. 482, 483 and 486, I. P. C. The complaint states that the complainant firm is well known at Bombay and carries on business on a large scale in various kinds of soap; that is has got its trade marks which have been duly registered and one of them is "501" which it has been using on a soap in the market known by the name of "501"; that the applicant (Roshan Singh) dishonestly with a view to defraud the public has manufactured a soap similar in shape, size, colour, etc, and is selling it under the name "301": that the general get-up of the soap is designed to deceive the public and to cause loss to the complainant; that the complainant was informed of the fact in the month of July 1938 and thereupon, the applicant was served with a notice on behalf of the firm to desist himself from copying the trade mark of the complainant firm but the applicant paid no heed to it. On these allegations it was prayed that action may be taken against the applicant under the sections mentioned above and that the goods, moulds, etc., found in possession of the accused may be taken possession of.

The applicant pleaded not guilty and stated that his soap had been in the market for several years past; that there was no resemblance between the soap manufactured by the applicant and soap "501" manufactured by the complainant; that no offence in law was committed by the applicant and that the complaint was barred by limitation.

The case was tried by a Magistrate of the second class who found the appticant guilty under ss. 482 and 486, I. P. C. and convicted and sentenced him to a fine under each count. On appeal the Appellate Court affirmed the conviction but reduced the sentence to a fine of Rs. 200 under s. 482 or three months rigorous imprisonment in default and Rs. 25 under s. 486 or three months rigorous imprisonment in default. The applicant went in revision to the Sessions Judge who summarily rejected the application. The applicant has now come up in revision to this Court. It is not disputed that the complainant's soap bears a registered trade mark. The applicant, on the other hand, has no registered trade mark. The Courts below have come to the conclusion that the applicant's soap is a colourable imitation of the complainant's soap and the similarity is reasonably calculated to deceive the intending purchasers.

Ordinarily, it is not the practice of this Court to disturb findings of fact in revision, but in the present case the finding of fact depends on a correct interpretation of the law. It is therefore necessary to examine the case on merits in some detail. In the declaration form registered by the complainant company in Bombay the description of the trade mark is given as follows: The cube soap has six sides. On the first, corresponding and reverse sides of the soap there is imprinted an oirole within which there is rhombus and T, O, M, C, O, being the first letters of the words which form the name of the company. Over the second corresponding and reverse sides of the cube soap, there appears on oirole imprinted therein and this forms and constitutes the number or otherwise the brand of soap referred to above manufactured by the company. Upon the third corresponding and reverse sides of the soap there are words "free from animal fat" imprinted in three lines one beneath the other. The trade mark, number and stamp herein described are particularly used in respect of this brand of scap.

The applicant's soap has got on the first corresponding and reverse sides within the rhombus figure 301 and under the figure the word 'special.' Upon the third corresponding and reverse sides of the soap, there are words "free from animal fat" imprinted in three lines one beneath the other. In place of "TOMCO" the applicant's soap has "India" The only distinguishing feature is that in place of digit No. 5 in the complainant's soap the applicant has got digit 3. The applicant's soap is also a cube soap and has six sides. The sizes of the two soaps are about the same but the colour of the applicant's soap is lighter. The soaps are supplied in wrappers. Each wrapper contains three bars. The complainant's wrapper is of cardboard. The top portion is white and the lower portion has red band all round. The colouring of the applicant's wrapper is similar but the applicant's wrapper is of thin paper. On one side of the complainant's wrapper, there is No. 501 in bold type and underneath are the following words "special household soap, especially made for washing delicate materials." In the left corner are the letters T O M C O. The applicant's wrapper has the number 301 and underneath are the words "special house-hold soap, especially made for washing delicate clothes." In the left corner in place of "TOMCO" "INDIA" is printed. On other sides of the wrapper there is not much similarity, but as stated above the colour scheme is similar. There cannot be the least doubt that at first sight there is great resemblance between the soaps. There is also some resemblance between the wrappers. The question is whether the resemblance amounts to an infringement of the complainant's trade mark and whether the action of the applicant is punishable under ss. 482 and 486, I. P. C. The case has been argued at considerable length and several authorities have been cited in support of their respective contentions by learned Counsel for the parties. I now proceed to examine the statutory provision. Under s. 478, I. P. C. a mark used for denoting that goods are the manufacture of a particular person is called a trade mark. Section 480 of the Act provides:

> "Whoever marks any goods or uses any case package or other receptacle with any mark thereon in a manner reasonably calculated to cause it to be believed that the goods so marked, or any goods contained in any such receptacle so marked, are the manufacture or merchandise of a person whose manufacture or merchandise they are not, is said to use a false trade mark."

The punishment for using a false trade mark is provided in s. 482. It will be observed that to establish the charge under s. 482 it is necessary to prove that the applicant's soap is marked in a manner reasonably calculated to be believed that they are the marks of the soap manufactured by the complainant. Section 486 of the Act provides the punishment for selling or exposing for sale any goods or things with a counterfeit trade mark. The expression 'counterfeit' is defined in s. 28 of the Act and runs thus :

"A person is said to counterfeit who causes one thing to resemble another thing intending by means of that resemblance to practice deception or knowing it to be likely that deception will thereby be practised."

Explanation No. 1 to the section says that it is not essential to counterfeiting that the imitation should be exact. It has been argued by learned Counsel for the applicant that the applicant cannot be legally convicted under both sections, namely 482 and 486. In my opinion the contention is not well founded. An accused would render himself liable to conviction under s. 482 if he uses a false trade mark on any goods which may or may not have been manufactured by him. On the other hand, the ingredient of an offence under s. 486 is the sale or exposing or possessing for sale goods or things with a counterfeit trade mark. The offence under the first section will be complete as soon as a false trade mark has been used, but under the latter section it will be necessary that goods should be sold or be possessed or exposed for sale. In my opinion, therefore, it is perfectly legal to sustain the conviction under both sections provided that it is held that the mark on the soap of the applicant is a false trade mark and also that it is a counterfeit trade mark. I am not called upon to consider the scope of s. 483 because the applicant was never convicted under that section. The distinction between false trade mark and counterfeit trade mark is somewhat subtle. In my opinion it depends on the degree of resemblance between the false and genuine trade marks. In Lokumal v. Emperor 16 Cr. L. J. 230 (1) at p. 231 this question had to be considered. The accused was convicted under s. 482 and 486. The learned Judges observed :

"A counterfeit is strictly an exact imitation but for purposes of the I. P. C. it is not essential that imitations should be exact. But a thing is not ordinarily said to be counterfeit unless it bears on the face of it the semblance of validity and is such as to deceive the average person on ordinary observation. Having regard to the patent differences between Ex. 4 and Ex. 5, differences which would be obvious on ordinary observation even to an unintelligent person who could read either Gujarati or English, and unless he could read on the languages the inscription would convey nothing at all. The conviction under s. 486 cannot in our opinion stand. It is a case of using a false trade mark, not a counterfeit one."

I have already pointed out that the trade mark exhibited on the soap of the applicant bears very strong resemblance to that on the complainant's soap but the trade marks are not identical. If the two soaps are put side by side a literate man will not find any difficulty in noticing the difference, but a purchaser who trusts to his memory may well be led to believe that the applicant's soap was manufactured by the complainant firm. Learned Counsel for the applicant has referred me to several cases. I now proceed to notice some of them. In Surja Prasad v. Mahabir Prasad (2) the appellant was acquitted under ss. 482 and 486. The accused had applied labels to his bottles which were similar to those used by the complainant, but, on closer examination, great differences in the labels were discernable. The acquittal of the appellant was based on the dissimilarity in the labels used by the appellant to those applied to the bottles of the complainant. This ruling does not assist either party. In A. M. Malumiar & Co. v. Finlay Fleming & Co., 30 Cr. L. J. 882 (3) the applicant was convicted under s. 482, I. P. C., only. It was held :

"The proper test for determining whether a trade mark has been infringed is whether the get-up of the defendant's goods is likely to deceive a purchaser who is acquainted with the plaintiff's get-up but trusts to his memory. It is to be assumed that the purchaser will look fairly at the goods without distinguishing features being concealed and the Court must also have regard to the class of purchaser by whom the goods would normally be bought."

On behalf of the opposite party several cases have been cited. In Swadeshi Mills Co., Ltd. Bombay v. Juggilal Kamlapat Cotton Spinning and Weaving Mills Co. Ltd., Cawnpore (4) the plaintiff manufactured cloth bearing a particular design known as "Kamal Chhap." The defendant set up a rival factory using colourable imitation of the plaintiff's design on his cloth with a different letter press. The Bench after a consideration of large number of case law on the subject held :

"If the goods of a manufacturer from the mark or device he has used have become known in the market by a particular name the adoption by a rival trader of any mark which will cause his goods to bear the same name in the market may be as much an invasion of right of the rival as the copy of his device....

No general rule can be laid down as to what is or is not a mere colourable variation. All which can be done is to ascertain in every case as it occurs whether there is such a resemblance as to deceive a purchaser using ordinary caution."

This case went up to the Privy Council and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision of this Court on the main point, although reduced the amount of damages: see Juggi Lal Kamalapat v. Swadesdi Mills Co., Ltd. (5). In that case it is noticeable that the plaintiff's cloth was associated with the name of lotus and that any lotus device would lead to cloth being able to be palmed off as his cloth which was the cloth of another manufacturer. An illiterate purchaser would look to the design of lotus in selecting the cloth and any minor difference in details would not be noticeable by him. Learned Counsel also cited Nagendra Nath v. Emperor (6), Faqir Chand v. Emperor (7) and Jamal Noor Muhammad Sait & Co. v. Abdul Kareem & Co. (8). There is hardly any difference of opinion in the view of law laid down in the above cases. The ratio decidendi deducible from the authorities is that the prosecution must prove that the trade mark on the accused's goods is likely to deceive a purchaser who is acquainted with the plaintiff's "get-up" but who trusts to his memory. Mere differences in detail do not prevent the two designs being essentially the same. What degree of resemblance is necessary is a matter incapable of definition a priori. It was observed in Seixo v. Pronezende (9) at p. 196:

"All that the Courts of justice can do is to say that no trader can adopt a trade mark so resembling that of a rival as that ordinary purchasers purchasing with ordinary caution are likely to be misled."

Applying the principles enunciated above, I have to determine whether the applicant has used a false trade mark or has sold goods with a counterfeit trade mark. I have no hesitation in holding that in the present case the applicant cannot be convicted under s. 486, I. P. C. It is impossible to say that the No. 301 is a counterfeit of No. 501, nor can it be said that "India" is a counterfeit of "Tomco". It is true that the imitation need not be exact but there should be close resemblance to constitute an offence under this section. Agreeing with the principle laid down in Lokumal v. Emperor, 16 Cr. L. J. 230 (1) at p. 231, I hold that the applicant is not guilty under s. 486, I. P. C.

As to the conviction under s. 482, I. P. C., I see no reason to differ from the conclusions of the Courts below. The definition of false mark has already been referred to. The question for determination is whether the appellant has marked his soap in a manner reasonably calculated to be believed that the soap is manufactured by the complainant firm. There cannot be the least doubt that every effort has been made by the applicant to make his brand of soap resemble that of the applicant. The general colour scheme of the applicant's wrapper is the same as that of the complainant. It cannot be a mere accident that there are so many points common between the two wrappers. The writing on five sides of the two wrappers is however dissimilar. It would therefore not be justifiable to hold that the applicant's wrapper is a colourable imitation of the complainant's wrapper. The resemblance of the complainant's soap with Tomco brand is very great indeed. The only distinguishing feature is that in place of digit 5 in Tomco brand there is digit 3 in the applicant's brand. The style and formation of letters in "India," resemble those in 'Tomco.' This resemblance again cannot be an accident. It must be deliberate, and the object is to deceive the public. The question is whether the resemblance is calculated to deceive the intending purchaser. In deciding this question, it is to be assumed that the purchaser will examine the goods with some care. In the present case we are not concerned with the illiterate public. The writing on the wrapper or on the soap will mean very little to a purchaser who is unable to read. We have to confine our attention therefore to a literate purchaser who is acquainted with the "get-up" of Tomco brand but trust to his memory. Ordinarily a purchaser does not keep notes of minute details of a soap, nor does he read every word embossed on the article. The trade mark on both the soaps although not identical is so similar that there is every likelihood of a person being induced to purchase the applicant's brand under the belief that he is purchasing Tomco brand. The similarity in the marks may not amount to 'counterfeit' but I am satisfied that one is a colourable imitation of the other. The applicant therefore has rightly been convicted under s. 482, I. P. C.

The next point stressed is that the prosecution is barred by limitation. A prosecution under these sections may be made within three years after the commission of the offence or one year after the discovery thereof by the prosecutor whichever expiration first happens: see s. 15, Merchandise Marks Act, 1889. The complaint was made on November 22, 1938. It is alleged in the complaint that the prosecutor received information about the pirated trade mark some time in July 1938. It is not suggested that Mr. Tandon or any of the directors of the Company received direct information of the commission of the offence earlier. It is however contended that Dau Dayal, an agent of the complainant firm at Delhi, had such knowledge on May 8, 1937. It is not proved that Dau Dayal is a general agent of the Company. So far as the evidence shows Dau Dayal is the agent of the Company only for the purpose of the sale of the goods manufactured by the Company. Dau Dayal in his statement denies all knowledge of the commission of the offence in May 1937. The applicant relies upon Ex. P. 11 dated May 8, 1937 to prove that Dau Dayal placed an order with the complainant to purchase soap '301'. This document is not in Dau Dayal's handwriting. There is another document Ex. P. 8. It is in Dau Dayal's handwriting and this makes no reference to soap '301.' It is admitted that according to the terms of the agreement Dau Dayal could not sell soap manufactured by any firm other than the complainant firm. Under the circumstances it is not likely that he would place an order for '301' with the complainant as the terms of the agreement must have been within his knowledge at the time the alleged order was made. Taking all the facts into consideration I am not prepared to hold the complaint as barred by limitation.

Learned Counsel for the opposite party prays that all the goods bearing false trade mark in the possession of the applicant may be confiscated and that the opposite party may be awarded costs. I am unable to accede to the request of learned Counsel. Any order with regard to confiscation that may be passed at this stage will lead to complication as the rights of a third party may be affected thereby. I have no sufficient material on the record before me to assess the costs. Cases of this nature are not free from difficulty and if the complainant has in fact suffered any damage he may seek his remedy in Civil Court In revision I do not consider it proper to pass any order with regard to confiscation or costs. In the result the application is allowed in part. The conviction and sentence under s. 486, I. P. C. are set aside. The fine if paid shall be refunded. The conviction and sentence under s. 482, I. P. C., are maintained.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Suit No. 1012 of 1939
January 25, 1940
SEN, J.

MITTULAL SINGHANIA AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS
versus
PURSOTOME DEBI BAGLA—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. I, r. 8—Suit by reversioner to restrain alienation by limited owner—Procedure under O. I, r. 8, if must be followed—Other reversioners, if necessary parties—Hindu Law—Reversioner—When next reversioner is female getting limited interest, remote reversioner who would get absolute estate can sue for declaration that alienation made by limited owner is bad—Alienation—Legal necessity—Limited owner—Pleadings—Amendment—Defective verification.

Order I, r. 8, Civil P. C., is applicable only when two conditions co-exist, viz.: (1) where the parties are numerous and (2) where one of such numerous parties desires to be considered as a representative of the others for the purposes of the suit. It has no application where the parties are not numerous as here, nor has it any application where a person is vested with a representative character by virtue of his status. Order I, r. 8, applies where a person does not normally represent any one else but seeks to be clothed with a representative capacity only for the purposes of the suit. There is, therefore, nothing to prevent a single reversioner from instituting a suit to restrain a limited owner from alienating property without having recourse to the provisions of O. I, r. 8, and without making the other reversioners parties even though there may be other reversioners entitled to the same reliefs. 29 Ind. Cas. 298 (1) and 37 Ind. Cas. 161 (2), explained. [p. 195, col. 2.]

Ordinarily, a remote reversioner is not entitled to institute a suit unless he can show that the next reversioner has precluded himself from instituting a suit or has refused to institute a suit or is in collusion with the limited owner. Where, however, the next reversioner is a female, who would also get a limited interest, the remote reversioner who would get an absolute interest is entitled to sue for the prevention of waste, or for a declaration that an alienation by the limited owner is bad on the ground that it was made without legal necessity. Abinash Chunder Majumdar v. Harinath Shaha (4), followed, Bhupendra Nath v. Bhuban Chandra (5), explained. [p. 196, col. 1.]

The costs of necessary litigation for the purpose of obtaining property to which a limited owner was entitled would constitute legal necessity but the costs must be reasonable costs. [p. 197, col. 2.]

Where the verification of the plaint is defective amendment should be allowed if the defect is a mere irregularity and has prejudiced nobody. 101 Ind. Cas. 573 (6), relied on.

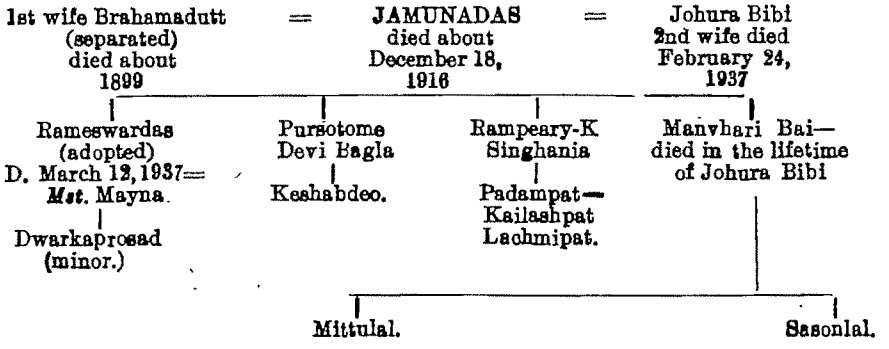
Judgment.—The plaintiffs who claim to be reversioners have instituted this suit in which thay pray that the defendant Sm. Pursotome Devi Bagla, be restrained from dealing with certain property on the allegation that she is a limited owner thereof and is threating to waste it. I set out below a geneological table, the accuracy of which is now admitted to show how the parties are related.



The plaintiff's case is that Johura Bibi died possessed of certain stridhone property. She left behind her Rameswardas, the adopted son of her co-wife and two daughers Pursotome Devi Bagla and Rampeary. Her daughter Manvhari Bai predeceased her, leaving two sons, Mittulal and Sasonlal. They are the plaintiffs in this suit. Rameswardas died on March 12, 1937, leaving a widow, Mst. Moyna and a minor son Dwarkaprosad. In the year 1938 Pursotome Devi Bagla who is the present defendant instituted a suit in this Court against Moyna Bibi, Dwarkaprosad and Rampeary, for a declaration that the properties mentioned in the plaint of that suit constituted the stridhone property of her mother, Johura Bibi: she claimed these properties on the footing that she was the stridhone heir of her mother as she was an 'indigent daughter' Her allegation was that Rampeary was married to a wealthy husband. In that suit Mittulal and Sasonlal were not parties. Rampeary did not defend the suit. Moyna Bibi and Dwarkaprosad raised various contentions but ultimately the suit was settled between them and Pursotome Devi Bagla. By the terms of settlement, it was declared that the property of Johura Bibi consisted of one 3 per cent. Govt. Promissory Note No. 109681 of the face value of Rs. 2,30,000. The parties compromising agreed that this Govt. Promissory Note should be made over to Pursotome Devi, Bagla, who would be entitled to receive also all the arrears of interest. As Rampeary did not appear, a decree was passed against her ex parte, declaring that Pursotome Devi Bagla being an 'indigent daughter' was entitled to succeed to the stridhone property of the deceased Johura Bibi.

The present suit is instituted by Mittulal and Sasonlal, two sons of Manvhari Bai, the daughter who predeceased her mother, Johura Bibi. They allege that Pursotome Devi Bagla is entitled to the aforesaid Govt. Promissory Note as limited owner she being the stridhone heir of Johura Bibi. They allege further that after the decree was passed in the suit referred to above, Pursotome Devi Bagla is attempting to alienate the Govt. Promissory Note. On these grounds they sue for an injunction restraining her from disposing of the promissory note and in the alternative for a Receiver. The defence taken by Pursotome Devi Bagla may be summarised as follows: 1. The suit as framed is bad inasmuch as the provisions of O. I r. 8, Civil P. C., have not been complied with. 2 The plaintiffs not being the next reversioners are not competent to institute the suit. 3. The verification of the plaint is defective and on that ground the suit should be dismissed. 4 Pursotome Devi Bagla has an absolute right to the property in suit and has not merely a limited interest.

5 Even if the interest of Pursotome Devi Bagla is that of a stridhone heir the plaintiffs have not established any circumstance which would justify the Court in placing any fetter upon her full enjoyment of the property as stridhone heir.

In my opinion, there is no substance in the first ground taken. Mr. Khaitan appearing on behalf of the defendant points out that suit of this description by a reversioner is a representative suit and he draws my attention to the fact that in the plaint itself the plaintiffs state that they are suing 'for selves and all the reversionary heirs of Mst. Johura Bibi.' Mr. Khaitan's argument is that as the suit is a representative one, it necessarily follows that the plaintiffs should have proceeded in strict accordance with the provisions of O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., that is to say, they should have applied for the permission of the Court to sue in a representative capacity, and they should have asked the Court to give notice of the institution of suit at their expense to all the persons whom they sought to represent. For the purpose of establishing this proposition, Mr. Khaitan has cited a large number of cases among which may be mentioned the case, in V. Venkatanarayana Pillai v. V. Subbammal, (1) and Janaki Ammal v. Narayanasami Aiyar (2). In my opinion, neither of these cases furnish any ground for the proposition that O. I, r. 8 has anything to do with a suit of this nature instituted by a reversioner. These cases are authority for the proposition that a reversioner bringing a suit of this description must be considered as representing the entire reversionary interest and not merely as representing himself and that the decision arrived at in such a suit would be binding on all the reversioners and on the person who would actually inherit the property as reversioner at the time that the reversion opens. They are no authority whatever either for the proposition that all the reversioners, both immediate and remote, should be joined in the suit or for the proposition that a single reversioner suing must follow the procedure laid down in O. I, r. 8, when there are other reversioners.

On the contrary the two Privy Council decisions show that it is permissible for a single reversioner to sue without making the other reversioners parties and without following the procedure laid down in O. I, r. 8. The very language of that rule shows that it is applicable only when two conditions co-exist, viz.: (1) where the parties are numerous and (2) where one of such numerous parties desires to be considered as a representative of the others for the purposes of the suit. It has no application where the parties are not numerous as here nor has it any application where a person is vested with a representative character by virtue of his status. O. I, r. 8, applies where a person does not normally represent any one else but seeks to be clothed with a representative capacity only for the purposes of the suit. It is a rule of procedure which has been framed for the purposes of convenience. I hold therefore that this ground is of no substance and that there is nothing to prevent a single reversioner from instituting a suit of this nature without having recourse to the provisions of O. I, r. 8, Civil P. C., and without making the other reversioners parties even though there may be other reversioners entitled to the same reliefs.

The next ground taken namely that the plaintiffs not being immediate reversioners, are not entitled to sue is also not sustainable so far as this province is concerned. There can be no doubt that ordinarily the person entitled to institute a suit of this description is the immediate reversioner and that a remote reversioner is not permitted to institute such a suit unless the immediate reversioner has refused to institute such a suit or is in collusion with the limited owner, or has in some way disentitled himself from instituting such a suit. This rule was laid down in Rani Anand Kunwar v. Court of Wards (3) where their Lordships say:

"As a general rule such suits must be brought by the presumptive reversioner, that is to say, by the person who will succeed if the widow were to die at that moment. They are also of opinion that such a suit may be brought by a more distant reversioner if those nearer in succession are in conclusion with the widow or have precluded themselves from interfering."

This Rule was again laid down in Venkatanarayana Pillai v. V. Subbammal (1) at p. 130*. Ordinarily, therefore a remote reversioner is not entitled to institute a suit unless he can show that the next reversioner has precluded himself from instituting a suit or has refused to institute a suit or is in collusion with the limited owner. I do not wish to say that the coditions mentioned by me above are exhaustive or that there may not be other conditions under which the remote reversioner would be entitled to institute such a suit but these are generally the grounds upon which a remote reversioner may be permitted to sue. So far as the province of Bengal is concerned, however there is another circumstance which would entitle the remote reversioner to institute a suit of this description and it is this : Where the next reversioner is a female, who would also get a limited interest the remote reversioner who would get an absolute interest is entitled to sue for the prevention of waste, or for a declaration that an alienation by the limited owner is bad on the ground that it was made without legal necessity. This principle has been laid down in Abinash Chunder Majumdar v. Harinath Shaha (4). Their Lordships Brett and Mukherjee, JJ. after reviewing a large number of the old decisions of the Courts in Bengal, held that :

"Where the nearest reversioner was a female who would hereelf get a limited interest in the property the remote reversioner, who would get an absolute interest, is entitled to sue the limited owner in order to restrain her from wasting the estate."

Mayne in his well-known treatise on Hindu Law (Edn. 10), in dealing with this question says at p. 813 :

"In Calcutta, Madras, Allahabad and Patna, it has been held that where the nearest reversioner is a female and would only be entitled to a limited interest, the reversioner next to her is competent to sue."

Mr. Khaitan relies upon the case in Bhupendra Nath v. Bhuban Chandra (5). That case has, in my opinion, no application to the question under discussion. Their Lordships were there dealing with the locus standi of certain persons who had applied for revocation of probate of a will and they held that where the nearest reversioners had applied for revocation of probate and had failed, this decision would be binding on the remote reversioners although they had not been made parties to the previous application. I cannot see how the decision n this case can throw any light on the question under discussion. Mr. Khaitan has not been able to show any case of this Court which has affected the decision in Abinash Chunder Majumdar v. Harinath Shaha (4). That case lays down a principle which has been well established by a series of older decisions and I propose to follow that decision not only because I consider that the principle laid down is well founded but also because I feel that I would not be justified in deviating from a rule of law laid down by a long series of decisions for a considerable period. In the present case the immediate reversioner is Rampeary. She is a female and would acquire only a limited interest in the property; the plaintiffs are therefore entitled to institute this suit although they are remote reversioners.

There is some substance in the ground concerning the defective verification of the plaint. In the plaint, paras. 7, 8 and 9 contain allegations that the defendant is about to alienate the Govt. Promissory Note in order to deprive the reversionary heirs. In the verification the plaintiff Mittulal Singhania states that the statements contained in paras. 7, 8 and 9 are his submissions. Obviously, the statements there are not submissions but allegations of fact upon which the plaint is rested. Learned Counsel for the plaintiffs conceded that the verification is defective and he prayed for leave to amend the verification. In my opinion, this leave should be granted. The defect is a mere irregularity and it has prejudiced nobody. To allow this defect to stand in the way of the plaintiffs' success, if the other facts alleged by them are established would be to defeat the ends of justice. I would repeat the words used by Page, J. in Ramgopal Ghose v. Dhirendra Nath (6) that :

"I feel strongly that the rights of litigants ought not to be decided upon the splitting of a straw."

In that case his Lordship held that a defect as regards verification was an irregularity that could be cured by amendment. The plaint has now been amended and the plaintiff has stated that he believes the allegations contained in the aforesaid paragraph to be true, and that they are based upon information received from one Girdharilal. I now come to the defence regarding the merits of the case. It is said that the defendant Pursotome Devi Bagla is not a limited owner but the absolute owner of the property in suit which as I said before constitutes a Govt. Promissory Note which formed part of the subject-matter of the suit instituted by her against Dwarkaprosad Moyna Bibi and Rampeary. Mr. Khaitan's contention is that Pursotome

Devi Bagla has obtained this property by way of compromise and therefore this property has become her absolute stridhone property. Mr. Khaitan frankly stated that personally he did not feel that he could press this point with any insistence but he placed it before the Court for a decision. He relied upon a passage at p. 133 of Mulla's Principles of Hindu Law, Edn. 8. The learned author states there that property obtained by a woman under a compromise in consideration of her giving up her rights in relation to her stridhone is stridhone according to all schools, and that property obtained by a widow under compromise with her adopted son is her absolute property. Now in the present case Pursotome Devi Bagla, strictly speaking, did not obtain this property by virtue of a compromise. It is true that two of the defendants compromised the suit but the other daughter Rampeary did not enter into any compromise. She did not defend the suit and the Court declared upon the evidence that Pursotome Devi Bagla was entitled to a limited interest in the property as an indigent daughter in preference to Rampeary who was affluent. Again Pursotome Devi Bagla did not claim an absolute right in the property ; she claimed only a limited interest in the property as a stridhone heir. She was awarded the property on that footing. It cannot therefore be said that she got the property as the result of a compromise or that she was given an absolute interest therein.

I now take up for consideration the last ground urged on behalf of the defendant. The evidence adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs is that the defendant has stated that she had obtained the promissory note by instituting a suit with the help of certain persons and that the plaintiffs had no right in the note. She said further that she was going to sell the promissory note and pay the Pleaders and others who had assisted her in her suit, the sum of Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000. (After considering certain evidence his Lordship concluded). I hold upon the evidence that the defendant informed Giridharilal that she intended to dispose of the promissory note as soon as she got possession of it and that her intention was to spend Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000 out of the sale proceeds for the purpose of remunerating the persons who had assisted her in the suit instituted by her.

The next question which arises is whether these circumstances are sufficient to justify an order restraining the defendant from dealing with the property. It is not necessary for me to deal with all the cases which have been cited by Mr. Khaitan to show what amounts to legal necessity and what does not. I am fully aware that the costs of necessary litigation for the purpose of obtaining property to which a limited owner was entitled would constitute legal necessity but the costs must be reasonable costs. The suit instituted by the defendant lasted one day. It was undefended so far as Rampeary was concerned, and it was settled so far as the other defendants were concerned. To suggest that Rs. 50,000 to Rs. 60,000 would be the legitimate expenses of such a suit is ridiculous. The plaintiffs have established to my satisfaction that the defendant is threatening to alienate the property and to distribute a large portion of it amongst certain persons. Admittedly, the defendant is a person in straitened circumstances. Her right as limited owner to the promissory note is based on the fact that she is an indigent daughter. If therefore the defendant spends the sale proceeds of this promissory note it is probable that the reversioners will not be able to get any pecuniary compensation for the invasion of their rights. All the requisites for the issue of a perpetual injunction as provided for in s. 54, Specific Relief Act, are present in this case and I am of opinion that an injunction should issue against the defendant. The following issues were framed.

"(1) Have the plaintiffs any cause of action ?

(2) Are the plaintiffs entitled to any of the reliefs claimed at all or in any representative capacity ?

(3) Has Rampeary got three sons, Padampat Singhania, Kailaspat Singhania and Laksmipat Singhania ?

(4) What is the nature of the interest acquired by the defendant under the decree in Suit No. 2154 of 1938 ?

(5) Are the plaintiffs entitled to rely on any case of fraud as against the defendant ? If so, what case of fraud ? Did the defendant commit any such fraud ?

"(6) Are there any circumstances as alleged justifying the grant of any of the reliefs claimed ? If so, what reliefs are the plaintiffs entitled to ?

They are answered thus : Issue Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are answered in the affirmative. Issue No. 4. The interest acquired by the defendant was that of limited owner. She was the stridhone heir of her mother and she acquired no absolute right to the property in suit. Issue No. 5. The plaintiffs at the opening gave up any case of fraud. Issue No. 6. The plaintiffs are entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from alienating the promissory note. The suit is decreed with costs. The defendant, her servants and agents are hereby restrained from alienating the 3 per cent. Govt. Promissory Note No. 109681 of 189667, of the face value of Rs. 2,30,000 or of disposing of it in any manner whatsoever. The defendant will be entitled to draw the interest accruing on the said promissory note and there is no restriction placed upon her regarding the spending of the interest. I think I should make some provision for enabling the defendant to apply to the Court for permission to dispose of the promissory note on the ground of legal necessity if and when such necessity arises. I do not think that I would be justified in forcing the defendant if legal necessity ever arose to incur the costs of instituting a suit. She should, in my opinion, be given liberty to apply in the present suit on notice to all the reversioners both immediate and remote, for permission to sell the promissory note when legal necessity arises. I accordingly give her liberty to apply.

MOHAMMAD KHAN ABBAS KHAN—CONVICT—APPELLANT
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 97, 99—Accused going to certain house to commit offence fully prepared by arming himself with dagger, in case of eventuality—Accused discovered and apprehended—Accused killing deceased—Held there was no right of private defence and that offence was murder.

M had gone to the house of A and his son G with the intention of committing an offence. M knew that the men of the family might discover him, and M went prepared for this eventuality. M went armed to this adventure with every intention of using his dagger if discovered. He was discovered and was pursued by A and G. A was killed by M and when A's son G tried to catch hold of M he was also killed:

Held, that when M had killed A the right of arrest at that moment would arise. When G was exercising that right, no right of self-defence would arise to M so as to justify his killing G. The killing of G therefore amounted to murder.

Held, also that since M had gone prepared for any eventuality by arming himself, he could not be said to have right of private defence.

Cr. A. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Attock at Campbellpur, dated March 31, 1939.

Mr. Ghulam Mohy ud-Din, for the Appellant.

Mr. Basant Krishan, for the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Young, C. J.—Mohammad Khan has been condemned to death by the learned Sessions Judge of Attock at Campbellpur for the double murder of Abdullah and Gul Mohammad. Mohammad Khan, before the occasion which gave rise to this charge, had had a somewhat chequred career. Gul Mohammad, one of the deceased, had a wife named Mst. Aishan. Mohammad Khan for some two years had an illicit intimacy with this woman. It is said that one Mst. Basran came to know of this and reprimanded both Mohammad Khan and Mst. Aishan. The result of this was that she was murdered by Mohammad Khan about one and half year before these murders. He was however acquitted after trial and continued his illicit connection with Mst. Aishan. In addition to the murder of Mst. Basran, he was committed for rape on her daughter Mst. Began as well. He was acquitted on this charge also. The woman, who was murdered, and the woman, who was raped, were relatives of the deceased. On the night of December 30, 1938 the accused Mohammad Khan came to the enclosure of the two deceased men in order to meet Mst. Aishan. He was waiting in a chhappar. One of the family of Abdullah went out to ease himself and saw a man lurking in this chhappar. He gave an alarm and several members of their family, including the two deceased, ran out of their house. They recognized Mohammad Khan. Mohammad Khan ran away and was chased by the two deceased and some of their relatives. Mohammad Khan ran a short distance and entered into the pasar of Mian Ahmad. Abdullah, the father of Gul Mohammad, was the first to get close to Mohammad Khan and endeavoured to catch hold of him. Mohammad Khan immediately produced a dagger and stabbed Abdullah in the chest. Abdullah fell down. Thereupon Gul Mohammad, Abdullah's son, seized Mohammad Khan and was also stabbed with this dagger by Mohammad Khan in the stomach. Both these men died shortly afterwards.

The prosecution called five persons who witnessed this double killing and the learned Sessions Judge has believed their evidence. There is no occasion for us to discuss this evidence, as the appellant here does not challenge the fact that he is responsible for the deaths of Abdullah and Gul Mohammad. He raised, however, a plea of self-defence when this case first came before a Bench of this Court on June 7, 1939. That Bench was of opinion that the plea of self-defence might depend upon the nature of the building in which Mohammad Khan had been trespassing and the case was adjourned for this to be ascertained. That evidence is now before us but, on the facts of the case, which were not gone into on the last occasion, we are satisfied that this point does not arise. The plea of self-defence is put as follows: Mohammad Khan was in this chhappar: the chhappar was not a building which would give rise to a charge of lurking house trespass: the offence that he was committing there did not, therefore, give a right of arrest to Abdullah and Gul Mohammad under s. 59, Criminal P. C.: when Mohammad Khan ran away and was pursued he would have every reason to consider that, if he was caught, he would either be killed or would receive grievous hurt, and, therefore, the right of sett-defence, even to the extent of killing, would arise.

Learned Counsel alluded to the two deceased men and their friends as "bloody-minded Pathans" and contended that, if persons of this description had their women interfered with, the person so interfering might reasonably expect to be killed or seriously injured, if caught. On the record, however, there is no evidence to show that the unfortunate Abdullah and Gul Mohammad or their relatives were Pathans at all, or were anything but what they are described to be in the record, namely peaceful weavers: they were, in fact, kamins. The accused Mohammad Khan is an Awan, that is, a member of the proprietary body, and we doubt if a man of the past experience and position of the appellant would have any fear of death or of grievous hurt from kamin weavers. In fact, the evidence of Mian Ahmad, one of the sons of Abdullah, is that they chased Mohammad Khan with the object of catching him and entreating him not to come to their house or otherwise persecute them in the future. We consider that, in the circumstances of this case, this is believable and we do not think that any serious apprehension, such as of death or grievous hurt, on the facts outlined above would have entered into the mind of Mohammad Khan. In addition, it is in evidence, and the learned Judge below believes it and we see no reason to disagree with him, that the pursuers of Mohammad Khan were all unarmed. This is another reason to show that Mohammad Khan would not reasonably apprehend death or grievous hurt. From this it would appear that, even supposing that Abdullah and Gul Mohammad and the others had no right to arrest Mohammad Khan for the original trespass, once Mohammad Khan had killed Abdullah, either he had no right of self-defence or, as held by the learned Sessions Judge, he had grossly exceeded that right. Under these circumstances when Mohammad Khan had killed Abdullah the right of arrest at that moment would arise. Gul Mohammad was exercising that right and the right of self-defence, therefore, would not then arise to justify the killing of Gul Mohammad by Mohammad Khan. It is in our opinion difficult to argue that the killing of Gul Mohammad at any rate did not amount to murder.

In addition to these points raised by Counsel for the appellant we hold that the right of self-defence under the circumstances of this case could not possibly have arisen. Mohammad Khan had gone that evening to the house of the deceased to commit an offence; he knew that the men of the family might discover him, and Mohammad Khan went prepared for this eventuality. The dagger used in this case is one of the most formidable weapons we have seen. The blade alone measures over a foot in length. We are satisfied from the facts of this case that Mohammad Khan went armed to this adventure with every intention of using his dagger if discovered. Under these circumstances when that which Mohammad Khan anticipated actually occurred, and Mohammad Khan in pursuance of what we consider to be a preconceived intention used that knife, we do not think that under any circumstances can it be said that he had the right of self-defence. The plea of self-defence having, therefore, in our opinion hopelessly broken down, the result is that Mohammad Khan is guilty of murder. With regard to the sentence, the facts and circumstances described above make it clear that the sentence of death in this case is thoroughly justified. We, therefore, confirm the sentence of death and dismiss the appeal.

GOBINDA DAS NATH—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
SHYAMA CHARAN NATH AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Hindu Law—Religious endowment—Shebait—Position of—If trustee—One shebait *if can sue others for contribution when obligation on part of others is proved—Co-*shebaits are co-sharers of shebaiti right and not of debutter property—Right to contribution among co-shebaits, if exists—One shebait *paying revenue to save property from sale—Other co-*shebaits, when liable for contribution.

Shebaits are managers of the debutter property and although their rights and duties to some extent resemble those of trustees they are not trustees in the true legal sense of the term inasmuch as the property of the estate is not vested in them as manager of the estate of the idol. One of the shebaits can sue the others for expenses incurred in the course of management if it can be established that there was an obligation in the other managers to share in the payment of these expenses. 65 Ind. Cas 161 (1) and Manindra Deb v. Hameswari (2), relied on, 87 Ind. Cas. 305 (3), referred to, 147 Ind. Cas. 884 (4), explained. [p. 201, cols. 1 & 2.]

The fundamental fact to be remembered in the case of an absolute debutter is that the property of the debutter estate belongs absolutely to the idol. The shebait is not the owner of the property and if there are several co-shebaits they are in no sense co-sharers in the property. The shebait has not the legal ownership, but only the title of a manager of a religious endowment. Co shebaits, are not co-sharers of the debutter property. They are co-sharers of the shebaiti right. This "possessory title" of a shebait is merely a right to possess on behalf of the idol; it is not a title which the shebait has by virtue of a right of ownership in the property. 65 Ind. Cas. 161 (1) and Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath (5), relied on, Manindra Deb v. Haneswari (2) and 141 Ind Cas. 544 (6), explained. [p. 202, col. 2; p. 203, cols. 1 & 2.]

A finding that the parties are co-sharers in the shebaiti interest cannot by itself afford sufficient basis for a decree for contribution in proportion to the shares of the parties. Unless some special contract or custom is proved, the right to contribution cannot arise. The property which is saved from sale by the payment of revenue by one of the co-shebaits is not the shebaiti interest in which the shebaits are co-sharers but the property of the idol in which they are not co-sharers. The other co-shebaits are not, therefore, liable for contribution in the absence of a special contract or custom. But even if special contract or custom is proved the co-shebaits are not liable for contribution, where the revenue is paid by one of them out of the surplus funds in his hands. [p. 203, col. 2.]

A. from the appellate decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated January 31, 193-.

Messrs. H. L. Chuckerbutty and Nalin Ch. Pal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Surajit Chandra Lahiri, for the Respondents.

Mr. Bireswar Chatterjee, for the Deputy Registrar.

Judgment.—The plaintiffs who are two in number brought this suit on the following allegations. One Kirti Chandra Dutta the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs and the defendants, dedicated certain property to a deity, Sri Sri Iswar Brindaban Behari Deb. He appointed himself the shebait and made provision for the succession to the shebaitship. The two plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 who is the principal defendant each possessed 5/12 share of the shebaiti right and the pro forma defendants possessed the remaining shares. From time immemorial each shebait used to perform the worship of the deity according to his pala or turn; each shebait also used to collect the rent of the debutter property in proportion to his share in the shebaiti interest and used to pay thereout such portion of the Govt. revenue as corresponded to his share in the shebaiti. Defendant No. 1 continually defaulted in making arrangements to pay the share of the Govt. revenue which was payable by him. The plaintiffs, in order to save the estate and to protect their shebaiti interest, have paid the entire revenue as there are no separate accounts in the Collectorate. They accordingly sued defendant No. 1 for contribution to the extent of the share of the Govt. revenue payable by him which had already been paid by the plaintiffs. The defendant denied all the statements in the plaint except that he admitted that he has a 5/21 share in the shebaiti interest. He says that in spite of his having this share the plaintiffs have kept him out of possession of the debutter property and are mismanging and misappropriating it. He alleges that the plaintiffs had ample funds of the debutter estate out of which to pay the Govt. revenue and that the suit is not maintainable in the form in which it has been brought. The trial Court gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendant appealed and his appeal has been dismissed. He now appeals to this Court. On behalf of the appellants two broad contentions were urged; firstly that the suit as framed does not lie and secondly that the judgment of the learned Judge should be set aside as it does not contain any findings regarding the material facts of the case and as it is based on an erroneous conception of the law relating to the rights of shebaits.

The first objection taken by learned Advocate for the appellant is based on the assumption that this suit is by the idol represented by some only of the shebaits against the other shebaits. It is argued that a suit in this form cannot lie, firstly, because on the facts alleged the idol has no cause of action and secondly, because the idol must sue by the entire body of shebaits or by a next friend duly appointed for that purpose. There can be no doubt that the facts alleged in the plaint do not disclose any cause of action in the idol. Obviously the idol has no interest in the quarrel between the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 regarding reimbursement. This is not a case of any complaint being made on behalf of the idol that its estate is being wasted by some of the shebaits, nor is the idol claiming anything against any third party. The present case relates to a dispute between two groups of shebaits. If the suit is by the idol then clearly it should be dismissed for want of a cause of action so far as the idol is concerned. The suit however is really not by the idol at all. The plaintiffs are described as shebaits of the idol, but the idol himself is not made a party and no claim is made on behalf of the idol. It is true that the learned Munsif has described the suit as being a suit for contribution brought by the "plaintiff deity" against the defendant but this description of the suit is erroneous and not supported by the pleadings. The misconception of the learned Munsif is probably due to an entirely confused and wrong view which his judgment shows he entertains regarding the interest which a shebait has in debutter property. Be that as it may, this suit is really one by some shebaits against another shebait for the realization of a sum of money paid by the former which ought to have been paid by the latter it is not a suit by the idol. It cannot therefore be said that the suit should fail on the ground that the plaintiff is the idol and that the plaint discloses no cause of action in the idol or on the ground that this is a suit brought by the idol improperly represented by only some of the shebaits.

There is another argument in support of the objection against the frame of the suit. It is said that one set of shebaits cannot sue another set of shebaits as they are in the position of joint trustees. There is no authority so far as I know which lays down such a broad proposition. I am not concerned with what would be the position of trustees. Shebaits are managers of the debutter property and although their rights and duties to some extent resemble those of trustees it is now well established that they are not trustees in the true legal sense of the term inasmuch as the property of the estate is not vested in them. There is a long string of decisions of the Judicial Committee which lays this down. I need mention only the case in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (1), at p. 312. This was also the view expressed recently by Mukherjee, J. in Manindra Deb v. Haneswari (2), at p. 276. I can see no reason why as manager of the estate of the idol, one of the shebaits cannot sue the others for expenses incurred in the course of management if it can be established that there was an obligation in the other managers to share in the payment of these expenses. This suit is really not one by some of the shebaits for the benefit of the deity against the other shebaits. In that case some difficulty may arise on the ground that the deity cannot be considered as being properly represented by some only of its shebaits as was pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Pramatha Nath v. Pradyumna Kumar (3). Nor is this a suit by some shebaits for the recovery of a fractional share of the rent due under a lease to the deity, such share representing the shebait's share in the shebaiti right as was the case in Baraboni Coal Concern Ltd. v. Gokulananda Mohant Thakur (4). There the Privy Council held that such a suit would not lie for two reasons, viz. (1) because the terms of the lease forbade this course and (2) because the plaintiffs being interested in the property demised merely as shebaits and not as owners they could not sue for a fractional share of what was due to the deity as a whole. The present suit, however, is of an entirely different character. The deity is not involved in this suit at all. Nothing is claimed for or on behalf of the deity. This suit arises out of an alleged breach of an obligation said to exist between the two groups of shebaits. The plaint in parts is not happily worded but this is really the nature of the suit. In Baraboni Coal Concern Ltd. v. Gokulananda Mohant Thakur (4), which was relied on by the learned Advocate for the appellants in support of his argument that the suit was not maintainable, the Privy Council did not prohibit a suit like the present one nor did they lay down any principle, which would be offended by the institution of such a suit. I hold, therefore, that the objection to the frame of the suit cannot be supported.

I next take up for consideration the objection that the judgment of the learned Judge is so unsatisfactory that it cannot be upheld. The trial Court held that the dedicated property did not constitute an "absolute debutter" estate and that the property was only partially dedicated. It held that it was secular property with merely a charge on it for the expenses of deb sheba. In this view the learned Munsif considered that the plaintiffs and defendant No. 1 were co-sharers of the property and that the plaintiffs on this footing were entitled to be reimbursed for the amount of Govt. revenue which they had paid in excess of their share. I do not think anyone could quarrel with this view, if the finding that there was only a partial dedication and the other findings of fact are correct. The learned Munsif, however, went on to express the view that even if this property had been absolutely dedicated to the idol the shebaits would have 'some sort of beneficial interest' in the dedicated property and that if one of shebaits paid the Govt. revenue he would have the same right of contribution against a co-shebait as if they were co-sharers in the property. With this view I entirely disagree for reasons which I shall give later. When the matter came up on appeal before the District Judge the parties admitted that the property constituted an absolute debutter and the case was argued on this basis. The appeal was disposed of in a few lines. The judgment is perfunctory and it indicates that the learned Judge has not appreciated the implications which would follow from the finding that the property was an absolute debutter and not secular property charged with the expenses of deb-sheba. This is what the learned Judge says :

"It is now admitted by both parties that the property is absolute debutter. Practically the only point which has been urged before me is that a suit for contribution against a co-shebait does not lie. The co-shebaits are not co-owners but it appears that in this case the co-shebaits were in possession of specific shares in the property for carrying on the shebapuja according to their palas. They have also a beneficial interest in the property in their hands. That being so it was certainly to the plaintiff's interest to make the payment in order to save the property. The payment was not only to the advantage of the defendant but being in possession of the property on behalf of the idol it was his duty to pay the revenue. In view of these circumstances, I find that the plaintiffs can claim contribution as an equitable relief. I accordingly uphold the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs. The decretal amount will be realised by the appointment of a Receiver so that the corpus of the debutter property may not be affected."

This is virtually the whole of the judgment. The fundamental fact to be remembered in the case of an absolute debutter is that the property of the debutter estate belongs absolutely to the idol. The shebait is not the owner of the property and if there are several co-shebaits they are in no sense co-sharers in the property. The shebait has not the legal ownership, but only the title of a manager of a religious endowment. This was laid down as far back as 1869 by the Privy Council in Shibessouree Debia v. Mothooranath (5), at p. 273. This view was also laid down by the same high authority in Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami (1), p. 311*. Dealing with gifts to idols their Lordships say :

"When the gift is directly to an idol or a temple the seisin to complete the gift is necessarily effected by human agency. Called by whatever name, he is only the manager and custodian of the idol or the institution. In almost every case he is given the right to a part of the usufruct, the mode of enjoyment and the amount of the usufruct depending again on usage and custom. In no case why the property conveyed to or vested in him."

It is true that there is a remark by Mitter, J. in the Full Bench decision in Manohar Mookherjee v. Bhupendranath Mookherjee (6), at p. 68 that the shebait has "some sort of beneficial interest in the debutter estate" but this does not mean that the shebait has any right of ownerships in the property or that he can be considered as a co-sharer of the property in any sense. The Full Bench was considering the rules of succession to the office of shebait laid down by the founder of a Hindu debutter and it decided that the succession to the office of shebait would be governed by the rule laid down in Jaitindra Mohan Tagore v.

Ganendra Mohan Tagore (7), inasmuch as the shebaiti right was property and as such it could not be made to devolve upon persons in a manner contrary to the Hindu Law governing succession to property. In coming to this conclusion the learned Judge discussed the question whether a shebait was a bare trustee or whether he was something more and they held that the shebait was not bare trustee, that the shebaiti interest was property inasmuch as the shebait derived some benefit from the debutter estate in the shape of bhog or some similar benefit. They nowhere held that the shebait of an absolute debutter had any right of ownership in the property dedicated. That right is completely in the deity. The trial Court relied greatly upon the case in Manindra Deb v. Haneswari (2), where it was said that a shebait had "possessory title" to the debutter property. From this the learned Munsif seemed to have drawn the inference that the shebait was a co-sharer of the property. This inference is not justified. In that case the question raised was whether a sale of debutter property for non-payment of revenue was valid. The shebaits had opened separate accounts in the Collectorate in their own names in respect to the touzi of which the deity was the proprietor. One of the touzis created by the separate account was sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by one of the shebaits. The suit was for setting aside the sale and one of the grounds taken was that separate accounts could not be opened regarding debutter property in the names of different groups of shebaits as they were not co-sharers. It was held that although the property belonged to the deity, separate accounts could be opened in the name of the shebaits as "the object of registering the names of proprietors or managers, etc. under the Land Regis. Act is not to make an inquisition into title either in revenue paying or revenue free properties but to keep a proper record of possessory titles in landed properties so as to have a knowledge of the persons who are in actual possession and are responsible for the discharge of their duties."

This "possessory title" of a shebait is merely a right to possess on behalf of the idol; it is not a title which the shebait has by virtue of a right of ownership in the property. It was held in that case that only for the purposes of paying the revenue the shebaits so far as the revenue authorities were concerned were treated as co-sharers. It was not held that the shebaits held any right as co-sharers in the property itself. In the case of co-sharers of property one co-sharer who has paid the entire revenue can certainly claim contribution from another to the extent of the Govt. revenue payable for his share in the land irrespective of any special contract or arrangement. This right arises out of the fact that the defaulting co-sharers is the owner of a part of the property for which the revenue is payable and out of the fact that his share in the property has been saved from sale by the co-sharer who paid the entire revenue. When however the parties are not co-sharers of the property the position is quite different. Co-shebaits, as I have said before, are not co-sharers of the debutter property. They are co-sharers of the shebaiti right. The Govt. revenue is payable not for the shebaiti right, it is payable for the property which belongs to the idol and not to the shebaits the revenue is due not from the shebaits but from the idol on whose behalf the shebaits as managers make the payment. The property which is saved from sale by the payment of revenue is not the shebaiti interest in which the shebaits are co-sharers but the property of the idol in which they are not co-sharers.

In these circumstances, unless some special contract or custom is proved, the right to contribution cannot arise. The rights of the parties cannot therefore be ascertained in the summary manner adopted by the learned Judge. A finding that the parties are co-sharers in the shebaiti interest cannot by itself afford sufficient basis for a decree for contribution in proportion to the shares of the parties. The Court will have to ascertain whether there was a special contract between the parties whereby a right to contribution was created or whether there was a valid custom which would give rise to such a right. If there was such a contract or custom the Court will then have to ascertain whether the plaintiffs have paid the revenue in accordance with the terms of the contract or custom. It was suggested in the written statement that there were surplus funds in the hands of the plaintiffs out of which the revenue could be paid. If that be correct the plaintiffs cannot get any reimbursement from the defendant even if there was a custom or contract as suggested above. These matters have not been dealt with by the learned Judge. This appeal will therefore have to be re-heard by him and decided in the light of the observations made above. The learned Judge's discretion to remand the case to the trial Court, if such remand is necessary, is left unfettered. The decree of the learned Judge is set aside and this appeal is allowed. The costs will abide the result.

Appeal No. 323 of 1934
November 16, 1938

VARADACHARIAR AND ABDUL RAHMAN, JJ.

P. S. SATHAPPA CHETTIAR AND ANOTHER —APPELLANTS

versus

N. K. PR. S. PR. CHOCKALINGAM CHETTIAR AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 17, 57 — Rejection of application under r. 17— Application must be deemed not in accordance with law — Rejection whether dismissal under r. 57— Application not numbered as execution petition— Inference —R. 57, applicability — Deals with case where on petition ultimately dismissed attachment has taken place.

When the Court exercises its power of "rejection" under r. 17, O. XXI, Civil P. C., the legal position is that no execution petition in accordance with law must be deemed to have been filed. This is made clear by cl. 2 of r. 17. There can therefore be no scope for the application of O XXI, r. 57. The circumstance that the application was not even numbered in the ordinary course as an execution petition clearly indicates that the executing Court had not decided to admit the execution petition at all, but merely rejected it in limine as not complying with the formal requirements of law. C. M. S. A. No. 31 of 1935, explained.

In interpreting r. 57, O. XXI, Civil P. C, it must be remembered that it deals in terms with a case where on the petition which is ultimately dismissed an attachment has taken place. In such a case the execution petition must ex hypothesi have been taken cognizance of an execution ordered and it is only at a later stage that it must be dismissed as contemplated by r. 57. The words of the rule must be applied with caution to cases in which the attachment has taken place before judgment or on a prior execution application. It is in this latter class of cases that the distinction between a "rejection" under r. 17 and a "dismissal" under r. 57 will become material.

A. against the decree of the Court of Sub-Judge, Devakottai, dated August 22, 1934.

Mr. S. Ramachandra Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. T. L Venkatarama Iyer, for the Respondents.

Varadacharlar, J.—This appeal arises out of a mortgagee's suit for sale. The only question for determination in the appeal is whether the lower Court was right in exonerating Item No. 3 from liability to the plaintiff's claim. This item was purchased by defendant No. 2 on January 26, 1933 in execution of the decree which he had obtained against the mortgagors in O. S. No. 406 of 1926 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Kumbakonam. During the pendency of that suit he had attached this item before judgment on October 5, 1926 and the mortgage in plaintiff's favour was executed only on October 28, 1926. The decree in O. S. No. 406 of 1926 was passed on September 20, 1927. If matters had not been complicated by what happened in connexion with one of the execution applications in the money suit, defendant No. 2's title would of course have prevailed against the mortgage in the plaintiff's favour. It has however been contended on behalf of the plaintiff that by reason of an order passed by the executing Court on August 1, 1932 the attachment came to an end and that defendant No. 2's title was not derived under the attachment which subsisted on the date of the mortgage in the plaintiff's favour. The lower Court has declined to accede to this contention. The same contention has been passed before us. We have come to the conclusion that the lower Court's view is correct. After obtaining the decree in O. S. No. 406 of 1926, the present defendant No. 2 took several steps in execution before we come to the petition on which the order dated August 1, 1932 was passed. But it is unnecessary to refer in detail to the earlier steps, because it has not been contended that anything that happened then has put an end to the attachment. On June 24, 1932, the application for execution marked Ex. 9 in the present case was presented. It was returned on June 30, 1932 with the following endorsement: "Sale papers to be filed. Returned, time two weeks." Two more weeks' time was taken by the petitioner's Advocate and there was a representation: but on July 20, there was a further endorsement by Court "Stamp the application." Then the application was represented on July 25, 1932. It is on this representation that the order dated August 1, 1932 was made. The office note runs in these words:

"Order of return, dated July 20, 1932, has not been complied with. Cause title has not been correctly given. No affidavit put in as to legal representative of defendant No. 1. Sale papers have not been duly put in. Amounts have not been correctly claimed."

The Court's order consists of the word "rejected." The learned Counsel for the plaintiff contends that this amounts to a "dismissal" under O. XXI, r. 57, Civil

P. C., and that the attachment has accordingly come to an end. The lower Court has held that this is only a "rejection" under O. XXI, r. 17, Civil P. C., and such an order does not attract the consequences of a "dismissal" under O. XXI, r. 57. We may mention in passing that the statement relating to the sale papers is inaccurate as pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge. Sale papers do seem to have been put in as indicated in the docket. This was in fact so stated in the next application Ex. 10 bearing the same date. The other defects pointed out in the office note, namely, as to incorrectness in the cause title and in the amounts claimed and the absence of an affidavit stating that one of the respondents was the legal representative of defendant No. 1, are, as the learned Subordinate Judge has stated, defects of the kind contemplated in r. 17 of O. XXI. That Rule provides that the Court may either allow the defect to be then and there remedied or within a time to be fixed by it or the Court may reject the application. When the Court exercises its power of "rejection" under r. 17, the legal position seems to us to be that no execution petition in accordance with law must be deemed to have been filed. This is made clear by cl. 2 of r. 17, which says that when an application is amended under the provision of r. 1 it shall be deemed to have been an application in accordance with law and presented on the date when it was first presented; the provision in cl. 4 of the same rule says that when the application is admitted, the Court shall enter in the proper register a note of the application and shall order execution of the decree according to the nature of the application.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-appellant admits that if the correct view is that there was no proper execution application before the lower Court on August 1, 1932 there will be no scope for the application of O. XXI, r. 57. But he asks us to hold that there was an application which was dealt with by the lower Court as an execution application and was dismissed by it, whether rightly or wrongly, on the ground of the decree-holder's default. We are not prepared to accede to this contention. The circumstance that Ex. 9 was not even numbered in the ordinary course as an execution petition is not without some significance. It clearly indicates that the executing Court had not decided to admit the execution petition at all, but merely rejected it in limine as not complying with the formal requirements of law. Our attention has been drawn to the judgment of Burn, J. in C. M. S. A. No. 31 of 1935, where the learned Judge held an order of rejection to amount to an order of dismissal under O. XXI, r. 57, though it appeared even in that case that the execution petition had not been given a number. So far as we can gather from that judgment the application was rejected because the decree-holder failed to supply certain particulars required by the Court. The argument based on the distinction between a "rejection" under r. 17 and a dismissal under r. 57 does not seem to have been urged before the learned Judge. What the particulars called for by the Court in that case were, we are not in a position to gather from the papers available here and we are therefore unable to say whether they merely related to formal defects within the meaning of rr. 11 to 14 of O. XXI, Civil P. C.

In interpreting r. 57, it must be remembered that it deals in terms with a case where on the petition which is ultimately dismissed an attachment has taken place. In such a case the execution petition must ex hypothesi have been taken cognizance of an execution ordered and it is only at a later stage that it must be dismissed as contemplated by r. 57. The words of the rule must be applied with caution to cases in which the attachment had taken place before judgment or on a prior execution application. It is in this latter class of cases that the distinction between a "rejection" under r. 17 and a "dismissal" under r. 57 will become material. On the facts already stated, we should have felt great hesitation in holding that if in this case there had been an order of dismissal on August 1, 1932 it could have been justified as a dismissal "for default of the decree-holder." We agree with the learned Counsel for the appellant that it may not always be open to the Court in later proceedings to consider whether the dismissal was right or wrong if that order had been allowed to become final. But where an order is passed in ambiguous terms and terms like "reject" or "struck off" are used and the Court is called upon to consider whether there was in fact an order of "dismissal" within the meaning of r. 57, the Court is entitled to take the circumstance into consideration in coming to a conclusion as to whether a dismissal was intended at all or not. We agree that there has been no dismissal in this case within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 57. The appeal therefore substantially fails. Objection has also been taken to the amount awarded by the lower Court's decree for costs in defendant No. 2's favour. It is stated that the item in which he is interested is worth only about Rs. 3,000 and that there was no justification for the lower Court assessing his costs on the basis of one-half of the plaint claim, which comes to nearly Rs. 13,000. We think this objection is well founded. We accordingly reduce the amount of Pleader's fee allowed to defendant No. 2 in the lower Court to Rs. 200 instead of Rs. 403-13-10. In other respects the lower Court's decree is confirmed and the appeal dismissed. Respondent No. 2 will be entitled to the costs of this appeal.

Where a creditor has exercised his option under s. 60, Contract Act and has appropriated the repayments in the account which he had with the principal debtor independently of the contract of guarantee, the surety cannot in law raise any objection to this appropriation and is not entitled to the benefit thereof. 9? Ind. Cas. 947 (9), 29 Ind. Cas 718 (10) and 52 Ind. Cas. 950 (11), relied on. [p. 208, col. 2.]

A contract of guarantee entered into by a surety was in these terms : "If you supply any goods to the firm on credit or on hundi and are unable to realize the price thereof from the firm, I and my property will be responsible for that amount" :

Held, that it was impossible to read into those words any condition that it was only if all remedies failed against the principal debtor that his liability would come into operation. S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated May 6, 1939.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Respondent.

Din Mohammad, J.—This appeal has arisen in the following circumstances. A firm working under the name of the "Civil and Military Sports," hereinafter known as the firm, used to purchase goods on credit from Messrs. Kuckreja Limited, hereinafter called the plaintiff. On October 16, 1934, one Said Alam stood surety for the firm in the following terms :

"Please note that if you supply any goods to the Civil and Military Sports Works, Sialkot, on credit or on hundi and are unable to realize the price thereof from the Civil and Military Sports Works, I and my property will be responsible for that amount."

After this guarantee was given, goods to the amount of Rs. 4,254 were sold to the firm. Out of this sum, the surety had signed vouchers to the amount of Rs. 1,791-9-0. On August 25, 1936 the plaintiff instituted a suit for recovery of Rs. 3,152-12-0 against both the firm and its proprietor, Sayed Mazhar Hussain, as well as against the surety, Said Alam. The suit was resisted on various grounds. The Senior Subordinate Judge after going into the accounts found that Rs. 2,909-4-0 were due to the plaintiff and consequently, he decreed the suit against both the principal debtor and the surety. Further, he made the surety's liability co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. The surety appealed to the District Judge and on March, 16, 1939, he allowed the appeal to the extent of reducing the decretal amount to Rs. 1,162, and further ordered that the liability of the surety would not be co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. Later on an application being made for the amendment of the decree, the District Judge raised this amount to Rs. 1,791-9-0. The plaintiff has preferred an appeal from the order of the District Judge and has claimed Rs. 500 more against the surety and has also challenged the order of the District Judge in not making his liability co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, while the surety has filed cross-objections challenging the decree made against him. The District Judge has made the surety liable only for the price of those goods which were purchased under his signatures; but the appellant's Counsel contends that as other goods, too, were sold to the principal debtor mainly on the basis of the guarantee offered by the surety, he should be held liable for the price of those goods also. We do not agree. The surety had expressly stated in his contract of guarantee that he would be liable only for the price of those goods which were sold under his orders and in the circumstances, it is impossible to hold him responsible for the price of those goods which were not so supplied. The plaintiff's claim therefore for an additional sum of Rs. 500 fails.

On the question of the surety's liability being co-extensive with that of the principal debtor, however, the plaintiff is on firm ground. Under s. 126, Contract Act, a 'contract of guarantee' is a contract to perform the promise or discharge the liability of a third party in case of his default; and under s. 128, the liability of the surety is co-extensive with that of the principal debtor unless it is otherwise provided by the contract. The wording of the contract of guarantee, as reproduced above, clearly indicates that no provision, express or implied, was made by the surety to the effect that his liability would not be co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. All that he said was that if the price of goods supplied to the principal debtor under his orders could not be recovered from the principal debtor, he and his property would be responsible for the payment thereof. This is exactly what is implied in a contract of guarantee. It is impossible to read into those words any condition insisted upon by the surety that it was only if all remedies failed against the principal debtor that his liability would come into operation. We are clear therefore that the liability of the surety was co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. In Bharat National Bank Ltd., Delhi v. Thakur Das Madhok (1), a Division Bench of this Court observed that the onus in such cases lay upon the surety to prove those circumstances wich took his case out of the ambit of the affirmative portion of s. 128 and if he failed to establish any contract which limited his liability, the inevitable conclusion would be that his liability would be co-extensive with that of the original debtor. In Swaminatha Pillai v. Lakshmana Ayyar (2), the surety agreed to pay the amounts advanced to the debtors in the following terms :

"If there be default in payment of the said amount and if money be due to you and in case you are not able to recover the amount so due from them, I agree to pay the same to you."

Madhavan Nair, J. held that the language of the letter did not imply a contract contrary to the general principle that a surety's liability was co-extensive with that of the principal debtor and consequently it was not necessary first to exhaust all the remedies against the principal debtor before the surety could be proceeded against. In Sree Nath v. Peary Mohan, 39 Ind. Cas. 205 (3), the surety had given the following undertaking. "If there be a default in the repayment of the loan, you may look to me for repayment." It was contended that the surety could be proceeded against only if default had taken place. Hill, J. observed that :

"The liability of the surety arises immediately on the failure of the principal debtor to perform his obligation and if the surety then likewise fails in performance, a right of action as against him immediately accrues to the creditor."

An appeal against this order was dismissed by three Judges of the Calcutta High Court. In Depak Datt v. Secretary of State (4), Jai Lal, J. remarked that in the absence of a clear intention to the contrary, it was at the option of the creditor to decide whether he should proceed against the surety or the principal debtor, inasmuch as the liability of the surety was co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. In Chokalinga Chettiar v. Dandayutha Pani Chettiar (5), the words of the guarantee were : "If he does not so pay, I shall pay you the principal and interest." A Division Bench of the Madras High Court held that the surety's liability, in the circumstances, was co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. In Parthasarathy Chetty v. Narayana Chetty, 37 Ind. Cas. 401 (6), a Division Bench of the Madras High Court observed that ss. 128, 137 and 140, Contract Act, make it clear that a creditor has a right to proceed against the surety without exhausting his remedies against the principal debtor. In Nandlal Chogalal v. Surajmal Gangaram (7) the surety had undertaken to pay the amount borrowed if the original debtors failed to pay. It was urged that those words conveyed the idea of the creditor exhausting all his remedies to recover the amount in the first instance from the principal debtors and that unless he did so, he could not recover it from the surety. Subhedar and Staples, A. A. Cs., repelled this contention. In Gokulchand Ramgopal v. Laxminarayan (8), the contract of guarantee was couched in the following terms: "If he should fail therein, then any amount so payable shall be realised from the properties hereby mortgaged." Niyogi, A. J. C., held that the non payment necessarily meant voluntary non-payment and the failure by the decree-holder to recover his amount by coercive process such as arrest of the judgment-debtor or attachment and sale of the property could not be treated as being implied by the expression used. We are in respectful agreement with the principle enunciated in these judgments and have no hesitation in holding that, as stated above, in the contract of guarantee now under consideration it was not at all implied that the creditor would be entitled to proceed against the surety only if all remedies known to law were first exhausted against the principal debtor. It was an ordinary contract of guarantee and the creditor was entitled to proceed against the surety when default had been made by the principal debtor in paying the amount within a reasonable time. Coming now to the cross-objections, Counsel for the surety urges that the contract of guarantee expressly stated that the surety would be liable only for the price of those goods which were supplied under his orders and that the documents on the basis of which he is being held liable are not orders but mere voucher except Exs. P-1 and P-2 which are the only two documents which fall under that description. There is no force in this contention. The goods supplied were entered in printed forms used by the plaintiff which may well be described as credit memos. The particulars of the goods supplied as well as the rate and price were mentioned therein and a place was set apart for the signature of the customers. Seventeen out of nineteen vouchers are on these forms. Exs. P 1 and P-2, the two documents which are referred to by Counsel for the surety as the real order forms, are not order forms at all but vouchers intended for the customers belonging to out-stations. Seeing that every one of these documents is signed by the surety, it cannot be urged that the goods mentioned therein were not supplied under his orders. We, therefore, repel this contention. Counsel next contends that the surety's liability even if it was based on the vouchers produced in Court, could not exceed Rs. 915-3-0 in as much as vouchers Exs. P-6 to P-10, P-12, P-13 and P-15 are not included in the sum sued for. Here, too, he is labouring under a misapprehension. Ex. P-7 is clearly included in the account produced by the plaintiff and Exs. P-6, P-8, P-9, P-10, P-12, P-13 and P-15 are included in the item of Rs. 692-8-0 which is shown to have been transferred from the city branch on March 1, 1935.

Counsel finally urges that the surety was entitled to the benefit of the repayments made by the principal debtor in his account. As against this, Counsel for the plaintiff rightly contends that inasmuch as the debtor did not exercise his option under s. 59, Contract Act, it was open to the creditor to exercise his option under s. 60, Contract Act, and as he had appropriated the repayments in the account which he had with the principal debtor independently of the contract of guarantee, the surety cannot in law raise any objection to this appropriation. Relumal v. Ahmad, (9) Krupasindhu Sahu v. Rajah of Kallikota 29 Ind. Cas. 718 (10) and Munuswami v. Perumal Mundlay 52 Ind. Cas. 950 (11), support this contention. The result is that we dismiss the cross-objections with costs and allow the appeal only to this extent that we set aside the order of the District Judge to the effect that the surety's liability will not be co-extensive with that of the principal debtor and restore that of the trial Court in this connection. The appellant will pay three-fourths of the surety's costs in this appeal.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Appeal from the Rangoon High Court

October 29, 1940

LORD ATKIN, LORD THANKERTON AND SIR GEORGE RANKIN

ISMAIL AHMED PEEPADI—APPELLANT

versus

MOMIN BI BI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 4, 112, 114, illus. (d) —Proof of marriage—Presumption—Discretion of Court under s. 4.

Under s. 4, Evi. Act it is open to the Court upon proof of the marriage on a certain date either to regard as proved the subsistence of the marriage on a certain subsequent date unless and until it is disproved, or else to call for proof of it, using the discretion entrusted to the Court by the first clause of s. 4 in a judicial manner according to the circumstances of the case. [p. 210, col. 1.]

Messrs. C. S. Rewcastle, K. C. and Kenelm Creedy, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Wilfred Barton, K. C. and W. Wallach, for the Respondents.

Sir George Rankin.—The appellant Ismail Ahmad Peepadi (herein called "the plaintiff") was born on May 1, 1919. On November 12, 1936—when he was seventeen years old—the suit out of which this appeal arises was brought on his behalf in the District Court of Amherst in Burma. Abdul Guffoor, his mother's elder brother, acted as next friend, and on December 8, 1936, leave was obtained to sue in forma pauperis. The purpose of the suit was to establish that the plaintiff was the legitimate son and only child of one Haji Ahmed Peepadi, an inhabitant of Moulmein, who had died there on August 8, 1935, leaving one widow Momin Bibi, the first defendant; and that under the law applicable to Sunni Muhammadans the plaintiff was entitled to a fourteen annas share in the deceased's estate. This claim had been first made, so far as appears, by a lawyer's letter dated February 18, 1936. The estate of the deceased consisted in part of a one-fourth share in the estate of his father who had died on or about January 12, 1935. The defendant to the suit, in addition to the widow, were the deceased's brother Cassim, his step-brother Hashim, and two step-sisters. They all joined in one written statement dated December 21, 1936.

The case made by the plaintiff was that Ahmed Peepadi, the deceased, had married the plaintiff's mother Mariam Bibi on or about October 20, 1916 and that though he had in the end dissolved this marriage by giving her talak this divorce had not taken place until after the appellant's birth. Save that the date of the divorce was alleged to be "some time after the birth of the plaintiff" no date was assigned to it by the plaint, but the evidence called for the appellant is to the effect that he was over a year old at the time. It is proved and admitted that on July 3, 1921, at Rangoon Mariam Bibi married again, her second husband being called Ismail. The date of her death is not stated in any of the pleadings, but is put by a witness Maung Ba (D. W. No. 11) and by the learned District Judge as about 1925.

The case made by the pleading and witnesses of the defendants is that though Ahmed Peepadi's marriage to Mariam Bibi had taken place on October 20, 1916, as alleged by the plaint, it was dissolved on November 10, 1916—within a month—by a talaknama being served upon her on her husband's behalf.

The single issue framed by the trial Court was: Is the plaintiff the lawful issue of Haji Ahmed Peepadi? Over a score of witnesses were called on each side. After the learned District Judge Mr. A. T. Rajan, who began the trial, had in March, 1937, heard twenty-two of the witnesses for the plaintiff he was succeeded by another learned Judge Mr. Ba Hla Thein, who from June to September, 1937, heard two more witnesses for the plaintiff, the plaintiff's own evidence and the oral evidence for the defendants. Judgment was given by Mr. Ba Hla Thein on October 27, 1937, in favour of the plaintiff, finding him to be the lawful issue of Ahmed Peepadi deceased, and a preliminary decree for administration of the deceased's estate upon that footing was drawn up. This, by some error which is unexplained, directed the defendants to pay to the plaintiff two lakhs of rupees, but its terms need not now be scrutinized. On appeal by the defendants to the High Court at Rangoon the decision of the trial Court was reversed by Goodman Roberts, C. J. and Dunkley, J., who held that the plaintiff had failed to prove that he was the lawful son of Ahmad Peepadi. From their decree of April 6, 1938, dismissing the suit the plaintiff has appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The matter which requires to be determined is the date of the divorce whereby the marriage of Ahmed Peepadi to Mariam Bibi was dissolved. Though the talaknama was presumably dated it has not been produced by either side and their Lordships are unable to draw an adverse inference against either party on that account. The marriage of October 20, 1916, is not disputed nor is it disputed that Mariam Bibi gave birth to the plaintiff on May 1, 1919. If the divorce took place after the plaintiff's birth s. 112 of the Indian Evi. Act would conclude the present case in his favour since no case is made of the husband and wife having had no access to each other. A question has been raised whether s. 112, applies only to cases in which the continuance of the marriage is established positively or directly, or whether it can be brought into effect by proof of the marriage and by the consequent presumption that the relationship continued. There is in India at least one authority in favour of the latter view Bhima v. Dhulappa (1). But as their Lordships have not found it necessary to call upon Counsel for the respondents and as the decision of the appeal does not in their view depend upon any question as to the burden of proof, they do not propose to discuss any general questions of this character. The presumption of continuance is dealt with by the Indian Evi. Act in s. 114 (cf Illustration (d) thereto). Under s. 4 it was open to the Court in India upon proof of the marriage of October 20, 1916, either to regard as proved the subsistence of the marriage in May 1919, unless and until it should be disproved, or else to call for proof of it, using the discretion entrusted to the Court by the first clause of s. 4 of the Act in a judicial manner according to the circumstances of the case. The right of the appellant cannot under the Act be put higher, and their Lordships will not assume that the continuance of the marriage requires for the purposes of s. 112 to be shown in any special manner.

Ahmed Peepadi belonged to one of several Moslem families who had migrated to Burma from Surat in Western India, and had settled in Moulmein, where they were known as Soorties (Suratees). His age at the time of his death in 1935 is said by his first cousin (D. W. No. 15) to have been 60 or 65 years, so that in 1916 he would be some forty years old. Mariam Bibi is said by one witness to have been at that time 20 or 22 years old, but neither her mother nor her sister mention her age in their evidence. It appears from evidence which is hazy that Ahmed Peepadi was married four times in all—his wives being taken in succession. The first was Khatiza (a relation of the witness Jeewa) who died, it would seem about 1912. Mariam Bibi would seem to have been the second. It is said by the defendant Cassim in his evidence that Ahmed Peepadi married Ainsha Bibi, daughter of Hashim Bawa Jan, in 1922, and married the first defendant Momin Bibi a year and half before his death—that is about 1933. Ahmed Peepedi seems to have lived throughout at his father's house in the neighbourhood of the Big Bazaar of Moulmein. The home of Mariam Bibi, her mother and sisters was not far away—a house numbered 52 Kwingyaung Street in the Maunggan quarter of the town.

Mariam Bibi, according to the evidence for the plaintiff, lived with her mother in Moulmein for a year or so after her divorce; then re-married and went to live in Rangoon, the plaintiff being kept with her mother at Moulmein on the request of Ahmed Peepadi who said he had no one to look after the child. It is also said by the plaintiff and Ma Halima that they lived with the defendant Cassim for a time, this arrangement being given up only because the plaintiff quarrelled with Cassim's sons, but Cassim and Ghulam Hussein Bangee (D. W. No. 19) his neighbour deny that the plaintiff ever lived with Cassim.

The years between 1921 and 1935 would seem to afford sufficient time for conduct on the part of Ahmed Peepadi showing whether he did or did not regard the plaintiff as his son. It is true that Mariam Bibi being poor and of lower social standing, his marriage with her seems to have been kept to some extent secret and he never seems to have taken her to live at his father's house. Hence the plaintiff's case does not necessarily fail because Ahmed Peepadi is not shown to have treated the plaintiff as one would ordinarily expect an only child to have been treated by his father. Though it is by no means the case made by the plaintiff or his chief witnesses, the learned District Judge thought that the effect of the evidence was that Ahmed Peepadi did not openly acknowledge the plaintiff as his son but treated him as one until his death, while all the other members of the family treated him as an imposter or outcast. Now by far the most important question in such circumstances is whether Ahmed Peepadi maintained and supported the plaintiff during all these years. The plaintiff and Ma Halima give evidence of a very sketchy character of payments made in a casual and uncertain manner, and though the matter is not given by the learned District Judge the importance which it deserves, his view is that the evidence of the plaintiff and his grandmother on this point is uncorroborated and must be left out of account altogether. The learned Judge rejects in like manner certain witnesses called to show that Ahmed Peepadi used to take the plaintiff and Mariam Bibi to Thaton. On these points the correctness of the findings of the learned Judge can hardly be disputed and the absence of reliable detailed evidence that Ahmed Peepadi was supporting the plaintiff is a great difficulty in the plaintiff's way. Evidence was given that Ahmed Peepadi after the plaintiff's birth continued to visit Mariam Bibi at 52, Kwingyaung Street in the Maunggan quarter of Moulmein, that he took some notice of the plaintiff both in 1920 and in later years, that he attended the head shaving and circumcision ceremonies of the plaintiff. The evidence about Ahmed Peepadi's visit to Mariam Bibi in 1920 is of great importance if it can be relied on; but on the other points the evidence comes to little and is of doubtful credibility in any view. One Eusoof Ebrahim Mayet (P. W. No. 5) spoke to Ahmed Peepadi's visits to Mariam Bibi in 1920 giving as his reason for fixing the date that he was working at the time on the wreck of the vessel "War Puffin," which was sunk near the Amherst lighthouse. This evidence was countered by that of a witness called Karimuddin (D. W. No. 6) who deposed that work on the ship was abandoned in May, 1920, and that Mayet could not have been at work on it until 1923. The learned District Judge who had not seen the witness Mayet accepted his evidence, but their Lordships think that it would be most unsafe to rely upon it. So too with the evidence of a Chinese merchant named Ah Choy (P. W. No. 21) who stated that ten or twelve years before (1925-7) he travelled to Rangoon with Ahmed Peepadi and Ahmed Sulaiman Jeewa; that Ma Halima and the plaintiff (then 8 or 9 years old) had a meal on the train in their company; that Ahmed Peepadi on that occasion told the witness that the boy was his son, and that he could now identify the plaintiff as the boy since the railway compartment was lighted. The occasion of the witness's visit to Rangoon seems to have made but small impression upon so excellent a memory; that it was a Viceroy's visit, and that the Viceroy was Lord Curzon were tentatively suggested, but in the end he could only say that it was some feast. By stating that he went with Ahmed Peepadi and Jeewa by special arrangement this witness does not remove himself from the very well-known category of "chance witness," whose evidence so commonly discloses a meeting with the very person whose admission is required and details how the admission was volunteered in the course of conversation. Though the "chance witness" is not necessarily a false witness, it is proverbially rash to rely upon such evidence. In the present case the evidence of the plaintiff himself as to staying at the Moulmein Club at Rangoon when Ah Choy was also there fits in ill with Ah Choy's statement, and the witness Jeewa further contradicts it.

Again, a conveyance of the house 52, Kwingyaung Street, dated January 29, 1917, is produced whereby the property is transferred by Ahmed Peepadi for Rs. 600 to Mariam and her two sisters without any mention being made either that Mariam was the wife of the transferor or of any other consideration than Rs. 600. The witness Jeewa says that the property was conveyed after and because of the divorce of November, 1916, and only after some persuasion on his part. Ma Halima says that it was conveyed after the marriage and that Jeewa had promised it at the time the marriage was being arranged. It seems that the house had formerly belonged to Mariam's father and that Ahmed Peepadi had obtained it by paying off certain charges. The learned District Judge thought that this conveyance proved that no divorce had taken place by January, 1917, because it contained no recital to that effect, but in their Lordships' opinion it is at least as cogent to say that had Mariam been the wife of the transferor she would have been so described. The plain fact is that the document of itself does not decide between the rival stories of its origin. On these three matters the evidence of Mayet, the evidence of Ah Choy and the effect of the conveyance of January 29, 1917, their Lordships prefer the view taken in the High Court to that of the learned trial Judge. They see nothing in any of these matters which can be regarded as decisive in the plaintiff's favour.

It remains, however, that a number of witnesses have spoken to the divorce having taken place when the plaintiff was a year or more old. These need not all be mentioned, but Mariam's mother, brother, sister and brother-in-law say so, and in their case the sole question is as to their truthfulness since they would certainly know the facts. Of other witnesses to this effect Mahomed Esa (P. W. No. 17) who lives in the same street as Ma Halima dates the divorce as in August, 1920, and his brother Mahomed Moosa (P. W. No. 18) says that the divorce was a year after the plaintiff's birth. Similar evidence is given by Ahmed Sultan (P. W. No. 22) but this witness is confused as to dates. This evidence regarded as a whole suffers heavily from the failure—almost, if not quite, complete—to give a specific account of the date and circumstances of the divorce. Its vagueness makes it unimpressive. However, though this and the failure of the plaintiff to afford any reliable proof of Ahmed Peepadi having provided his maintenance are matters which tell against the plaintiff's case, it is necessary to take account of the fact that the defendants' case that Mariam was divorced within a month of marriage is one to which some improbability attaches. As against the story which would put the divorce towards the end of 1920, the evidence of the defendants' witnesses must be carefully scrutinised. The main witness on this point, Ahamed Sulaiman Jeewa, gave evidence on commission in January, 1937, before the trial, and died according to the defendant Cassim on April 3, of that year. That he was a great friend of Ahmed Peepadi is not in doubt in view of Ma Halima's statements. His evidence is that fifteen or twenty days after the marriage Ahmed Peepadi came to him at his shop and complained of Mariam's conduct and said he wanted to divorce her: that two days afterwards Saya Galay (described as "priest" of the mosque) at the witness's shop wrote down at Ahmed Peepadi's dictation a talaknama which was signed by the latter. This document was given to two persons Ebrahim Hashim Poo and one Madani, now dead, who went by the name of Lulu. They were asked to go with Mamoo Ko Yacoob and serve it upon Meriam. They returned and said they had done so. Ma Halima who gave her evidence in March, 1937, said that Ko Yacoob and Lulu brought the talaknama that they are both dead, that Ebrahim Poo did not come with them, and that the talaknama was taken to Rangoon by Mariam to show to her second husband. Ma Sisha (P. W. No. 11), though called for the plaintiff, stated that she was present when the talaknama was delivered by Yacoob and two men from the Big Bazaar, that this was before the plaintiff's birth, that Lullu was one of the two men, but she did not know if Ebrahim Poo was the other. The defendant Cassim says that as Ahmed Peepadi had no children he adopted the daughter of Lulu, who was given jewellery and money by him and by his parents. Ebrahim Hashim Poo (D. W. No. 8) corroborates Jeewa and states that he went with Lulu Madani and Yacoob to Mariam's house and gave her the talaknama and that Lullu read out its contents. He is cross-examined to suggest that he is not a person who would have been entrusted with the duty of serving a talaknama. Moti Rahman (D. W. No. 12) deposed that Lulu alias Madani was his aunt's husband, that he lived in Abrew Street and died at the age of 43 about 15 years before. To this is added proof of the death register for 1919 in which is an entry of the death of one Lulu aged 43 years, a Muhammadan trader of 4, Abrew Street on December 8, 1919, and the signature of Moti Rahman as the person reporting the death. Moti Rahman was not cross-examined at all by Counsel for the plaintiff, though the point of his evidence is manifest—viz., that if Lulu died in December, 1919, he could not have taken part in serving the talaknama on Mariam Bibi when the plaintiff was a year or a year and a half old—as the trial Judge puts it, towards the end of 1920, or as the plaintiff's witness Mahomed Esa (P. W. No. 17) puts it, in August, 1920. The course adopted towards this evidence by the plaintiff and assented to by the trial judge is to suggest that the Lulu who died in 1919 was a different person from the Lulu who according to the evidence on both sides took part in serving the talaknama. This in their Lordships' opinion as in that of the High Court is unreasonable. That the Lulu who served the talaknama was called Madani, was spoken to by Jeewa before the trial began as also by Ebrahim Poo and Moti Rahman, who are not cross-examined to suggest the contrary. The person in question was known to Ma Halima and his identification could have been challenged in detail, particularly if he was the father of Amina Bibi who was said by Cassim to be living in the Peepadi's house as having been adopted by Ahmed Peepadi. To wait until the time of argument to suggest that there were two Madanis called Lulu, without making any attempt to enquire of the witnesses, is not a reasonable way to conduct such a case as the present. On this point their Lordships find themselves in agreement with the High Court in thinking that it must be taken that the entry in the death register relates to the Lulu who took part in effecting Mariam's divorce. The case made by the plaintiff as regards the date of divorce is thus displaced: it cannot have taken place when the plaintiff was a year old or at any time after 1919.

There is a still more serious challenge to the plaintiff's case in the evidence given by Maung Ba and Mrs. Buchanan at the trial, and by U Chit Swe taken on commission in September, 1937. Maung Ba says that from 1918-23 he was clerk to a Pleader called Buchanan who practised at Moulmein, and who in 1923 went to practice at Insein; that in 1920 Mariam Bibi came to Mr. Buchanan with her child and her mother to get him to take steps to obtain maintenance for the child against a barrister U Chit Swe. He says that at first Mr. Buchanan did not like to file a case against a brother lawyer but in the end she came with the witness Korban Ali (D. W. No. 18) and insisted, so that Mr. Buchanan was persuaded to send a notice to U Chit Swe. That notice or letter was typed and served on U Chit Swe by Maung Ba himself according to his evidence, and a carbon copy of it kept by Buchanan in the ordinary course of office practice has been produced by his widow (D. W. No. 1) from among the papers left by him. This is Ex. 8. It is dated April 29, 1921. It mentions that the client is Ma Yan of Maunggan Quarter, Moulmein, and it demands thirty rupees for maintenance for herself and her child. There are also two entries in Buchanan's fee book showing receipt of Rs. 10 and Rs. 5 on April 29, and May 11, of that year from Ma Yan in respect of "criminal case No. 20." Ma Yan is the Burman form of Mariam, and Maung Ba lived near to Kwingyaung Street in Maulmein and knew the plaintiff's mother, though Mrs. Buchanan did not. His evidence is corroborated by Mrs. Buchanan and by Korban Ali, who is a native of Moulmein and claims to have known Ma Halima from his childhood. It seems unnecessary to dwell on their evidence in view of the position of U Chit Swe, who admitted to having been intimate with Mariam Bibi for about a year and a half in 1917-8. He says she claimed to be the divorced wife of Ahmed Peepadi. He says she had no child then. He admits receiving a notice in terms of Ex. 8 from Mr. Buchanan. In cross-examination he stated that he had a child by a girl whom he kept for nine months in 1916, and that his brother made a lump sum payment to her; that he did not reply in writing to Mr. Buchanan's letter but spoke to him denying the claim. The learned trial Judge arrived at the conclusion that :

"It is more likely than not that the Ma Yan referred to in the Exhibit notice was the other woman with whom U Chit Swe got a child and of whose name he says he has no recollection."

Their Lordships bear fully in mind that Mrs. Buchanan said that there was a settlement in Ma Yan's matter before she left for Insein, and also that she said that the child she saw might have been under a year, but they think that the conclusion of the learned Judge is without foundation. It is necessary to alter the dates and facts given by U Chit Swe to fit in with it. That there should be two women of the same name belonging to the same quarter of Moulmein, and with a child about a year old, and that the defendants should be able to get the person alleged to have had relations with the one to pretend to have had relations with the other is very far from probable. The witnesses Maung Ba and Korban Ali may be open to suspicion of partiality and perhaps of something more, but when their evidence is taken in connection with the admitted documents and the evidence of U Chit Swe it cannot be rejected upon a gratuitous supposition as to there having been in 1920 and 1921 another woman of the same name claiming against U Chit Swe. It is true, however, that before arriving at a final conclusion on this point account should be taken of the evidence as to the name under which the plaintiff passed as a schoolboy. In 1927 and 1928 he was entered in the books of his schools as Ismail, son of Peepadi, and from 1931 to 1935 he was at the Govt. High School, Moulmein, under the name of Ismail Peepadi, son of Ahmed Peepadi. In June 1935, he was admitted as a free scholar to a Muslim school at Kandawglay in Rangoon on the request of a Mr. C. E. Dooply (P. W. No. 3) and was taken there by Ma Halima. Both Dooply and the superintendent of the school have given evidence: the former says that he asked the school to take the boy free as he was poor: the latter says that the reason explicitly given was that the boy was an orphan, and that Abdul Guffoor was dealt with as the boy's guardian. Notwithstanding that Ma Halima says that Ahmed Peepadi sent her and the boy to Dooply, the evidence of Dooply and of the superintendent does not show that Ahmed Peepadi had anything to do with the plaintiff being sent to this school, and it seems certain that he paid nothing on his account. Their Lordships cannot think it impossible that the boy should have been given the name of the mother's husband even if he were born more than two years after divorce; nor do they think it at all likely that the husband would make it his business to object, if he got to know of the name under which the boy was sent to school. Reviewing the evidence as a whole their Lordships agree with Dunkley, J. in holding it proved that in 1920-1921 Mariam Bibi was alleging that U Chit-Swe was the father of the plaintiff.

It is not necessary that any opinion should be expressed as to the reliability of the witness Haju Mahomed Ali, who says that he acted as witness at the second marriage of Mariam in 1921 and that in answer to his question she stated that she had been divorced five or six years before. Nor do their Lordships propose to discuss the value of the entries in the diary (Ex. 4) which are said to be in the handwriting of Ahmed Peepadi, or the question whether the complaint against Mariam Bibi brought in May, 1918, in the Court of the Honarary Magistrate at Moulmein was made by Ahmad Peepadi. They think it right, however, to mention the will dated July 15, 1935, which is spoken to by A. L. Roy (D. W. No. 14), Ahmed Mahomed Peepadi (D. W. No. 15) and A. S. Jeewa. This declares Cassim and Momin Bibi to be the legal heirs of Ahmad Peepadi the trestator, and that he has no other legal heir. Their Lordships agree with the High Court in thinking that no sufficient reason can be shown for treating this document as a forgery, especially in view of the fact that it was presented to the Court of a Magistrate on Septemper 24, 1935, within a few weeks of the death.

In the result their Lordships think that the High Court have taken the right view of the evidence. They do not think that it is shown that the marriage of Mariam with Ahmed Peepadi was a subsisting marriage in 1919, but consider on the contrary that the case of the defendants as to the date of the divorce must be accepted as true. They will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs.

SRIDHAR SUKUL AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY

U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934), s. 23—Section does not bar revision against appellate order under the section.

Revision is maintainable against a decision of the District Judge setting aside a decree passed by an Assistant Collector under s. 12 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act, though an appeal against the appellate order under s. 23 is barred under that section of the Act. Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hassan (1), 165 Ind. Cas. 469 (2) and 184 Ind. Cas. 768 (3), explained.

C. R. App. of the order of the District Judge of Fyzabad, dated September 11, 1937.

Mr. H. Husain, for the Applicant.

Mr. Naimullah, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision against a decision of the District Judge of Fyzabad setting aside a decree passed by an Assistant Collector under s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act.

A preliminary objection has been raised that no revision lies because under s. 23 of the Agri. Relief Act no appeal shall lie from an appellate order passed under this section. The learned Counsel for the respondent urged that because no appeal lies therefore no revision lies either. He depends on 29 Indian Appeals, page 51, (Ghulam Jilani v. Muhammad Hassan) (1), a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council. Their Lordships there said that in so far as an appeal did not lie to set aside an award revision also did not lie because if allowed it would have the same effect as an appeal, that is to say, the award would be set aside. It seems clear to us that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was not intended by them to mean that whenever an appeal did not lie, revision also did not lie but was to be restricted to cases of awards. The learned Counsel then relied on 1936. O. W. N. Page 1158 (Nihal Singh Sardar v. Ganesh Das Ram Gopal, Messrs.) (2), 1939 O. W. N., page 970 Mahipal Singh Thakur v. Kamta Prasad (3), and 1940 O. W. N., page 169, Shanti Saroop v. Mohammad Abdul Huq (4), but these cases were cases of s. 5 of the Agri. Relief Act and the words used there are "the decision of the Appellate Court shall be final". It was held by this Court that the word "final" was to be taken as absolutely final and therefore it excluded a revision also. The words that appeear in s. 23 are however "no appeal shall lie from an appellate order passed under this section." It appears to us that if the intention of the Legislature was the same about s. 23 as about s. 5 a similar expression would have been used, so that cl. 2 of s. 23 would have read "an appellate order passed under this section shall be final". As these words were not used but it was only enacted that no appeal would lie we think that the difference in expression was deliberate with the result that revision is not excluded.

Considering the revision on the merits we find that the learned District Judge has held that "Section 12 of the Agri. Relief Act only speaks of a mortgage and nothing else and a charge is certainly not a mortgage though it may be impossible to point out fully the difference between the two."

Just before he states this he says that in his opinion the difference between a charge and a mortgage is a difficult and an obstruse question which the Legislature cannot have meant to have left to be decided by the Rent Court Officers. The learned District Judge in other words says that s. 12 refers to mortgages and not charges and so charges must be excluded but at the same time he says that the Court that has to apply s. 12 is not meant by the Legislature to distinguish between a charge and a mortgage. We cannot possibly understand how then the Court that has to apply s. 12 can do so when it has to apply s. 12 to mortgages and not to charges but is not allowed to come to a conclusion whether a particular document is a mortgage or creates a charge. If about a document one party alleged that it was a charge and the other party alleged that it was a mortgage, we cannot guess how the learned District Judge would deal with such a case. We can only presume that if both parties admitted a document to be a charge it would have to be treated by the Court as a charge and if both called it a mortgage it would be treated as a mortgage. As we have said, if they did not agree some one would have to decide what in fact it was. In the present case a certain deed has been described as a deed of further charge but this does not mean that it was meant to be regarded as a charge as opposed to a mortgage in the strict technical sense of these words. In fact the deed which has been called a deed of further charge in this case must be considered by the learned District Judge and he must decide whether in his opinion it is really an addition to the original mortgage so that it may be considered in law to be a mortgage or whether this deed is only a charge in the technical sense of the word.

We, therefore, allow this revision and set aside the decision of the lower Appellate Court and order it to decide the appeal after considering the document and then coming to the conclusion whether s. 12 of the Agri. Relief Act applies to such a document or not. The appellants are granted their costs of this appeal.

SECRETARY OF STATE—RESPONDENT

Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894), s. 23—Market value of acquired land, how to be determined.

It is wrong to say that only the lease money of the land in dispute could be considered for arriving at its value and not the lease money accruing from the lands in the vicinity. The market value of the acquired land is to be ascertained from recent instances of sale in the same or in the adjoining locality and from the average rental of these and similar lands in the vicinity. Fink v. Secretary of State (1), followed.

C. A. from the order of the Additional District and Session Judge, Peshawar at Kohat, dated January 17, 1939.

Messrs. Abdul Rab Nishtar and S. Ajit Singh, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Latif Khan, for the Crown.

Mir Ahmad, J.—Some land has been acquired for the construction of quarters for Indian Commissioned Officers in the Kohat Contonment. The land belongs to Mst. Madara and is within the barbed wire. It is situated close to the District Courts. The Collector awarded Mst. Madara Rs 3,575 as the price of the land. Rs. 170-4-0 were given to her for trees and Rs. 82-8-0 for standing crops by compromise. She was also given 15 per cent. compensation for forcible acquisition. The total came to Rs. 4,389-8-0. Musammat Madara asked for a reference to Court and the case was consequently put up to the District Court at Peshawar and was tried by the Additional District Judge. The land in dispute consists of 13 kanals, 19 marlas chashmi dofasli and 14 marlas chashmi yakfasli. The Collector adopted the rate which was paid in 1926 for obtaining the land for European cemetery in the neighbourhood of the land in dispute. It is situated at 100 paces from it. The land was purchased at Rs. 250 per kanal. The Collector fixed this rate so far as the chashmi dofasli land was concerned. The price of chashmi yakfasli land was assessed at half of this rate, i. e., Rs. 125 per kanal. The Additional District Judge after going into detail of the leases and sales put forward by the objector came to the conclusion that the rate accepted by the Collector for chashmi dofasli land was correct. He, however, found that chashmi yakfasli land should also be paid for at the same rate. The Judge therefore added Rs. 100-8-0 to the price awarded by the Collector and assessed the total price at Rs 4,490 which includes the price of trees, 15 per cent, compensation, etc.

Musammat Madara has come up to this Court and has asked for an increase of Rs. 4,000 in the price of the land. Some sales and leases were referred to but we do not propose to discuss them, because they have no bearing on the case. The only transaction which is relevant is a lease by the Cantonment authorities in favour of one Nadir Ali Shah of 7 kanals 12 marlas of land. The lease was executed in 1930 for Rs. 265 a year and the lease money was raised to Rs. 270 in 1935. It was not denied before us that this land adjoined the land in dispute. This lease was considered by the learned Additional District Judge. He however rejected it on the ground that the lease money of the land in dispute culd only be taken for calculating its value and not the lease money of the lands in the neighbourhood. No other criticism was offered by the learned Additional District Judge to this piece of evidence. Their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court have held in Fink v Secretary of State (1) that the market value of the acquired land is to be ascertained "from recent instances of sale in the same or in the adjoining locality and from the average rental of these and similar lands in the vicinity."

We agree with the view of the Calcutta High Court and think that the learned trial Judge was wrong in holding that only the lease money of the land in dispute could be considered for arriving at its value and not the lease money accruing from the lands in the vicinity. The learned Counsel for the respondent has not been able to impeach the genuineness of the transaction of lease executed by the Cantonment Board in favour of Nadir Ali Shah. We think that this is a correct precedent for us to follow. The learned Counsel for the respondent has argued that the lady, who is the owner of the plot in dispute, has not been able to get as much money out of it as the Cantonment Board have been receiving for the land given to Nadir Ali Shah. In support of this argument he has relied on the statement of the sadar qanungo, who has valued the annual income of the land in dispute at a much lower figure than that obtained by the Cantonment Board from Nadir Ali Shah. He has used this argument to prove that the land in dispute is inferior to that given to Nadir Ali Shah.

We do not agree with him in this contention. The plaintiff is a widow and a pardahnashin lady. She has perforce to engage a tenant. This disability, is bound to reduce the return which she gets from the land as compared to the income derived by the Cantonment authorities for their piece of land. Capitalising the lease money by taking 20 years income, which is usually done the price of the land leased to Nadir Ali

(1) 34 C 599.

Shah comes to Rs. 5,400, that is to say about Rs. 710 per kanal. At this rate the price of the land in dispute is higher than the sum claimed by the appellant. We therefore accept the appeal and enhance the price of the land in dispute from Rs. 4,490 to Rs. 8,490. The appellant shall in addition get 15 per cent. compensation of Rs. 4,000 which will make the total Rs. 9 090. She shall also get her costs on Rs. 4,000 in this Court as well as in the Court below. Pleader's fee Rs. 150.

First Appeal No. 151 of 1939

BEAUMONT, C. J., MACKLIN AND WASSOODEW, JJ.

GURAPPA GURUSHIDDAPPA NEELI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
AMARANGJI VANICHAND—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT

Decree—Consent decree—Construction—Deed directing defendant to pay lump sum to plaintiff by annual instalments—Whole amount made payable on default of two instalments—Charge for decretal amount created upon shares in suit—Plaintiff to recover amount by sale of shares in case of default by defendant—Shares sold on default but sale proceeds insufficient to satisfy decree—Plaintiff, if can proceed against other property to recover balance—Personal decree, if necessary—Object of charge created, stated—Analogy of mortgage decree, whether applicable to consent decree.

The plaintiff made an advance to the defendant, and certain shares were charged to secure the amount. The plaintiff sued to recover the amount due, and there was a consent decree which directed the defendant to pay to the plaintiff a lump sum by yearly instalments. Then there was a default clause making the whole amount payable on default of payment of two instalments. Further on it was provided that a charge in favour of the plaintiff for the decretal amount was kept upon the suit shares, and then the decree went on. "If defendant fails to pay the monies in time, the same should be recovered by sale of the said shares." The defendant failed to pay the instalments on the due dates, and the shares were sold but as the sale proceeds were not sufficient to satisfy the decretal amounts the plaintiff took out the darkhast to recover the balance of the debt by attachment and sale of a house belonging to the defendant:

Held, that the charge created by the decree was for the protection of the plaintiff against the rights of intervening creditors, who might attach property of the judgment-debtor whilst the plaintiff's hands were tied by the time given for payment of instalments and its object was not to regulate the order in which the defendant's property was liable to be attached. Clause (1) of the decree, amounted to an order for payment, and could be enforced by any of the methods authorized by the Civil P. C., including attachment and sale of any of the defendant's property. There was nothing in the rest of the decree which expressly took away or limited that right, and the plaintiff could not, therefore, be said to have deprived himself of that right or delayed its enforcement by implication merely because he had protected himself against other creditors by taking a charge on part of the defendant's property. Hence the plaintiff, having failed to realize the whole amount of his debt by sale of the charged shares could proceed under the decree to attach any other property of the judgment-debtor which might be available. No personal decree for the balance, was consequently necessary [p. 218, col. 1.]

Held further, that the analogy of mortgage decree could not be applied to the consent decree which must be construed according to the terms of the language used. 58 Ind. Cas. 377 (1) and Raychand Jivaji v. Basappa Virappa (2), Overruled, 51 Ind. Cas. 929 (3), approved and distingnished, 190 Ind. Cas. 529 (5), distinguished. [p. 218, col. 2.]

F. A. from the decision of the First Class, Sub-Judge, Dharwar, in Special Darkhast No. 212 of 1936.

Messrs. S. A. Desai and A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for the Respondent.

Beaumont, C. J.—This is an appeal from a decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Dharwar, and it raises a question in execution, which has caused some difference of opinion, in this Court, and is of very common occurrence. In 1928, the plaintiff made an advance of Rs. 8,000 to the defendant, and certain shares were charged to secure the amount. In 1931 the plaintiff sued to recover the amount due, and on November 28, there was a consent decree. The decree recites the plaint, and then (in cl. 1) directs the defendant to pay to the plaintiff a lump sum of Rs. 9,000 by yearly instalments of Rs. 2,000. Then there is a default clause making the whole amount payable on default of payment of two instalments. Then is it provided that a charge in favour of the plaintiff for the decretal amount of Rs. 9,000 is kept upon the suit shares, and then the decree goes on: "If defendant fails to pay the monies in time the same should be recovered by sale of the said shares." The defendant failed to pay the instalments on the due dates, and in 1934 the shares were sold and realized Rs. 4,350. In 1936 the plaintiff took out the present Darkhast to recover the balance of the debt by attachment and sale of a house belonging to the defendant. It is contended by the defendant that the plaintiff, having taken a charge on specific shares, has abandoned his right to recover the money by any other means. Alternatively, it is said that if he desires to recover the money by any other means, and has a right to do so, he must first of all proceed to get a personal decree for payment. The learned Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the plaintiff.

Now, taking the decree as it stands, and without reference to authorities in the first instance, I should have thought that its meaning was perfectly plain. It is very common to have a consent decree for payment of money making the amount payable by instalments; but if the creditor agrees to instalments, he is, of conrse, abandoning his present right to execute the decree for the full amount due, and to compensate him for that it is very common for the debtor to give him a charge on property. In the present case, property, namely the shares, had been charged beforehand, but I think the same principle would apply if the charge had been created in the first instance by the decree. But in taking a charge it seems to me that what the creditor is looking to is his protection against the rights of intervening creditors, who may attach property of the judgment-debtor whilst the plaintiff's hands are tied by the time given for payment of instalments. That seems to me to be the object of a charge; not to regulate the order in which the defendant's property is liable to be attached. Taking cl. (1) of this decree, it is perfectly plain that it amounts to an order for payment, and if such clause stood alone, it could be enforced by any of the methods authorized by the Civil P. C., including attachment and sale of anv of the defendant's property. There is nothing in the rest of the decree which expressly takes away or limits that right, and I can see no reason why it should be held that the plaintiff by implication has deprived himself of that right or delayed its enforcement, merely because he has protected himself against other creditors by taking a charge on part of the defendant's property. Therefore, if I had to construe the decree without reference to authorities, I should say that there was no doubt whatever that the plaintiff, having failed to realize the whole amount of his debt by sale of the charged shares, can proceed under the decree to attach any other property of the judgment-debtor which may be available. However, there are undoubtedly two cases of this Court, which are against that view. There is, first of all, a decision of an Appellate Bench in Janardan v. Krishnaji (1). The learned trial Judge distinguished that case by pointing out that it was a mortgage suit, as no doubt it was, but in that mortgage suit there was a consent decree, very much in the same terms as the decree in the present suit. Shah, J. in the Court of first instance, said this (p. 956*):

"I see no reason to limit the plain meaning of the decree as to the payment of the full amount in instalments by the provision as to the realisation of the full amount by the sale of the mortgaged property in default of the payment of any two instalments. The decree directs the defendants to pay the full amount, and the obligation is not in my opinion limited by the provision relating to the sale of the mortgaged property."

I think that is right; but in appeal Sir Norman Macleod, C. J. said (p. 958*):

"It seems clear to me that there must be a decree personally made against the mortgagor before it can be executed against property other than the mortgaged property. The decree in this case cannot be said to be a personal decree merely because it directs that the defendants should pay the amount."

With all respects to the learned Chief Justice, I do not follow the last proposition. A decree which directs payment of the amount is prima facie a personal decree. The Court in that case purported to act by analogy to O. XXXIV, Civil P. C. Now O. XXXIV, is a Code, which regulates the enforcement by suit of mortgages, and the scheme of the order is that in the preliminary decree there is a direction on the mortgagor to pay the amount found due into Court; on payment there is to be redemption, and on failure to pay, the mortgaged property can be ordered to be sold; and then there is liberty reserved to the mortgagee to apply for a personal decree against the mortgagor for any balance not realized. That is the general scheme of the Code, and where one is dealing with a decree in a mortgage suit relating to immovable property, one must follow that scheme. I agree that one must read the decree as a whole, and if a preliminary mortgage decree provided, in the first instance, that the mortgagor should pay the amount, not into Court but to the mortgage, the Court would not be justified in construing that as an executable decree for payment, because, taking the decree as a whole, it provides that there is not to be a personal decree for payment until the mortgaged property has been sold and a deficit has resulted. But I cannot see any reason why one should apply the analogy of a mortgage decree to a consent decree which must be construed according to the terms of the language used.

Mr. Desai contends that the principles of

(1) 22 Bom. L R 953; 58 Ind. Cas. 377; A I R 1920 Bom. 95.

*Pages of 22 Bom. L. R.—[Ed.]

O. XXXIV, should be applied. I do not quite know what is meant by the principles of O. XXXIV. It would have been quite easy to provide in the Code that in the preliminary decree there should be a personal judgment for the balance remaining due after sale of the mortgaged property. There is no principle of equity, which I know of, which would make such a provision improper; but it happens that that is not the scheme of the Code framed by the Legislature. There is however to my mind nothing inequitable in construing an agreement between parties so as to provide that the mortgagor shall pay to the mortgagee anything remaining due after sale of the mortgaged property, or that there shall be a personal decree for payment, which may be enforced before recourse is had to the mortgaged property. There is nothing inequitable in requiring that a debtor shall pay his debt immediately after the liability has been ascertained. In my opinion, the decision of Shah, J. in Janardan v. Krishnaji (1) was right, and the decision of the Appellate Court was wrong. Then there is another case, to which we have been referred, a very recent decision of this Court in a Letters Patent appeal from a decision of N. J. Wadia, J. [(Raychand Jivaji v. Basappa Virappa (2).] In that case there was a consent decree under which the defendant was directed to pay a certain sum by instalments; there was no default clause, but certain immovable property was charged for the amount. It may be that the absence of a default clause creates a distinction; the case has not yet been reported, and I do not know the exact facts. But Broomfield, J. in giving the judgment of the Court refers to Janardan v. Krishnaji (1) and to other cases, and he concludes in these words (p. 1122*):

"In every case it must be essentially a question of construction of the decree, but unless the contrary appears, we think the ordinary rule should be that when a charge is created by act of parties the specification of the particular fund or property negatives a personal liability and the remedy of the holder of the charge is against the property charged only or at any rate against the property charged in the first instance. In my opinion, that is the way in which the decree in this case should be construed."

I am unable to agree with that conclusion. To apply such a rule of construction to a consent decree for payment of money would seem to me to be wrong in principle, and inexpedient in practice. In arranging consent decrees of the nature in question, it is usually the creditor, and not the debtor, who is master of the situation, and I can see no justification for holding that by taking a charge upon specific property, the primary object of which, as I have pointed out, is to secure him against other creditors, the creditor abandons his right to proceed against other property of the debtor. Such an abandonment should not be presumed in the absence of language making clear the intention to abandon. On the other hand, to hold that the creditor can only attach other property after obtaining a fresh order for payment is to ignore the fact that the decree already contains an order for payment. The only effect of the latter construction would be to impose further delay and additional expense upon the creditor. In this country experience shows that there are opportunities in plently afforded to a judgment-debtor to delay his creditor, and I am not disposed to add to the number.

We were referred to other cases which can be distinguished. Ambalál Bapubhai v. Narayan Tatyaba (3) which was followed in Gurpadappa v. Karveerappa (4) is rather in favour of the view which I take, but is no doubt distinguishable. In both those cases there had been a decree and a charge created by the decree on immovable property, and it was held that the charge could be enforced by execution of the decree without the necessity of filing a separate suit. The cases were both based on the view that the decree, which for practical purposes was in the same terms as the present decree, created a personal liability for payment of the amount due, and to that extent the cases are in favour of the view which I take. The decision of Kania, J. in Gurupadappa Mallappa v. Basappa Shiddappa (5) is again distinguishable. The learned Judge there held that the particular decree, with which he had to deal, was in the nature of a preliminary mortgage decree, and that being so, the provisions of O. XXXIV, applied to it. It is not necessary to consider whether I should have come to the same conclusion as to the construction of that particular decree, but I agree that if once you find that the decree is in its nature a preliminary mortgage decree, the provisions of O. XXXIV, apply, and there

It does not in terms restrict the right of the creditor to proceed against other property, and it does contain a decree for personal payment. It can therefore be executed against the house of the judgment-debtor. In my opinion therefore the decree appealed from was right. The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

RAKHALANANDA THAKUR (DECEASED) AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Grant—Presumption—Britti granted by founder of estate, in his lifetime — His successors continuing grant for generations —Presumption as to permanent grant or charge on estate, if arises — Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 2—Repeal by Common Law of evidence — Effect — Hearsay evidence — Admissibility—Discretion of Judge in respect of admissibility of evidence.

Where the original founder of an estate granted a britti in his lifetime ; and his successors from pious motives continued the grant for several generations to the plaintiffs' successors who continued to be the family spiritual guides, and served and worshipped the family gods.

Held, that these facts alone were not sufficient to raise a presumption of any lost grant either for the permanent gift of britti or for its being constituted a charge on the estate.

It is entirely erroneous to state that "the principle of exclusion adopted by the Evi. Act, should not be applied so as to exclude matters which may be essential for the ascertainment of truth." This mode of regarding the law of evidence is very unsound and hearsay evidence which does not fall under s. 32, Evi. Act, cannot be admitted upon such principle. What matters should be given in evidence as essential for the ascertainment of truth it is the purpose of the law of evidence whether at common law or by statute to define. Once a statute is passed which purports to contain the whole law it is imperative. It is not open to any Judge to exercise a dispensing power, and admit evidence not admissible by the statute because to him it appears that the irregular evidence would throw light upon the issue. The rule of evidence, whether contained in a statute or not, are the result of long experience choosing no doubt to confine evidence to particular forms, and therefore eliminating others which it is conceivable might assist in arriving at truth. But that which has been eliminated has been considered to be of such doubtful value as on the whole to be more likely to disguise truth than discover it It is therefore discarded for all purposes and in all circumstances. To allow a Judge to introduce it at his own discretion would be to destroy the whole object of the general rule. [p 223, col. 1.]

Messrs. J. Nillard Tucker, K. C. and W. Wallach, for the Appellants.

Sir. Thomas Strangman, K. C. and Mr. C. Bagram, for the Respondents.

Lord Atkin—This is an appeal from the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal who affirmed a decree of the Additional District Judge 24-Parganas in favour of the plaintiffs the present respondents. The plaintiffs are a distinguished family of Brahmin priests, Thakurs of Shrikhanda ; and their claim is for a declaration that they are entitled to a charge on the Kasimbazar Raj Estate represented by the defendants for an annual britti of Rs. 4,000 payable by half-yearly instalments and for a money decree for arrears amounting to Rs. 13,260. The defences to the suit are in substance that the plaintiffs never had a legal right to the britti, and that in any event it was not charged upon the estate. These issues were raised in the proceedings and have been decided in favour of the plaintiffs in both Courts. The history of the claim begins with the founder of the Raj fortunes one Krishna Kanta Nandy. He appears to have been a Hindu of comparatively humble origin who by his abilities attracted the attention of Warren Hastings, became his Diwan, and died in the year 1778 proprietor of large possessions in about twelve different districts and in Calcutta. After his death his son Loknath appears to have been given the title of Maharajah of Kasimbazar by Warren Hastings, and the property to which he and his descendants have succeeded is known as the Kasimbazar Raj Estate. The case of the plaintiffs is that Krishna Kanta Nandy established two deities Radhagovinda and Lakshminarayan at Shrikhanda the plaintiffs' home and granted the plaintiffs a britti of Rs. 4,000 for the worship of the two deities: and at the same time charged his Raj estate with the payment of the britti. The plaintiffs and their successors it is said became the gurus of Krishna Kanta Nandy and his family and its successors:

they have conducted the worship and service of the deities ever since.

The learned Assistant District Judge found that the plaintiffs had established the whole of their case. A permanent grant of britti was made by Krishna Kanta Nandy who had established at the home of the plaintiffs the two deities and provided the britti for securing their service and worship. To secure the permanent payment he had charged it upon the estate. The learned High Court Judges were not able to find that Krishna Kanta Nandy had established the deities, but they concurred in the finding that he had made a permanent grant, and had charged it upon the Kasimbazar estate.

Their Lordships are of opinion that no evidence was given sufficient to support these findings. As they will point out later both Courts erred in admitting as valid evidence of tradition given by and on behalf of the plaintiffs: and when the admissible evidence is considered there is none to justify the finding of a permanent grant or of a charge. The evidence establishes the following facts: that from the time of Krishna Kanta Nandy the sum of Rs. 4,000 has been paid annually to the plaintiffs and their successors as britti: that they have continuously conducted the worship and service of the two deities: and that until about the year 1897 such worship was conducted on behalf of the holder of the Raj and that the plaintiffs were the gurus of the family. The succession of the Raj family is relevant. Krishna died in 1778 and was succeeded by his son Loknath who first received the title of Maharajah. There is nothing to indicate that this is an impartible estate. Indeed what little evidence there is on the point indicates the contrary, but in fact there only appears to have been one person at a time entitled in the line of descent. Loknath was succeeded by Harinath who died in 1832, who was succeeded in turn by his son Krishnanath, who died in 1844 without issue. His widow Rani Swarnamayi succeeded to the estate and possessed it for over 50 years until her death in 1897. On her death the estate reverted to Krishnanath's mother Rani Hari Sundari. She, who must have been a very old lady at the time, in the same year transferred her interest to the next successor Manindra Chandra Nandy the son of her daughter Gobinda. The estate thus passed out of the direct male succession. Manindra had for his gurus another family the Thakurs of Jogeswardi and had family deities other than Radhagovinda and Lakshminarayan. In 1923 Manindra Chandra Nandy executed a trust deed in favour of the firm of Ogilvy Gillanders & Co. and certain named trustees with the object that the firm should raise a loan for the Maharajah of £6,75,000 and pay off certain scheduled incumbrances and unsecured liabilities. The bulk of the Raj estate was signed to the trustees by way of mortgage or trust to keep down the necessary charges. and create certain reserve funds including a sum of three lacs which the Maharajah estimated would be sufficient for his personal household expenses. The Maharajah covenanted inter alia that the property was free from all incumbrances other than those mentioned in the 4th Schedule to the deed which did not include the charge now alleged to exist. In February 1929 on the application of the Maharajah Manindra the estate was taken under the management of the Court of Wards by whom it is now managed subject to the provisions of the deed of trust of 1923. In 1929 the Maharajah Manindra died and was succeeded by the present Maharajah Sris Chandra Nandy. On April 10, 1929 the plaintiffs presented a petition to the General Manager of the Kasimbazar Raj Ward's Estate alleging that they had been receiving for generations from the estate an annual annuity allowance of Rs. 4,000, that they had been spending the said allowance as well as their own income towards the wordship of several deities and other acts of diety: and asking for the payment of one year's arrears. It may be noticed that in this letter there is no suggestion of the establishment by Krishna Kanta Nandy of the two specified deities, or of a permanent grant by him, or of the creation of any charge. This request was refused by the Manager of the Court of Wards and on June 28, 1929, the Maharajah Manindra wrote to him having been told by the plaintiffs of the refusal.

"Kasimbazar Rajbari,
June 28, 1929.

My dear Mr. Burrows,

I have read your letter No. 575 ES16-108 dated May 4, 1929 (a copy of which was forwarded to me) as also another letter No. 1565ES dated June 15, 1929 (shown to me), sent in reply to the letters of Srijut Rakhalananda Thakur of Shrikhanda.

The annual birtti payable to our spiritual guides, the Thakurs of Shrikhanda amounting to Rs. 4,000 (four thousand) has been paid by the Raj family of Kasimbazar from generation to generation, and I have been paying it all along during my management.

During Mr. Lyall's administration as he did not like to meddle with religious and spritiual matters, he left the matter with me of course leaving sufficient fund in my hands.

It is not of the nature of personal charity but has always been regarded as a charge upon the estate. I have nothing to say regarding your decision. You may hold it or alter it if there be good reason for doing so, but this britti in my opinion, is legally enforceable against the Kasimbazar Raj Estate.

In this connection I would like to refer you to my latter No. 1/XII-4/2-G dated April 19, 1929 in which I mentioned the recurring permanent grants which in addition to other commitments I am bound to make viz. 1. To spiritual guides of Shrikhanda and Jageswardihi, 2. Debkariya and Debsheba &c. and to my letter to the Secretary Board of Revenue dated February 2, 1929 with statements therewith attached, a careful perusal of which will clearly convince you that the above demand is a charge really upon Kasimbazar Raj Estate and incidentally upon me as proprietor of the estate and not in my personal capacity.

The following is an extract of the relevant protion of my letter to Mr. Fawcus, Secretary Board of Revenue dated February 2, 1929 for your easy reference.

'I should like to state, however, in this connection that whereas I have these additional sources of income which are not covered by the Trust Deed I have at the same time additional demands on me for Debkariya, Brittis to spiritual guides and Brahmin Pundits and the maintenance of educational institutions which have been recognised by the family from generations past.'

I shall be glad if you will consider all the facts relating to this matter and recommend to the Court for acceptance of the charge of paying Rs. 4,000 annually to the Thakurs of Shrikhanda which is in reality a charge on the Kasimbazar Raj Estate.

Yours sincerely,
Manindra Chandra Nandy.

L. B. Burrows, Esqr., B. A., Manager, Kasimbazar Raj Wards' Estate,
2/1, Russell Street,
Calcutta."

So far from regarding this letter as proof of a legal charge their Lordships are of opinion that it tends to negative such a claim. The Maharajah is obvoiusly seeking to limit his personal liabilities: and is treating the continual payment of this britti as an instance of the "additional demands on me for Debkariya and britti for spiritual guides and Brahmin Pundits and the maintenance of eductional institutions which have been recognised by the family from generations past." It seems obvious that the continuous recognition is to him another way of saying it has always been regarded as a charge upon the estate. It would not be suggested that the other "additional demands" in which this claim is included involved legal charges upon the property. It seems obvious the letter of the Maharajah, written in the circumstances set out in the letter, could not possibly outweigh the express convenant in the deed of 1923 that there were no incumbrances other than those scheduled.

In the result, therefcre, there is no evidence at all of the establishment of the deities by Krishna, of any permanent grant by him of the britti, or of the creation of any charge upon any property. It is very significant that though the plaintiffs appear to have very complete records of their transactions from early times no document is produced making or evidencing the grant or charge: and this alone is sufficiant to cast doubt upon the claim. Moreover while it would not be unusal to assign particular lands as the source from which britti was to be paid and in this sense create a charge it would seem to their Lordships very improbable that a vast estate should be charged as a whole with the payment of Rs. 4,000 a year. Their Lordships are not prepared to say that a valid charge could not be created upon what could be defined to be the whole of a man's property at the date of the charge. In the present case it should be noticed that not only is the charge claimed and decreed a charge upon the estate, as it at present exists; but it has been decreed without any condition that the families of the grantor or the plaintiffs should continue to exist, or that the plaintiffs should continue to perform the service and worship, sheva and puja, of the two named deities. This defect in the decree was admitted by Counsel for the respondents who submitted an amended form of decree which would remedy the mistake. But for present purposes the point is the difficulty the plaintiffs are in establishing any grant or charge with any sufficient certainty. Naturally if the continuous payments could not be explained without asserting some legal origin which would create the rights claimed, any Court would feel inclined to presume the necessary legal origin. But in the present case there are no facts which require a presumption of any lost grant either for the permanent gift of the britti or still less for it being constituted a charge. It appears to their Lordships the natural inference from the known facts that the original founder of the estate granted the britti in his lifetime: and that his successors from pious motives continued the grant to the plaintiff's successors who continued to be the family spiritual guides, and served and worshipped the family gods. Without assuming any legal obligation it would in the circumstances have been strange if the britti had not been continued. The learned trial Judge working backwards, as it would seem from the fact that the payment was continued for several generations, has imputed to the founder the intention that it should continue for all those generations: and has so drawn the inference that he did in fact grant a permanent britti; and took steps to secure its permanence by creating a charge, the uncertainty of the terms of which their Lordships have already discussed. The trial Judge it is true found that Krishna Kanta Nandy established the deities. The High Court have found that it would not be safe on the evidence to hold that the plaintiffs had established the case that the two deities were so established. Nevertheless they go on to say that they cannot express the definite opinion that the trial Judge was not right in his inference that the deities were so established. This conclusion appears to involve some confusion of thought. If it was not safe from the evidence for the Appellate Court to draw a particular inference it was not safe for the trial Judge to draw the inference. Not safe, must mean that there is not evidence from which the inference can reasonably be drawn. There are cases in which evidence is so well balanced that an inference either way can reasonably be drawn. In such cases the appellate tribunal may select the inference they choose: but they can have no equal choice between an inference that is safe, and one that is unsafe.

But the conclusions of the two Indian Courts are not based solely on the evidence of which the substance has been stated above and which their Lordships have held to be insufficient. Both Courts relied on the evidence of some of the plaintiffs' witnesses speaking of a tradition in their family that Krishna Kanta Nandy had established the two deities, had granted the britti in perpetuity and had made it a charge upon the estate. Obviously this is hearsay evidence, and it is equally clear that it is not one of the claims of hearsay evidence admissible under the provisions of s. 32 of the Indian Evi. Act. The members of the High Court recognised this but they made a statement as to the law of evidence which their Lordships feel bound to state is entirely erroneous. They say, "It is to be noticed in this connection that s. 2 (1) of the Indian Evi. Act repeals the whole of the English Common Law on evidence so far as it was in force in British India before the passing of the Indian Evi. Act, and that provision of the law in effect prohibits the employment of any kind of evidence not specifically authorised by the Act itself."

This is of course correct. But they continue,

"It must be recognised however, that the principle of exclusion adopted by the Indian Evi. Act should not be applied so as to exclude matters which may be essential for the ascertainment of truth."

It seems to their Lordships essential in the interests of the administration of justice in India that this mode of regarding the law of evidence should emphatically be stated to be unsound. What matters should be given in evidence as essential for the ascertainment of truth it is the purpose of the law of evidence whether at Common Law or by statute to define. Once a statute is passed which purports to contain the whole law it is imperative. It is not open to any Judge to exercise a dispensing power, and admit evidence not admissible by the statute because to him it appears that the irregular evidence would throw light upon the issue. The rules of evidence, whether contained in a statute or not, are the result of long experience choosing no doubt to confine evidence to particular forms, and therefore eliminating others which it is conceivable might assist in arriving at truth. But that which has been eliminated has been considered to be of such doubtful value as on the whole to be more likely to disguise truth than discover it. It is therefore discarded for all purposes and in all circumstances. To allow a Judge to introduce it at his own discretion would be to destroy the whole object of the general rule. There is therefore no such principle as is suggested in the passage now under discussion. At the same time their Lordships wish to make it clear that apart from any rule of law the evidence in question so far from leading to the ascertainment of truth in fact for the reasons already given leads away from it. It is not remarkable that the learned Judges who gave leave to appeal in this case did not conceal some uncertainty as to the correctness of this part of the judgment. Their Lordships do not think it necessary to discuss at any length inferences drawn by both Courts from the absence of evidence by the defendants of the contents of their own books. They do not think that in the circumstances the comments are well-founded. In the result therefore, their Lordships are of opinion that this suit fails, and that the appeal should be allowed and the suit dismissed. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly. They notice, however, that the late Maharajah Manindra clearly regarded the payment of the britti as being a personal obligation of his, and it would seem to follow in their opinion that the Court of Wards would be justified in making payment of the arrears up to the time of his death to the plaintiffs. This is not however a matter for decree in this suit. The respondents must pay the costs in the Indian Courts and of this appeal.

February 5, 1940

JUGESHWARI PRASAD—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPELLANT

Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938), s. 15—Bihar Money-lenders (Regulation of Transactions) Act (VII of 1939), s. 11—Compromise decree under execution—Court's jurisdiction to decide whether judgment-debtor should be allowed to pay decree by instalments.

The judgment-debtor's application under the Bihar Money-lenders Act to be allowed to pay a compromise decree, obtained on August 12, 1936, by instalments was dismissed. The appeal was dismissed by the District Judge on the ground that after the passing of the decree under execution the lower Court had no power to allow the payment of the decretal amount by instalments:

Held, that whether judging by the old s. 15 of Act III of 1938 which was in force at the time the Subordinate Judge made his order, or by the present s. 11 of Act VII of 1939 which was in force on May 1, 1939, the date of the order passed by the District Judge, the Judge was wrong in coming to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to enter into the question whether the judgment-debtor should be relieved to the extent of being allowed to pay the decree by instalments.

A. from an order of the District Judge of Gaya, dated May 1, 1939.

Mr. Tarkeshwar Nath, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Jafar Imam, R. K. Saran and A. C. Roy, for the Respondents.

Wort, J—This is an appeal from the decision of the District Judge of Gaya dismissing the judgment-debtor's application under the Bihar Money-lenders Act to be allowed to pay a decree, which we are informed was a compromise decree obtained on August 12, 1936, by instalments. The District Judge dismissed summarily the judgment-debtor's appeal from the order of the Subordinate Judge, who also dismissed the application of the judgment-debtor summarily. The reason the learned Judge gave for dismissing the appeal was that after the passing of the decree under execution the lower Court had no power to allow the payment of the decretal amount by instalments.

It is rather difficult to understand what the learned Judge in the Court below meant by that, as at the time that the Subordinate Judge made his order s. 15 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act (III of 1938) was in force. That section has now been replaced by s. 11 of the Bihar Money-lenders Act (VII of 1939). Section 15 of the old Act and s. 11 of the present Act are exactly in the same terms. The wordings are :

'Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any other law or in anything having the force of law or in any contract between the money-lender and the person to whom the loan was advanced, the Court may, subject to the provision of s. 12, direct at any time on the application of the judgment-debtor, after notice to the decree-holder that the amount of any decree passed before or after the commencement of this Act, in respect of loan, including any decree in a suit relating to a mortgage by which a loan is secured shall be paid in such number of instalments or subject to such conditions and on such dates as it considers fit."

Therefore, whether judging by the old s. 15 which was in force at the time the Subordinate Judge made his order, or by the present s. 11 which was in force on May 1, 1939, the date of the order passed by the learned District Judge, the learned Judge was wrong in coming to the conclusion that he had no jurisdiction to enter into the question whether the judgment-debtor should be relieved to the extent of being allowed to pay the decree by instalments. That being so, the matter must go back for the Judge to consider that question and to decide it according to law. Nothing that I have said with regard to this matter must be deemed to have fettered the discretion of the learned Judge in coming to such conclusion as he thinks the circumstances warrant.

The appeal must, therefore, be allowed and the matter will be remanded to the learned Judge in the Court below for decision according to law. Costs of this appeal will abide the hearing in the Court below.

Varma, J.—I agree.

JANMAHOMED ABDUL RAHIM— RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 68, s. 2 (3)— Limitation Act, construction of — Principles — Hardship no ground for enlarging period—Administration bond is bond subject to condition — It is bond as defined in s. 2 (3)—Nature of administration bond— Art. 68 applies to such bond—Time, when begins to run —Assignment of bond under s. 292, Succession Act (XXXIX of 1925) — Effect — Whether confers on assignee new cause of action and fresh starting point.

Limitation Act ought to receive such a construction as the language in its plain meaning imports. A law of limitation and prescription may appear to operate harshly or unjustly in particular cases, but where such law has been adopted by the State it must, if unambiguous, be applied with stringency. The rule must be enforced even at the risk of hardship to a particular party. The Judge cannot on equitable grounds enlarge the time allowed by the law, postpone its operation, or introduce exceptions not recognised by it. Although great hardship may occasionally be caused by statutes of limitation in cases of poverty, distress and ignorance of rights, yet the statutory rules must be enforced according to their ordinary meaning in these and in other like cases. 4 Ind. Cas. 449 (2), referred to. [p. 227, col. 2.]

An administration bond falls within the terms of the definition of bond given in s. 2 (3), Lim. Act. [ibid.]

An administration bond is as often assigned when persons of full age are concerned as when the beneficiaries are all of them infants; and such a bond is of the nature of an additional security taken by the Court for the benefit of the beneficiaries. If a right of action under the bond becomes statute barred by the operation of Art. 68 of the Lim. Act, that does not affect the rights of the benefices against the administrator. [p. 228, col. 1.]

It is no doubt true that a suit by the assignee of an administration bond is a suit by a person who derives title from the assignment which is authorised by the terms of s. 292 of the Succession Act, but this does not show that the action on the bond by the assignee is not a suit on a bond subject to a condition. Every valid assignment of a bond confers substantive rights upon the assignee, but those rights are not, in any case greater than the rights possessed by the assignor. A suit upon such a bond, if brought by an assignee, is not in any way different from an ordinary suit by the holder of a bond, the condition of which has been broken. The action brought by the assignee being on a bond subject to a condition, Art. 68, Lim. Act applies and time begins to run from the last date on which the condition was broken and no action can therefore, be brought after the expiration of three years. 76 Ind. Cas. 802 (3), approved. 165 Ind. Cas 672 (1), Overruled. [p. 228, cols. 1 & 2.]

An administrator of an intestate is merely the officer of the Court in whom the deceased himself has reposed no trust. On the death of the former the estate of the intestate does not pass to his heirs or representatives and no authority whatever can be transmitted by him, nor has anyone claiming under him any right to interfere with or to complete the administration of the property of the intestate. The office comes to an end on death (if not before) and the course which should be taken when an administrator dies is to obtain a grant of administration de bonis non, and the person to whom such grant is made will be entitled to take possession of the property. Therefore the administrator cannot be guilty of any default or misconduct in relation to the administration after the date of his death, though, of course, his representatives would continue liable in respect of any such default or misconduct committed by him during his lifetime. The condition of the bond could be said to have been broken by the administrator by the default of some person in relation to the estate of the intestate after the original letters of administration had ceased to have any operation by reason of the death of the administrator. The condition of the bond according to its terms could therefore be broken at the latest on the death of the administrator and a suit brought by the person to whom the bond is assigned under s. 292, Succession Act beyond three years of such death is barred by time. [p. 228, col. 2; p. 229, col 1.]

Section 292, Succession Act, does not have the effect of conferring a new cause of action on the assignee, and therefore does not provide a fresh starting point for the purposes of limitation. It is wrong to say that the condition of the bond is not broken for the purposes of the Lim. Act until the date of the assignment. 76 Ind. Cas. 802 (3), approved. 165 Ind. Cas 672 (1), Overruled. [p. 229, cols. 1 & 2.]

Sir Thomas Strangman, K. C. and Mr. W. W. K. Page, for the Appellant.

Messrs. D. N. Pritt, K. C. and S. P. Khambatta, for the Respondent.

Viscount Maugham.—There are here two consolidated appeals from a judgment and decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay in its appellate jurisdiction dated March 31, 1938, confirming with a variation a judgment and decree of that Court in its ordinary original civil jurisdiction. The facts are very complex and the questions raised on the appeals are questions of considerable importance. The appellants, however, who were the defendants in the suit, besides disputing liability on a number of grounds have raised the contention that the suit was barred by Art. 68 of the Indian Lim. Act, (IX of 1908). This question was based on substantial grounds and their Lordships thought it right to hear the arguments of both sides upon it before embarking on the other questions raised on the appeal and the cross-appeal; and in the result they have come to the conclusion that the point of limitation raised by the appellants is well founded and accordingly it has not been necessary for them to go into the other matters above referred to.

In order to deal with the question of limitation it is necessary to state the following facts.

On September 18, 1924, Abdul Rahim died intestate at Bombay leaving him surviving a widow, Hawabai, three sons and three unmarried daughters. All his children were then minors. According to the law by which he was governed his three infant sons became entitled to his estate in equal shares subject to the right of his widow to maintenance pending re-marriage or death, and to the rights of his daughters to maintenance until marriage or death, and to their marriage expenses.

On March 17, 1925, the widow of Abdul Rahim (Hawabai), having been duly empowered by the High Court, filed a petition in the High Court for the grant to her of letters of administration to the estate of her deceased husband for the use and benefit of his three minor sons and limited to the period of minority of any of them. It was stated in the schedule to the petition that the movable and immovable properties of Abdul Rahim were valued at Rs. 2,75,791 and for the purposes of probate duty the estate was valued at Rs. 1,99,025 after deducting funeral expenses and debts. On May 6, 1925, it was ordered that on the sureties being justified for the whole of the estate of Abdul Rahim and on filing the necessary administration bond, and on payment of fees and stamp duty, letters of administration should issue as prayed to Hawabai.

On May 14, 1925, Hawabai and the present appellants as sureties executed a bond for Rs. 3,98,060 in favour of the Registrar of the High Court in its testamentary and intestate jurisdiction and the head assistant to the Prothonotary and Registrar of the Court. The conditions of the bond were in the usual form. The obligation was to be void and of no effect if Hawabai

"(1) should make or cause to be made a true and perfect inventory of the property and credits of the deceased which had or should come to her hand, possession or knowledge or to the hands or possession of any other person or persons for her and should exhibit or cause to be exhibited to the High Court such inventory on or before November 14, 1925;

(2) should well and truly administer such property and credits according to law;

(3) should make or cause to be made a true and just account of her administration on or before May 14, 1926; and

(4) All the rest and residue of the property and credits which should be found remaining upon the said account after being first examined and allowed by the High Court should deliver and pay unto such person or persons as shall be lawfully entitled to such residue."

On June 9, 1925, the letters of administration were duly issued to Hawabai on behalf of the three minor sons of the intestate for their use and benefit until one of them should attain his majority.

It is alleged by the plaint that on July 2, 1925, Hawabai, who was a purdanashin lady, and illiterate, appointed one Bhatra who was related to her being the son of her maternal uncle, her attorney to act for her in all matters relating to the estate of Abdul Rahim. This person, however, misapplied the property and subsequently (on October 22, 1928) committed suicide Hawabai commenced various proceedings in an endeavour to recover the property forming part of the estate of Abdul Rahim, but on April 27, 1929, she died.

On November 14, 1931, the eldest son of Abdul Rahim, Janmahomed Abdul Rahim (who will be called "the plaintiff") attained his majority.

On March 24, 1932, an order was made by the High Court that the Court should assign the administration bond to the plaintiff, his heirs, executors or administrators, and it was further ordered that on such assignment the plaintiff, his heirs, executors or administrators should be entitled to sue on the bond in his or their name or names as if the same had been originally given to him or them, and should be entitled to recover thereon as trustee or trustees for all persons interested the full amount recoverable in respect of any breach thereon.

By a deed of assignment dated August 14, 1932, certain officers of the Court appointed for that purpose by an order of the Chief Justice purported to assign the bond to the plaintiff (the present respondent) "to hold the same unto the assignee absolutely with all such powers rights and remedies as are now subsisting thereon." The assignment was effected under s. 292 of the Indian Succession Act of 1925 which is in these terms:—

"The Court may, on application made by petition and on being satisfied that the engagement of any such bond has not been kept, and upon such terms as to security, or providing that the money received be paid into Court, or otherwise, as the Court may think fit, assign the same to some person, his executors or administrators, who shall thereupon be entitled to sue on the said bond in his or their own name or names as if the same had been originally given to him or them instead of to the Judge of the Court, and shall be entitled to recover thereon, as trustees for all persons interested, the full amount recoverable in respect of any breach thereof."

It should be added that under s. 291 every person to whom any grant of letters of administration, with an exception not material to the present purpose, is committed must give a bond to the District Judge with one or more surety or sureties engaging in the due collection and administration of the estate of the deceased. The bond is in the usual form. It is the usual practice in such a case to apply s. 292 and to cause the bond to be assigned to the intending plaintiff. It does not appear to be necessary to discuss the older practice under the Letters Patent of 1823 founding the Supreme Court of Bombay.

On November 2, 1932, the plaintiff (respondent) filed the present suit claiming from the defendants, the present appellants, the sum of Rs 3,98,060, or such lesser sum as represents the loss of the estate of Abdul Rahim due to the failure of Hawabai as administratrix, of that estate to carry out her obligations under the administration bond. The plaint alleged four specific breaches of duty by the administratrix which can be shortly stated as follows:—

(1) The appointment of Bhatra as her attorney to manage the estate of the intestate;

(2) allowing the sum of Rs. 50,003 shown in the inventory and accounts filed by her on June 2, 1927, as being in her hands on that date to remain in the hands of Bhatra;

(3) the failure to realise a certain share of the intestate in the estate of his deceased father and allowing such share to remain in the hands of Bhatra and;

(4) the failure to hand over to the Accountant-General of Bombay the estate of Abdul Rahim, all his heirs being minors.

The learned trial Judge and the Appellate Court (Sir John Beaumont, C. J., and Kania, J.) in the course of their judgments held that on the question of limitation they were bound by the decision of the Appellate Court of Bombay in the case of Manubhai Chunilal v. The General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation Ltd. (1). That case relied to a similar bond, similarly assigned, and the Appellate Court, Sir John Beaumont, C. J. and Rangnekar, J. overruling Blackwell, J. decided that the defence of limitation under Art. 68 of the Indian Lim. Act was not available. In that case as in the present the beneficiaries at the date of grant of letters of administration were infants, and in other respects the facts are not distinguishable from those in the present case. The question, therefore, arises whether the decision in Manubhai's case (1) is or is not correct.

Article 68 of the Lim. Act, 1908, is one of a series of 183 articles in a schedule which relate to the limitation of suits, appeals and applications. The articles are introduced by s 3 in the following words:—

"Subject to the provisions contained in s. 4-25 (inclusive): Every suit instituted, appeal preferred, and application made after the period of limitation prescribed therefor by the first schedule shall be dismissed, although limitation has not been set up as a defence."

The provision contained in Art. 68 is to the following effect:—

"On a bond subject to a condition" the period of limitation is to be three years and the time from which the period begins to run is stated to be "when the condition is broken."

Article 120 is stated to relate to any suit "for which no period of limitation is provided elsewhere in this schedule." The period of limitation is in that case six years and the time from which the period begins to run is "when the right to sue accrues." The word "bond" is defined in s. 2 (5). The word is stated to include "any instrument whereby a person obliges himself to pay money to another, on condition that the obligation shall be void if a specified act is performed, or is not performed, as the case may be."

It is not in dispute that the bond in this case is a bond within the terms of that definition, and it is clear that Art. 120 has no application if Art. 68 applies to the present case. It may be added that s. 6 of the Act (which deals with suits by infants) clearly has no application.

Before considering the grounds on which the High Court in Manubhai's case (1) came to the conclusion above referred to it may be desirable to point out that a Lim. Act ought to receive such a construction as the language in its plain meaning imports. (See the decision of this Board in Abhiram Goswami v. Shyama Charan Nandi (2)). As was well stated by Mr. Mitra in his Tagore Law Lectures, 6th Ed. (1932) Vol. 1, p. 256:

"A law of limitation and prescription may appear to operate harshly or unjustly in particular cases, but where such law has been adopted by the State.....it must if unambiguous be applied with stringency. The rule must be enforced even at the risk of hardship to a particular party. The Judge cannot on equitable grounds enlarge the time allowed by the law, postpone its operation, or introduce exceptions not recognised by it."

Very little reflexion is necessary to show that great hardship may occasionally be caused by statutes of limitation in cases of poverty, distress and ignorance of rights; yet the statutory rules must be enforced according to their ordinary meaning in these and in other like cases. Their Lordships think it is possible that sympathy for the plaintiff in the case which must now be considered was allowed to effect a pure question of construction. In the present case, however, it may be observed that an administration bond is as often assigned when persons of full age are concerned as when the beneficiaries are all of them infants; and that such a bond is of the nature of an additional security taken by the Court for the benefit of the beneficiaries. If a right of action under the bond become statute barred by the operation of Art. 68 of the Lim. Act that does not affect the rights of the benefices against the administrator. While making these observations their Lordships think it right to repeat that mere considerations of hardship in such a case should not be taken into account.

In Manubhai's case (1) Blackwell, J., took the view that the bond being within the definition in the Lim. Act and the action being on a bond subject to a condition, time began to run from the last date on which the condition was broken and no action could therefore be brought after the expiration of three years. In coming to this conclusion he followed the decision of the Appellate Court of Rangoon in Maung San U v. Maung Kyaw Mye (3) Blackwell, J., in an admirable judgment dealt with the effect of an assignment of a bond under s. 292 of the Indian Succession Act and observed that in his opinion such an assignment merely deals with the question of the title and confers upon the assignee a right to sue which he would otherwise not have had previously to the assignment, and that the section thus merely entitles the assignee to recover as a trustee for all persons interested the full amount recoverable under the bond in respect of any breach of it. On appeal it was not doubted that the bond was a bond upon a condition, but the Court held that a suit to enforce the bond by a person to whom it has been assigned under s. 292 was not a suit upon a bond within the meaning of the article because it was said, the assignment confers substantive rights upon the assignee. Their Lordships with all respect are unable to follow this argument, nor can they agree that there is any difficulty as regards the consideration for the assigment. It is of course true that a suit by the assignee of such a bond is a suit by a person who derives title from the assignment which is authorised by the terms of s. 292 of the Indian Succession Act, 1925; but their Lordships are unable to see how this can be held to show that the action on the bond by the assignee is not a suit on a bond subject to a condition. Every valid assignment of a bond confers substantive rights upon the assignee, but those rights are not in any case suggested to their Lordships, greater than the rights possessed by the assignor. It may be noted that the ordinary security bond which is given by Receivers in India under the provisions of the Civil P. C., O. XL, r. 3 is given to an officer of the Court (see App. F. Form No. 10); yet it has never been suggested that a suit upon such a bond, if brought by an assignee is in any way different from an ordinary suit by the holder of a bond, the condition of which has been broken.

There were two other grounds for the conclusion of the Court. First it was held that, assuming that Art. 68 applied to the case, it was impossible to say that the condition was broken until some person who was able to give a valid discharge for the estate claimed it from the administrator or his representatives and failed to obtain it. The consequence of that view was said to be that the condition was not broken within the meaning of Art. 68 until the plaintiff attained his majority which was less than three years before the suit was filed. In other words the death of the administrator was held not to put an end to his liability as regards future events. Their Lordships cannot agree. An administrator of an intestate is merely the officer of the Court in whom the deceased himself has reposed no trust. On the death of the former the estate of the intestate does not pass to his heirs or representatives and no authority whatever can be transmitted by him, nor has any one claiming under him any right to interfere with or to complete the administration of the property of the intestate. The office comes to an end on death (if not before) and the course which should be taken when an administrator dies is to obtain a grant of administration de bonis non, and the person to whom such grant is made will be entitled to take possession of the property. It therefore seems to their Lordships impossible to hold that the administratrix in the present case could possibly have been guilty of any default or misconduct in relation to the administration after the date of her death, though, of course, her representatives would continue liable in respect of any such default or misconduct committed by her during her lifetime. It seems equally impossible to suggest that the condition of the bond could be broken by the administratrix by the default of some person in relation to the estate of the intestate after the original letters of the administration had ceased to have any operation by reason of the death of administratrix. The condition of the bond according to its terms was therefore broken at the latest on her death, that is, more than three years prior to the suit.

The other and perhaps the main ground for the conclusion of the Court in Manubhai's case (1), was that s. 292 of the Indian Succession Act had the effect of conferring a new cause of action on the assignee, and therefore provided a fresh starting point for the purposes of limitation. If the language of s 292 of the Indian Succession Act be examined it is difficult to suppose that the draftsmen intended to provide for the creation of a new cause of action upon the assignment of a bond thereunder. The essential words are taken verbatim from s. 83 of the (English) Court of Probate Act, 1857 (20 and 21 Vict. C. 77) which provides that :

"The Court may .....on being satisfied that the condition of any such bond has been broken, order one of the Registrars of the Court to assign the same to some person".....and such person shall thereupon be entitled to sue on the said bond in his own name..... as if the same had been originally given to him instead of to the Judge of the Court and shall be entitled to recover thereon as trustee for all persons interested the full amount recoverable in respect of any breach of the condition of the said bond."

(The modern provision to the same effect is to be found in s. 167 of the Judicature Act, 1925). It has never been suggested that under either of these sections there is upon the assignment being made a fresh cause of action. The origin of the ancient practice of requiring the administration bond to be given to the Judge of the Court of Probate (s. 81 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857) was no doubt to enable that Court to have control over all matters relating to the enforcement of such bonds. It is scarcely necessary to add that it had obviously nothing to do with the English period of limitation as regards the enforcement of such a bond which was twenty years from the breach of the condition. It seems to their Lordships that the words used in s. 292 of the Succession Act like those used in s. 83 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, are far from assisting the contention that a new cause of action arises upon the assignment. The bond is assigned to a person who is thereupon to be entitled to sue on the bond in his own name :

"As if the same had been originally given to him and he is to be entitled to recover thereon ..... the full amount recoverable in respect of any breach thereof."

These sentences do not in the least support the view that a fresh cause of action arises and that therefore the condition of the bond is not broken for the purposes of the Lim. Act until the date of the assignment. The judgments of the Appellate Court of Rangoon in Mauna San U v. Maung Kyaw Mye (3), and of Blackwell, J., in Manubbai's case (1), are in the opinion of their Lordships correct and the decision of the Appellate Court in the latter case must be taken to be erroneous.

This view makes it unnecessary to consider any of the other questions raised on the appeal and cross-appeal. The defence of limitation under Art. 68 was a good one, and the suit should have been dismissed with costs.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the cross-appeal should be dismissed, and that the respondent to the appeal should pay the costs here and below.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision Application No. 279 of 1940

September 24, 1940

BROOMFIELD AND WASSOODEW, JJ.

VISHNU TATYABA NAIK AND ANOTHER—PETITIONERS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Bombay Local Boards Act (VI of 1923 as amended by Act XIII of 1935), s. 136 (2)—Sub-overseer and chairman of works committee of Local Board taking false measurements and fraudulently obtaining money from Local Board by tendering bill with false measurements sheet signed and countersigned by first and second accused respectively—Acts of accused held protected by s. 136, Local Boards Act and s 197, Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898)—Interpretation of statutes—Similar words in similar enactments—Interpretation.

A sub-overseer of the Local Board was, according to the rules of his employment, bound to supervise the works, to take measurements and to enter them in a measurement book maintained for the purpose and also to report to the District Local Board through the works committee, the progress of the works in his charge and their measurements for the purpose of making payment to the contractor. The sub-overseer was obliged to sign the bill in authentication of the measurements given in it and the charges made. The duties of the Chairman of the works committee were to take measurements and, in the absence of a completion certificate, countersign the bills of the contractor and see that the payment is made without undue delay. Accused No. 1 who was an overseer of a Local Board and accused No. 2 who was an elected member of that Board and Chairman of the works committee, were prosecuted for offences of cheating and falsification of accounts on the allegation that they had dishonestly taken false measurements of certain work of repairs on the Road under their charge and fraudulently obtained from the president of the District Local Board certain amount by tendering a bill with the measurement sheet containing the false measurements attached to it duly signed by accused No. 1 and countersigned by accused No. 2 :

Held, that the preferring of the bill was an official act and it did not make any difference that in the discharge of the official duty a fraudulent statement was inserted in the bill. Therefore, the act complained of, namely, the fraudulent and dishonest representation by means of the bill and measurement sheet, was protected under s 136, Bom. Local Boards Act. Accused No. 2, as the member was also entitled to protection under s. 197, Criminal P. C. [p. 233, col. 1.]

[Case-law referred to].

When the same or exactly similar words are used in statutory provisions which appear to have a similar object, they should be interpreted in the same way. [p. 233, col. 2.]

Messrs. P. B. Shingne and S. G. Patwardhan, for the (Accused) Petitioners.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, Govt. Pleader, for the Crown.

Wassoodew, J.—The petitioners Vishnu Tatyaba Naik and Shridhar Raoji Patil, who were respectively sub overseer of the District Local Board, Nasik, and elected member of that Board and Chairman of the works committee, were prosecuted before the resident First Class Magistrate of Manmad in the Nasik District for offences of cheating and falsification of accounts and abetment thereof, punishable under ss. 420 and 477A read with s 114, I. P. C. The prosecution alleged that the accused had dishonestly taken false measurements of certain work of repairs on the Kherdisatha-Nagarsul Road in the Yeola Taluka under their charge and fraudulently obtained from the president of the District Local Board Rs. 275-7-0 by tendering a bill with the measurement sheet containing the false measurements attached to it duly signed by accused No. 1 and countersigned by accused No. 2. The accused raised a preliminary objection to the jurisdiction of the Court to try them on the ground that as the act complained of was done or purported to have been done in pursuance of the Bom. Local Boards Act or the rules under that Act for the time being in force, they were protected by the provisions of s. 136 (2), Bom. Local Boards Act, 1923, as amended by Act XIII of 1935 and s. 197, Criminal P. C. It was contended that as one month's previous notice in writing was not given of the intended prosecution, and that inasmuch as the act complained of was done more than three months before the date of the prosecution, the Magistrate could not proceed with the trial under the provisions of s 136 (2), Bom. Local Boards Act. The objection under s. 197, Criminal P. C., related to the charge against the member of the Local Board, and it was contended that he being a statutory public servant not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Local Govt. the trial Court could proceed only upon a previous sanction of Govt. in regard to his official acts, and as the act complained of was such an act and as no sanction of Govt. was obtained for his prosecution, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try him.

That preliminary objection was disallowed by the learned Magistrate. In revision the learned Sessions Judge thought that the provisions of s. 136 (2), Bom. Local Boards Act, were inapplicable to the facts of this case, although possibly the prosecution under s. 477A, I. P. C., could not proceed without the sanction of the Local Govt. But he also thought that that difficulty could be overcome by obtaining the said sanction in the course of the trial. Accordingly the order of the trial Magistrate was maintained.

It has been urged for the petitioners that the question whether the alleged illegal act was done or purported to have been done in discharge of the official duty of the accused must be determined by reference to the nature of the allegations made in the complaint and the duties of the accused under the Act and the rules framed thereunder. The question whether an act complained of was done or purported to have been done in execution of statutory or official duty must necessarily depend entirely on the facts and circumstances of the case. In considering that question, it will be convenient to deal with the functions and duties of the two accused separately. Dealing with accused No. 1, it is not denied before us that he, as sub-overseer of the Local Board, was, according to the rules of his employment, bound to supervise the works, to take measurements and to enter them in a measurement book maintained for the purpose. He was also to report to the District Local Board through the works committee, of which accused No. 2 was the chairman, the progress of the works in his charge and their measurements for the purpose of making payment to the contractor. It appears from the form of the bill, which was to be submitted by the contractor, that the sub-overseer was obliged to sign the bill in authentication of the measurements given in it and the charges made. It is not denied that the work in question was entrusted to a contractor by the Local Board and the contractor had preferred a bill under his signature for the amount stated therein. That bill was signed by the sub-overseer, accused No. 1, and countersigned also by accused No. 2 as chairman of the works committee. That bill was eventually sanctioned and paid by the Board on account of the authentication thereof. There is no doubt therefore that the signing of the bill and attaching a measurement sheet thereto and submitting the bill for payment was part of the official duty of the sub-overseer.

The duties of the chairman of the works committee are laid down under the rules framed by the District Local Board under the Act. The works committee is appointed under the provisions of s. 38, Local Boards Act. The rules provide, among other things, that the chairman should supervise the works that may be going on, fix the order in which the works sanction by the Board should be carried out, demand a programme of the works exceeding Rs. 500 take measurements and, in the absence of a completion certificate, countersign the bills of the contractor and see that the payment is made without undue delay. In his case too the act of countersigning the bill in authentication of the measurement and therefore the charges made was part of the official duty of the chairman; and it cannot be denied that the money said to have been obtained for payment of the bill was in fact obtained upon the guarantee provided by the countersignature and the accompaniment to the bill consisting of the measurements of the actual work done, for which the bill was preferred. Upon those facts, assuming that there has been fraudulent and dishonest entry in the bill and its accompaniment in regard to the measurements of the work actually done and contracted for, the question is whether the accused could claim protection of the provisions of s. 136 (2), Bom. Local Boards Act of 1923. That section says as follows:

"(2) No suit, prosecution or other legal proceeding shall be commenced against any member, officer or servant of a local board, for anything done, or purporting to have been done, in pursuance of this Act, or any other law for the time being in force which entitles or require local board, member, officer, servant as such, . . . to exercise any powers or perform any duties without giving to such local board, member, officer, servant, . . . one month's previous notice in writing of the intended action and of the cause thereof, nor after three months from the date of the act complained of."

The provisions of that section are in important respects analogous to the povisions of s. 197, sub-s. (1), Criminal P. C., and s. 270, sub-s. (1), Constitution Act. They serve the same object and are intended to protect public servants in the discharge of official duties. The interpretation of the provisions in the different enactments will therefore serve as a guide in the application of the principle which those cases may yield, to the facts of this case.

The authority on which the case was dealt with in the Courts below was R. K. Naik v. Emperor (1) and I shall refer to that case presently. Among the other cases referred to in argument were Rudragouda Rachangouda Patil v. Emperor (2), Gurushidayya Shantivirayya Kulkarni v. Emperor (3) and Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (4). The learned Govt. Pleader has relied upon the case in R. K. Naik v. Emperor (1) for the view as expressed in one part of the judgment of the learned Chief Justice that where the act complained of is obviously prompted by dishonesty and is done in violation of the official duty, the protection afforded by the provisions of s. 136, Bom. Local Boards Act cannot be extended to it. That case was decided by reference to the provisions of s. 136, Bom. Local Boards Act. There, an administrative officer of a local board was prosecuted for cheating under s. 420, I. P. C., for submitting a false travelling allowance bill to the board, and it was held that the protection under s. 136 did not apply. There, reference was made by the learned Chief Justice to Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (4), which was cited before him on behalf of the accused, but he thought that the case could be distinguished. In Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (4) there were two charges for which protection was claimed, one under s. 409 of criminal breach of trust and the other under s. 477-A, I. P. C. of falsification of accounts. The person charged was a sub-assistant surgeon under the Punjab Govt., and he had dishonestly misappropriated certain medicines entrusted to him in his official capacity and omitted to record certain entries in a stock book of medicines belonging to the hospital in his charge. The Court held that in respect of the charge under s. 409, the protection did not apply because the act complained of was not necessarily performed by the accused in his official capacity, but that as the act complained of under s. 477-A was performed by the accused in his official capacity, the protection applied to the charge under that section. The ratio of the decision was that the maintenance of the accounts being part of the duty of the accused, when the latter in writing those accounts as part of his duty deliberately wrote them falsely or omitted to write them correctly, it was nevertheless an act done in purported execution of a statutory duty. The Court held that even if the act alleged was done in bad faith and was clearly a dereliction of the officer's duty, the officer was not necessarily deprived of the protection provided by the expression "act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty" in s. 270 (1), Constitution Act. Sulaiman, J. has made in that connection the following observations (vide pp. 178-179*):

"Obviously the section does not mean that the very act which is the gravamen of the charge and constitutes the offence should be the official duty of the servant of the Crown. Such an interpretation would involve a contradiction in terms, because an offence can never be an official duty. The words as used in the section are not 'in respect of any official duty' but 'in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty' The two expressions are obviously not identical .... The section cannot be confined to only such acts as are done by a public servant directly in pursuance of his public office, though in excess of the duty or under a mistaken belief as to the existence of such duty. Nor is it necessary to go to the length of saying that the act constituting the offence should be so inseparably connected with the official duty as to form part and parcel of the same transaction. If the act complained of is an offence, it must necessarily be not an execution of duty, but a dereliction of it. What is necessary is that the offence must be in respect of an act done or purported to be done in execution of duty, that is, in the discharge of an official duty. It must purport to be done in the official capacity with which he pretends to be clothed at the time, that is to say, under the cloak of an ostensibly official act, though, of course, the offence would really amount to a breach of duty. An act cannot purport to be done in execution of duty unless the offender professes to be acting in pursuance of his official duty and means to convey to the mind of another the impression that he is so acting.

The section is not intended to apply to acts done purely in a private capacity by a public servant. It must have been ostensibly done by him in his official capacity in the execution of his duty, which would not necessarily be the case merely because it was done at a time when he held such office, nor even necessarily because he was engaged in his official business at the time."

The application of the principle above enunciated is well illustrated by the learned Judge in the following remarks in dealing with the charge of falsification of accounts (vide p. 181*):

"Thus, where it is his duty to maintain a record or a register, and in maintaining that register he makes some entries which are false to his knowledge, he is certainly purporting to act, though not actually acting, in the execution of his duty, because, he is making certain entries in the register knowing them to be false. He is ostensibly professing to be discharging his official duty in maintaining the register, which he is bound to maintain correctly. In making the entries he pretends or purports to act in the execution of his duty; but in point of fact he is acting in direct dereliction of it."

In R. K. Naik v. Emperor (1), the learned Chief Justice was not prepared to follow that case because he thought that the decision of the Federal Court could be distinguished from the case before him, first, because the Court there was dealing with s. 270, Govt. of India Act, whereas the case before him arose under s. 136, Bom. Local Boards Act, 1923, and secondly, because the charge in that case was under s. 420, I. P. C. Another ground for distinction was that the accused before him was not bound to claim any travelling allowance at all, that therefore he was not entitled to the protection under s. 136, Bom. Local Boards Act.

This view adopted by this Court consistently in cases such as Rudragouda Rachangouda Patil v Emperor (2) and Gurushidayya Shantivirayya Kulkarni v. Emperor (3) is clearly reconcilable with the view taken by the Federal Court of the protective provisions of the enactment. In the former case the act complained of purported to be in discharge of the accused's public duty, for the alleged forged order signed by the accused as president of the Taluka Local Board was an order which was required by the law to be signed by the president in his official capacity. In the latter case an officiating kulkarni collected money on account of land revenue and instead of sending it to the Govt. treasury used it for his own purpose. In that case it was an act done purely in his private capacity although by a public servant. It could by no manner of argument be said that using money entrusted to him for the private purpose was a duty cast on him by the rules of his office. Therefore no sanction was considered necessary.

Here, the principal ingredient in the offence of cheating was the false representation made to the District Local Board upon which the latter was induced to part with the money. That representation was made according to the complaint by means of a bill with an appendix containing a false measurement sheet. If that bill was fraudulently and dishonestly made and submitted which was the accused's duty to submit and in submitting it they appended a statement which was false to their knowledge, they were certainly purporting to act, though not actually acting, in pursuance of the Act. It cannot be denied, as I have already said, that under the rules which are made under the Act and which, in my opinion, must be regarded as part of the Act, it was the duty of both the sub-overseer and the chairman to sign and countersign the bill respectively in order to enable the contractor to claim, and the District Local Board to pay, the amount stated in the bill. It is therefore difficult to resist the inference that the preferring of the bill was an official act and it did not make any difference that in the discharge of the official duty a fraudulent statement was inserted in the bill. Therefore, in my opinion, the act complained of, namely the fraudulent and dishonest representation by means of the bill and measurement sheet, would be protected under s. 136, Bom. Local Boards Act. There is no doubt that the member is also entitled to protection under s. 197, Criminal P. C. He is a statutory public servant according to s. 135, Bom. Local Boards Act, and the act complained of was done or purported to be done in the exercise of his official duty. As a member is not removable without the sanction of the Local Govt. under s. 31 of the Act, the sanction of that Govt. would be necessary for his prosecution under s. 197, Criminal P. C. Therefore I think the rule in his revisional application must be made absolute and the proceedings pending before the resident First Class Magistrate of Manmad quashed.

Broomfield, J.—The lower Courts have relied on a dictum of the learned Chief Justice in R. K. Naik v. Emperor (1). In that case referring to s. 136, Bom. Local Boards Act, he said (p. 1229*):

"In my view these protection clauses, which are so commonly inserted in Acts conferring powers on public authorities or their officers, were never intended to protect a dishonest rascal from the consequences of his rascality. They are only intended to protect people who from excess of zeal or negligence, or other cause exceed their powers.

I doubt if the learned Chief Justice intended to lay this down as a rule to be followed by the Courts in India without qualification. To do so would clearly be contrary not only to the decision of the Federal Court referred to and distinguished by the learned Chief Justice in his judgment, Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (4) but also to several decisions of this Court which have been cited in the argument before us. The Federal Court were dealing not with s. 136, District Local Boards Act nor with s. 197, Criminal P. C., but with s. 270, Govt. of India Act. But when the same or exactly similar words are used in statutory provisions which appear to have a similar object, it would be very difficult to say that they should not be interpreted in the same way. The principle which the Federal Court laid down in Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (4) may be stated to be this. If the act alleged to be criminal is done by a public servant in his official capacity, that is, if it is an act which it is his duty to do as such public servant under the law governing the case, he is protected, although, by reason of the fact that he has done act dishonestly or fraudulenty or in any other manner contrary to the law, he may have committed a criminal offence. On the other hand, if the offence charged involves an act or acts which the accused is not required to do and which are outside his official duties, the liability to prosecution is unfettered.

The cases to which we have been referred in the course of the argument may all be explained, I think, by the application of very much the same principle. In Gulabmiya Dagumiya v. Emperor (5) it was held that sanction under s. 197, Criminal P. C.,

was not necessary for the prosecution of an official liquidator for misappropriation of money coming into his custody as liquiadtor, the reason being that in misappropriating money he did not purport to act as a public servant. The act was outside his duties, In Nanhesaheb Ahmedsaheb In re (6) it was held that sanction was necessary for the prosecution of the chairman of a District School Board for the offence of forgery of the minutes of a meeting of the Board. Here the charge was clearly in respect of an official act. In Rudragouda Rachangouda Patil v. Emperor (2) sanction was held necessary for a prosecution for forgery in respect of an order signed by the president of a Taluka Local Board in his official capacity. There also obviously the prosecution was in respect of an official act. Lastly, in Gurushidayya Shantvirayya Kalkarni v. Emperor (3) it was held that sanction under s. 197, Criminal P. C., was not necessary for the prosecution of a village kulkarni for the offence of breach of trust. That was the same kind of case as Gulabmiya Dagumiya v. Emperor (5).

But, if the principle laid down by the Federal Court, which as I say appears to have guided this Court in a number of cases in the past, is applied in the present case, it seems to me to be clear that the accused must be held to be protected by s. 136, cl. (2), Bom. Local Boards Act, and in the case of accused No. 2 by s. 197, Criminal P. C. My learned brother has stated what is alleged in the charge-sheet against the accused. The gist of the charge is that by false pretences they induced the District Local Board to part with a certain sum of money. The false pretences consisted of the false measurements and the false bill which were prepared by the accused in their official capacity.

The learned Govt. Pleader, who opposes this application, has conceded that so far as the offence of falsification of accounts under s. 477A, I. P. C. is concerned sanction would be necessary under s. 197, Criminal P. C. He contends, however, that the offence of cheating with which the accused are also charged is a distinct offence and that on the authorities no sanction is necessary for the offence of cheating; nor does s. 136, cl. (2), apply to it. But I am unable to see how the two charges in the present case can be kept distinct. They seem merely to be different aspects of the same transaction. Apart from the entries in the measurement book and the bill which the accused are alleged to have falsified, there would have been no false pretences to support the charge of cheating. It seems to me to be a case in which the official capacity of the accused is involved in the very acts complained of to use the language of Varadachariar, J. in Dr. Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (4). That is so in respect of both the charges. I agree therefore with my learned brother that the rule must be made absolute in this case and the procedings against both the accused quashed.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Civil Regular No. 104 of 1940
August 23, 1940
SHARPE, J.

U BA MAUNG—PLAINTIFF
versus
U CHIT HLAING AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS

Government of Burma Act, 1935, ss. 25 (1), (a), 27 (3) — Member resigning his post in army —He ceases to hold any office for profit even if resignation is yet subject to His Majesty's approval —Speaker of house of representatives, if subject to High Court's jurisdiction—His right to declare that member's seat has become vacant—Practice—Subsequent events—Cause of action incomplete—If can be completed by anything arising after action.

Where a member has resigned his appointment in the army he cannot be said to be holding any office for profit under the Crown and is not disqualified for being a member of the House of Representatives even if His Majesty has not yet approved of his being given permission to resign his appointment.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives is subject to the jurisdiction of the High Court. He has no power to declare a member's seat to have become vacant. 193 Ind. Cas. 91 (1), followed.

Nothing arising after action is brought, can either create a new, or complete a then incomplete, cause of action entitling the plaintiff to any relief in that same then existing suit.

Messrs. E Hay U E Maung and U Maung Maung, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. Kyaw Din and P. K. Basu, for Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, respectively.

Judgment.—The facts of this case are similar to those in U Lun v. U Chit Hlaing (1). There are however one or two slight differences, one of which is all-important. At all material times the plaintiff,

(1) A I R 1941 Rang. 5; 193 Ind. Cas. 91; 13 R Rang. 311.

U Ba Maung, was the member for Myitkyina, having been chosen at a bye-election in December 1938. He was present in the Chamber when the point was first raised by defendant No. 2, and he, too was also present there during the discussion both on March 29, and April 1, and also when the speaker gave his decision on April 2. Unlike U Lun, however the plaintiff in this, suit did not speak in the Chamber at any time on any of those three days, either in an attempt to defend his own position as a member or otherwise. The other difference, and the all-important one, between the facts of this case and those of U Lun's case (1), is that in the Burma Gazette for April 13, 1940* it was notified, under date April 6, that the plaintiff in this suit, U Ba Maung had been permitted, subject to His Majesty's approval, to resign his appointment as a Second Lieutenant in the Army in Burma Reserve of Officers, with effect from March 26. The fact that the plaintiff had resigned his appointment on March 26, was mentioned to the speaker by the Advocate-General in the course of the latter's address on April 1. But no mention whatever of this fact was made by the speaker in the course of giving his decision on April 2. The plaintiff, U Ba Maung, filed this suit on the same day that U Lun filed his. The plaints in the two suits are identical, except that the plaint in this suit includes the additional averment (in para. 5) that the plaintiff resigned his appointment on March 26. The two written statements in this suit are in precisely the same terms as the two written statements in U Lun's suit (1), there is no additional plea in either of the written statments in this suit to meet the additional allegation in the plaint which I have just mentioned.

In my judgment the fact that this plaintiff resigned his appointment on March 26, disposes of the case. As he had resigned on this date, he was not holding any office of profit under the Crown in Burma when the first ordinance ceased to operate, and it is not suggested that he was doing so at any later date The plaintiff in this suit was therefore never disqualified for being a member of the House of Representatives and so his seat never became vacant. Some slight argument, if I may so describe it, was addressed to me by Mr. Kyaw Din to the effect that, as the plaintiff's resignation was only permitted subject to His Majesty's approval, and as His Majesty has not yet given his approval thereto, the plaintiff's resignation is as yet of no effect. It is enough for me to say that if it was right to say in U Lun's case (1), that the fact that His Majesty had not yet approved his appointment as a Second Lieutenant did not prevent the appointment from being effective so far as disqualification for membership of the House of Representatives was concerned, then it is equally right to say that the fact that His Majesty has not yet approved of the present plaintiff being given permission to resign his appointment does not prevent his resignation being effective for the present purpose.

It has been said on behalf of the speaker that he was right not to rely upon the mere statement made in the Chamber by the Advocate-General that the plaintiff had resigned his appointment on March 26, and that the plaintiff ought to have substantiated in some way or another the fact of his resignation, as no notification of his resignation appeared in the Burma Gazette until April 13, which was after the speaker announced his decision. It is not to be overlookd in this connection that U Lun, the plaintiff in the other suit, tried to speak in his own defence, and was not allowed to do so when he wanted to. I think that, as regards this plaintiff at any rate, the speaker, having been put on notice of the position, might well have addressed some enquiry either to the plaintiff, or to the defence department, or to both, with a view to ascertaining whether what the Advocate-General had stated was correct or not ; or he might have waited a short while to see if any notification on the subject appeared in the Burma Gazette, as in fact it did less than a fortnight after his decision. But the speaker did none of these things, and proceeded to give his decision, in which he did not make any reference at all to even the possibility of this plaintiff having resigned. Nor did he, after the notification had appeared in the Burma Gazette, make any statement in the Chamber reviewing his decision. Incidentally, his omission to do that confirms me in my view that the speaker did in fact purport to be "the declaring authority" in this matter, for if the speaker had been legally invested with the power to declare a seat to have become vacant, he could not, as it seems to me, go back on that declaration.

In these circumstances the plaintiff was in my opinion fully justified in instituting this suit on April 24, last, at any rate as against the speaker. On that date the plaintiff was entitled to the legal character of a member of the House of Representatives of the Burma Legislature, and the speaker had denied his title to that character. For the reasons given in my judgment in U Lun's case (1), I am of opinion not only that the speaker is subject to the jurisdiction of this Court but also that he had no power to declare that the plaintiff's seat had become vacant. It is not suggested on behalf of the speaker that the plaintiff is able to seek any further relief than a bare declaration, except the injunction for which he also asks, and so I think that this is a proper case in which to grant relief to the plaintiff under s. 42, Specific Relief Act, 1877. The plaintiff will be granted as against defendant No. 1 a declaration that he (the plaintiff) was on April 25, 1940, a member of the House of Representatives of the Burma Legislature I do not propose to grant the plaintiff a further declaration, as he asks me to do, to the effect that defendant No. 1 had no power to determine the matters disposed of by him in his "ruling" of April 2, 1940, and that defendant No. 1's declarations and findings are of no force or validity. The plaintiff obtains all that really matters to him by being granted the declaration which I do propose to make, while I am not at all sure that the further declaration which he seeks is one which I can properly grant under s. 42, Specific Relief Act. I should be slow to grant the injunction which is asked for, because I feel sure myself that the speaker will not act contrary to the decision of this Court, but (of course subject, if he so desires, to testing the correctness of my judgment on appeal) will loyally abide by it. In fact, at the very end of the hearing of this case Mr. E Maung, on behalf of the plaintiff, said—these are the exact words :

"We have to assume that as speaker of the House of Representatives he (that is, the speaker) would show respect to the decision of this Court. We are not justified in thinking that he would flout the decision of this Court."

In these circumstances I shall not therefore grant the plaintiff an injunction. Defendant No. 1 must pay the plaintiff's costs. Bearing in mind the fact that the two cases were heard together, but also bearing in mind the importance of this case and the amount of preparatory work which has obviously had to be done by the Advocates, I fix an Advocate's feee of twenty gold mohurs for the first day, eight gold mohurs each for the second, third, fourth, fifth and seventh days of the hearing, five gold mohurs for the sixth day (which was not a full one), and two gold mohurs for to-day.

I must now deal with the position of defendant No. 2, Mr. E Maung, on behalf of the plaintiff, impressed it upon me, when he first opened his case, that his client was only suing defendant No. 2 in his capacity of a private member of the House, and not in his capacity of deputy speaker. Mr, E Maung has very frankly and properly conceded that, merely by raising this matter in the Chamber in the way in which he did, defendant No. 2 cannot be said to have denied the plaintiff's title to his character of a member of the House of Representatives. Mr. E Maung however relies upon para. 4 of defendant No. 2's written statement, the terms of which are that defendant No. 2 "states that from the date of Gazette Notification plaintiff held an office of profit under the Crown." That is the only thing upon which the plaintiff relies as showing that defendant No. 2 has denied the plaintiff's status as a member. Even if I thought that that did in fact amount to such a denial as is contemplated by s. 42, Specific Relief Act, it would not assist the plaintiff on this point, for, as I pointed out in Smith v. Heptonstall (2), at p. 18 :

"Nothing arising after action brought can either create a new, or complete a then incomplete, cause of action entiling the plaintiff to any relief in that same then existing suit."

Defendant No. 2's statement was, naturally, filed after the suit was instituted, and so the plaintiff cannot rely upon anything in the written statement to complete his admittedly otherwise incomplete cause of action. On this ground alone the suit as against defendant No. 2, must be dismissed with costs, the Advocate's fee to be similar to that which I have fixed as between defendant No. 1 and the plaintiff, and I need not go into the other defence raised by defendant No. 2.

S. Order accordingly.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT

Miscellaneous Case No. 526 of 1939
October 15, 1940
COLLISTER AND BAJPAI, JJ.
Mst. BHAGWATI—APPLICANT
versus
COMMISSIONER OF INCOME TAX, U. P. & C. P.—OPPOSITE PARTY

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 14—Widow of Hindu co-parcenary, whether member of undivided family within meaning of s. 14—Widow receiving allowance as member of undivided family—Partition between co-parceners, whether affects her status as member of undivided family—Her allowance if exempt—Hindu Law—Joint family—Co-parcenery—Family consisting of male and his deceased brother's wife—Widow adopting son—Whether becomes co-parcener with uncle.

The widow of a Hindu co-parcenary, though not herself a member of the co-parcenary body, may nevertheless be a member of the undivided family within the meaning of s. 14, Income Tax Act. The widow of a deceased co-parcener receiving maintenance allowance as member of Hindu undivided family continues to be a member of the undivided family with each of the entities into which the family subsequently disrupts irrespective of whether any such entity consisted of one male member or of several male members because there can be no partition between a co-parcener and a member of the undivided family who is not a co-parcener, as for instance, the widow of a deceased co-parcener. Hence the maintenance allowance received by the widow continues to be exempt under s. 14 even after the disruption of the family. 149 Ind. Cas. 306 (1), not approved. [p. 240, col. 2.]

(Case-law relied on.

There is no co-parcenary body where the family consists of an individual male and for instance his deceased brother's wife; but if the latter, having authority from her late husband, should adopt a son the latter would become a co-parcener with his uncle in the family estate 140 Ind. Misc. Case reference submitted by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces, Lucknow, dated June 1, 1939.

Mr. V. D. Bhargava, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Opposite Party.

Collister, J.— This is a reference under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act (XI of 1922). The assessee is Mst. Bhagwati, widow of Kalyan Singh, who died on October 18, 1918. On her husband's death, Mst. Bhagwati applied for mutation, alleging that Kalyan Singh was a separated Hindu. She was opposed by the collaterals, who contended that Kalyan Singh died a member of the joint family. The mutation Court found in favour of the collaterals; but, ultimately, the matter was compromised, the necessity for litigation in the Civil Courts being thereby obviated. Under a deed of agreement dated October 10, 1919 the assessee accepted the position that her husband had died as karta of the undivided family and she gave up all right and interest in the family property except such as was embodied in deed of agreement; and the co-parceners agreed to pay the assessee an allowance of Rs. 1,000 per mensem by way of maintenance for the remainder of her life. They agreed to other conditions also about certain family matters but we are not concerned with them. It was recited in the document that the terms of the agreement were in accordance with the oral instructions of late Kalyan Singh. Thereafter the allowance was regularly paid to and received by the assessee. On April 9, 1923, there was a partition in the family, which disrupted into five separate groups or entities, as follows: (1) Hanuman Prasad and Ram Gopal, sons of a deceased brother of Kalyan Singh, (2) Govind Das, brother of Kalyan Singh, (3) Raghunath Das, (4) Gokul Das, (5) Lachman Das. Raghunath Das is the son of Govind Das and was adopted by Ram Das, a deceased brother of Kalyan Singh and Govind Das, Gokul Das and Lachman Das are both sons of Govind Das. At the disruption, Hanuman Prasad and Ram Gopal on the one side and Govind Das on the other each agreed to contribute Rs. 500 to the assessee's monthly allowance of Rs. 1,000 and this agreement was duly implemented. To all this, of course, the assessee was no party. For the assessment year 1935-36 the Income-tax Officer assessed to tax the sum of Rs. 12,000 being the allowance received by the assessee for the 12 months ending March 31, 1935. This assessment was made under s. 34 read with s. 23 (3) of the Act. The Income-tax Officer held that s. 14 (1) of the Act was not applicable. That section provides:

"The tax shall not be payable by an assessee in respect of any sum which he receives as a member of a Hindu undivided family."

The Income-tax Officer says:

"I cannot read into s. 14 (1) that it applies also to a person who may have been once a member of the undivided family The discussion whether she was or was not a member of the family is, therefore futile."

Then he says:

"There is another aspect of this case. Mst. Bhagwati had surrendered all her rights, whatever she may have had, by entering into an agreement dated, October 10, 1919. The allowance that she has been getting is only by virtue of the deed of agreement and as such it is not exempt under the Act."

The assessee appealed to the Assistant Commissioner, but her appeal was dismissed. That officer agreed with the view taken by the Income-tax Officer and he also based his order on another ground, which was that under the Mitakshara School of Law:

"A widow cannot be a member of a co parcenary and, therefore, the appellant is not a member of a Hindu undivided family."

As we shall show, this view of the law is incorrect. The assessee then applied to the Commissioner of Income-tax for review under s 33 and alternatively for a reference to this Court under s. 66 (2). The Commissioner declined to give relief under s. 33 but has referred the following question of law to this Court under s. 66 (2).

"Whether the sum of Rs. 1,000 per month received by the petitioner in the account year 1934-35, was received by her as a member of a Hindu undivided family within the meaning of s. 14 (1) of the Act."

The Commissioner is of opinion that the question should be answered in the negative. He says :

"The Hindu undivided family to which she once belonged became disrupted in 1923, and partitioned itself into five separate entities, in none of which, so far as I can see, she has any legal place. The maintenance allowance which the petitioner is now receiving from two of these entities is not, therefore, being received by her as a member of a Hindu undivided family as there is no undivided family in existence to which she can at present be said to belong.'

The first question that falls to be considered by us is whether a widow can be a member of a Hindu undivided family. In this connection learned Counsel for the assessee has referred us to a number of authorities in support of the proposition. Learned Counsel for the Department at first contested this point, relying mainly on an observation in In re Maharajkumar of Vizianagram (1), at p. 1243, where the learned Judges say that

"widows cannot be regarded as members of an undivided Hindu family within the meaning of s. 14 (1) of the Act."

There is, however, a volume of authority to the effect that the widow of a coparcener is a member of the undivided family. In Mulla's Hindu Law, Edn. 9, paragraph 212, we read :

"A joint Hindu family consists of all persons lineally descended from a common ancestor, and includes their wives and unmarried daughters."

Paragraph 213 says :

"A Hindu co-parcenary is a much narrower body, than the joint family. It includes only those persons who acquire by birth an interest in the joint or co-parcenary property."

In Vedathanni v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras (2), it was held by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that the widow of a member of a joint Hindu family is herself a member of that family within the meaning of s. 14 (1), Income Tax Act. The learned Judges say : "The object and scope of s. 14 is to prevent the Crown from taxing twice over." Further on they say :

"If widows are not exempted by reason of the above construction, the Crown would undoubtedly be taxing twice over."

This decision was approved by the Bombay High Court in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay v. Gomedalli Laxminarayan (3). In that case the assessee and his father formed a joint Hindu family. They were possessed of ancestral property which, on the death of the father, devolved by survivorship on the assessee, who lived with his wife and mother. He was assessed to income-tax as an individual. He contended that he was entitled to be taxed as a Hindu undivided family, and the High Court found in his favour. At p. 621*, Beaumont, C J. observes :

"The nature of a Hindu undivided family was perfectly well-known to the Legislature when the Income Tax Act was drafted, and it was well-known that the expression 'Hindu undivided family' includes females and is much wider than 'co-parcenary', which includes only the males in whom the joint family property is vested."

At pp. 625 and 626*, Rangnekar, J. says :

"It is clear, therefore, that there is a sharp distinction between what is understood in the Hindu Law by the expressions 'undivided Hindu family' and 'co-parcenary'. Now these two expressions which are known to every Hindu lawyer, were before the Legislature when the Income Tax Act came to be enacted. It is a canon of construction that one cannot impute ignorance to the Legislature of well-known legal expressions. The Legislature must be presumed to be acquainted with not only the actual state of the law but with the legal interpretation put upon technical expressions by the Courts. If then the Legislature chose to adopt a wider expression like 'undivided Hindu family' instead of the narrower one 'co-parcenary,' the Courts have no option left but to construe the wider expression in the way in which it has been construed and understood under the Hindu Law. To put a narrower meaning on the expression 'undivided Hindu family,' as the Crown wants us to do, would, in my opinion be legislating instead of interpreting the section."

Then there is a more recent decision from Bombay, Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay Presidency, Sind and Aden v. Makanji Lalji (4). The assessee in that case was a Hindu undivided family. The widow of one of the co-parceners obtained a decree for maintenance from the Court. At the time of assessment the assessee claimed a deduction in respect of the amount which the widow received as maintenance ; but the High Court held that no such deduction was possible. At p. 829† Beaumont, C. J. who delivered the judgment, says :

"Now, inasmuch as the assessee is the Hindu undivided joint family, which includes this widow it is difficult to see how any deduction can be allowed in respect of a share of the income going to one of the members of the joint family."

At p. 840† he says :

"But in this case, the assessment being on a Hindu undivided family, it seems to me that the whole of the income of the Hindu undivided family is liable to assessment and that it is impossible to deduct this sum payable to the widow of a deceased brother, who gets it in her capacity ultimately as a member of the joint family."

The view expressed in the above two cases was followed by this Bench in Kedar Narain Singh v. Commissioner of Income Tax, C. P. & U. P. (5) and still more recently by a Bench of the Oudh Chief Court in Commissioner of Income Tax, C. P. & U. P. v. Rudh Kumari (6), where it was held that a mother must be deemed to be a member of a Hindu undivided family with her son. Finally we shall refer to certain observations of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Kalyanji Vithaldas v. Commissioner of Inome-tax Bengal (7). At p. 412 their Lordships say :

"The phrase 'Hindu undivided family' is used in the statute with reference, not to one school only of Hindu Law, but to all schools, and their Lordships think it a mistake in method to begin by passing over the wider phrase of the Act the words 'Hindu co-parcenary'—all the more that it is not possible to say on the face of the Act that no female can be a member."

Further on, they say that they do not agree that a Hindu joint family necessarily consists of male members only. The law on the subject is, we think, clear and we are of opinion that the widow of a Hindu co-parcenary, though not herself a member of the co-parcenary body, may nevertheless be a member of the undivided family and in view of the authorities, learned Counsel for the Department has had to concede that this is so.

We shall now consider a point which Counsel for the Department has taken in connection with the agreement of October 10, 1919. He contends that between that date and the disruption of the family on April 9, 1923 the assessee was not receiving the allowance of Rs. 10,00 as a widow in a Hindu undivided family the allowance was an annuity for consideration, the said consideration being her admission that Kalyan Singh had died joint with the other members of the family and her surrender of the rights which she was claiming in the family property. The Income-tax Officer and the Assistant Commissioner both held inter alia that the assessee can only base her claim on the deed of agreement of October 10, 1919, but the Commissioner has not touched this point. His reference appears to proceed on the assumption that the assessee was receiving the allowance as a member of a Hindu undivided family and that it was only by reason of the disruption in 1923 that she lost the exemption which s. 14 (1) of the Act provides. We shall therefore reply to the question referred to us upon this assumption.

We now come to the most important point in this reference and that is whether, assuming that after October 10, 1919 the assessee was drawing the allowance as a member of a Hindu undivided family, she is or is not now drawing it in that capacity. On behalf of the assessee Mr. P. L. Banerji has argued this matter from aspects. In the first place he contends—and not altogether without force—that, having originally received this allowance as a member of a Hindu undivided family, the capacity in which she was receiving it was unaffected by the subsequent disruption among the co-parceners. He pleads that, even if she is herself no longer a member of a Hindu undivided family, she is nevertheless receiving the allowance in that capacity within the meaning of s. 14 (1); her status quoad the right to maintenance is unchanged. The other aspect of the matter which learned Counsel for the assessee has put before us is that she has not ceased to be a member of a Hindu undivided family at all and here we think that the assessee is on firmer ground. There can be no partition between a female who is a member of a Hindu undivided family and the coparceners, and therefore it is contended that the assessee, after the disruption of the co-parcenary body, continued to be a member of a Hindu undivided family with each of the separating entities, which had succeeded by survivorship to her husband's interest in the family property. We have already quoted the passage from Mulla's Hindu Law which says that and it has been held that a single individual may form a Hindu undivided family with a member or members of the family entitled to maintenance from the estate. In Vedathenni v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras (2), already referred to in this judgment, there were two brothers Somasundara and Ramalinga. Ramalinga died leaving a widow, and subsequently Somasundara died leaving two widows. After Somasundara's death an adoption was made to him and at the material time the adopted son, who was a minor, was the sole male member of the family. Ramalinga's widow sued him for maintenance and obtained a decree and a question arose as to whether the amount so received as maintenance was chargeable as income-tax. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court held that she was a member of a Hindu undivided family and that the money received by her as maintenance was exempt under s. 14 (1) of the Act. The judgment was delivered by Ramesam, J., and at p. 5* that learned Judge after referring to two reported decisions, one from Calcutta and one of the Privy Council, says :

".....there can be a joint family with a single member provided there are other members entitled to maintenance from the estate."

Further on he observes :

"So far as the case before us is concerned, undoubtedly there is a joint family and also the petitioner in this case is entitled to maintenance as the widow of a deceased co-parcener and received it as a member of an undivided family."

The Court refrained from expressing any view as to what the position would be in a case where the surviving male members effected a partition between themselves while continuing to pay maintenance to widows of deceased co-parceners as in the case with which are now concerned. In Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay v. Gomedalli Lakshminarayan (3), to which also we have already referred in another connexion, Beaumont. C. J. on p. 621† says :

"It is clear law that you may have a joint Hindu family consisting of one male member and female members who are entitled to maintenance, although that does not mean that every Hindu who possesses a wife and a mother is necessarily a member of a joint Hindu family....."

There is of course no co-parcenary body where the family consists of an individual male and for instance his deceased brother's wife; but if the latter, having authority from her late husband, should adopt a son, the latter would become a co-parcener with his uncle in the family estate. Authority for this proposition will be found in the two decisions which were referred to by Ramesam, J., in Vedathenni v. Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras (2). The first of these is Surendra Nandan v. Sailaja Kant Das (8). In that case there were two brothers, Raghunath and Bissonath, living as a joint family under the Mitakshara Law. Bissonath died, leaving a widow with the power of adoption. The widow adopted a son and it was held by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court that the latter succeeded to his father's interest in the joint family property notwithstanding that it had already vested in Raghunath. Similarly, in Bachoo Hurkisondas v. Mankorebai (9), there were two brothers forming a joint family under the Mitakshara Law and possessed of considerable property. On September 14, 1900 one brother died without male issue, but leaving his widow pregnant. The other brother died on December 17, 1900 after authorizing his widow under a will to adopt a son, such authority to hold good even in the event of a son born to the other widow. On December 18 of that same year, the pregnant widow gave birth to a son and on February 17, 1901 the other widow adopted a son. It was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council that the adopted son became on adoption a co-parcener in the family property with the son who was naturally born to the other widow.

In the case which is now before us the assessee was a member of a Hindu undivided family up to 1923; and as we have already said, there can be no partition between a co-parcener and a member of the undivided family who is not a co-parcener, as for instance, the widow of a deceased co-parcener. It seems to us therefore that after the disruption of the family on April 9, 1923, the assessee continued to be a member of a Hindu undivided family with each of the entities into which the family disrupted, irrespective of whether any such entity consisted of one male member or of several male members. Upon this view of the matter, the assessee will be exempted from payment of income-tax under s. 14 (1) of the Act, and this is the conclusion at which we have arrived. On the assumption therefore that up to April 9, 1923 the assessee was receiving her allowance as a widow in a Hindu undivided family, our reply to the question referred to us is in the affirmative. The assessee is entitled to her costs of this reference. Counsel for the Department is entitled to a fee of Rs. 200. A copy of this judgment under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar will be sent to the Commissioner of Income-tax, Central and United Provinces.

PATNA HIGH COURT

Criminal Revision No. 439 of 1940
September 18, 1940
DHAVLE, J.

JADUNANDAN SINGH AND ANOTHER—PETITIONERS
versus
EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 383, 352, 324—Extortion—What prosecution must prove—Accused assaulting victim and forcibly taking his thumb impression on blank paper—Offence, nature of—Whether amounts to extortion or robbery—Hurt with bhala—Fact that accused is student, if mitigation of offence.

The definition of 'extortion' in s. 383, I. P. C. makes it necessary for the prosecution to prove that the victims were put in fear of injury to themselves or to others, and further, were thereby dishonestly induced to deliver papers containing their thumb impressions. The forcible taking of the victim's thumb impressions on blank piece of paper which can be converted into a valuable security does not necessarily involve inducing the victim to deliver papers with the thumb impressions. Hence, where the victim is assaulted by the accused and his thumb impression forcibly taken upon a blank piece of paper, the offence of extortion cannot be said to have been established. The offence is no more than the use of criminal force or an assault punishable under s. 352, I. P. C. Nor does the offence amount to robbery in the absence of proof that the papers were taken from the victim's possession. Cr. Revn. No. 125 of 1931 and Cr. Revn. No. 420 of 1930, relied on, 140 Ind. Cas. 752 (1), distinguished.

The fact that the accused is a student, is no mitigation of the offence of causing hurt with a bhala.

Cr. R. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Gaya, dated June 3, 1940.

Messrs. Nawal Kishore Prasad II, D. P. Sinha and R. P. Jaruhar, for the Petitioners.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Raj Kishore, for the Complainant.

Order.—Narain Dusadh and Sheonandan Singh, the gorait and gomasta respectively of a landlord, were returning after the inspection of some fields when the two petitioners and others came out of an ahar and assaulted them. The petitioner Alakh gave a bhala blow to Narain on the right leg, and then other people assaulted him with lathis. The petitioner Jadunandan and others then assaulted Sheonandan. Jadunandan after this forcibly took the thumb impressions of Narain on one piece of blank paper, and of Sheonandan on three blank papers. On these findings the two petitioners and two others were convicted by the trying Magistrate, Jadunandan being sentenced under s. 384, I. P. C., to six months' rigorous imprisonment and Alak to four months' rigorous imprisonment under s. 324. Jadunandan was also found guilty under s. 323, but the Magistrate did not consider it necessary to pass any separate sentence on him under that section. Two other men were also convicted by the Magistrate under s 323 and fined. An appeal which was heard by the Additional Sessions Judge of Gaya failed. When the matter came to this Court, Varma, J., rejected the revisional application of the last two men, Raghu Kahar and Chander Singh, but admitted the application of Jadunandan Singh and also, so far as the question of sentence was concerned, that of Alakh. It has been contended on behalf of Jadunandan Singh that no offence under s. 384 has been brought home to him. This contention is rested on the definition of 'extortion' in s. 383 which reads :

"Whoever intentionally puts any person in fear of any injury to that person, or to any other, and thereby dishonestly induces the person so put in fear to deliver to any person any property or valuable security or anything signed or sealed which may be converted into a valuable security, commits 'extortion'."

It is clear that this definition makes it necessary for the prosecution to prove that the victims Narain and Sheonandan were put in fear of injury to themselves or to others, and further, were thereby dishonestly induced to deliver papers containing their thumb impressions. The prosecution story in the present case goes no further than that thumb impressions were "forcibly taken" from them. The details of the forcible taking were apparently not put in evidence. The trial Court speaks of the wrists of the victims being caught and of their thumb impressions being then 'taken.' Cases frequently occur which turn on the difference between the giving and the taking of thumb impressions. In Criminal Revision No. 125 of 1931 Ramyad Singh v. Emperor heard by Sir Courtney-Terrell, C. J., and myself on April 15, 1931, the victim was tied up on refusing to give his thumb impression on a piece of paper. He then consented to put his thumb impression on that piece of paper, and it was by that fear that he was found to have been induced to put his thumb impression, on the paper. The conviction under s. 384 was therefore upheld. This was contrasted with the case which had come before me sitting singly in 1930, Criminal Revision No. 420 of 1930, Kapildeo Singh v. Emperor decided on August 15, 1933, where the finding of fact was that, helped by two others, the petitioner took by force the thumb impressions of the victim—the man was thrown on the ground, his mouth and eyes tied with a gamcha, his left hand pulled out and the thumb put into a kajrauta and then impressions of that thumb taken on certain papers. I had held that in the circumstances there was no inducing the victim to deliver the pieces of paper with his thumb impressions. As to this, the late Chief Justice observed :

"If the facts had been that the complainant's thumb had been forcibly seized by one of the petitioners and had been applied to the piece of paper notwithstanding his struggles and protests, then I would agree that there is good ground for saying that the offence committed, whatever it may be, was not the offence of extortion because the complainant would not have been induced by the fear of injury but would have simply been the subject of actual physical compulsion, and I venture to agree with the reasoning of my learned brother Dhavle in Criminal Revision No. 420 of 1930 Kapildeo Singh v. Emperor."

The Assistant Govt. Advocate has drawn attention to Batisa Singh v. Emperor (1) where the petitioners were convicted under s. 347. It is said in one part of the report that the victim was laid down on the floor and gagged and only allowed to go after his thumb impressions were taken on several pieces of paper. Macpherson, J. upheld the conviction, after pointing out however that it had been found as a fact that the petitioners intentionally put the victim in fear of injury to himself and thereby dishonestly induced him to place his thumb impression upon certain pieces of paper. There is no such finding in the present case. The lower Courts only speak of the forcible taking of the victim's thumb impressions; and as this does not necessarily involve inducing the victim to deliver papers with his thumb impressions (papars which could no doubt be converted into valuable securities). I must hold that the offence of extortion is not established. The learned Advocate suggested that in that event this may be a case of robbery, but it has not been asserted or found that the papers were taken from the victim's possession. It seems to me that on the findings the offence is no more than the use of criminal force or an assault punishable under s. 352, I. P. C.

Jadunandan Singh was also convicted under s. 323, but no separate sentence was passed upon him under that section. I do not propose to interfere with that part of the order of the lower Court, and as regards his conviction under s. 384, I. P. C., which must be replaced by a conviction under s. 352, I. P. C., I sentence him to rigorous imprisonment for three months and a fine of Rs. 100 with two months rigorous imprisonment in default. As regards the petitioner Alakh it has been urged that he is a student. From the record it appears that his age is 22, and though the record does not show that he is a student, an attempt has been made before me quite recently by means of an affidavit and a certificate to show that he is a student. I am not sure that this is any mitigation of the offence of causing hurt with a bhala, but having regard to the nature of the injury that he caused, it seems to me that the ends of justice will be served if the sentence passed upon him under s. 324, I. P. C, is reduced to rigorous imprisonment for three months. Ordered accordingly.

Civil Reference No. 8 of 1939

August 7, 1940

BROOMFIELD AND DIVATIA, JJ.

BABUBHAI VAMALCHAND KACHRA—PLAINTIFF

HIRALAL VAMALCHAND KACHRA AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVI, r. 1, O. VII, r. 10, s. 24—Suit valued at Rs. 205 filed in First Class Sub-Judge's Court allocated to joint First Class Sub-Judge—Case sent to Second Class Sub-Judge by District Judge's order—Latter allowing amendment—Suit becoming beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction and sent by him to First Class Court—Action reported to District Judge—District Judge informing grant of sanction—Reference by First Class Sub-Judge under O. XLVI, r. 1—Neither O. XLVI, r. 1, nor O. VII, r. 10 held applied—High Court held could transfer case under s. 24.

A suit for a declaration and injunction valued at Rs. 205 was instituted in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court. According to the practice the case was allocated to the joint First Class Subordinate Judge for disposal. Subsequently, by order of the District Judge the case was sent to the Court of the extra joint Second Class Subordinate Judge, who was one of the subordinate Judges attached to the First Class Court. While the case was pending in the Court of the joint First Class Subordinate Judge, an application was made to amend the plaint by including additional properties in the list of suit properties and asking for partition. This application for amendment was granted by the Second Class Subordinate Judge after the case had been taken up by him. The result was that the suit became one beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction and so he sent the case to the First Class Court and reported the action taken by him to the District Judge. In a letter sent by the clerk of the Court of the District Judge by order of the District Judge, the First Class Subordinate Judge was informed that the sanction applied for, had been granted. When the case was taken up by the First Class Subordinate Judge, the defendants objected that he had no jurisdiction and that the only legal way of dealing with the case was that the Second Class Subordinate Judge should have returned the plaint for presentation to the First Class Subordinate Judge under O. VII, r. 10. The First Class Subordinate Judge doubted whether the District Judge had power to transfer the case under s. 24, Civil P. C., and also whether any order of transfer under that section had in fact been made. He submitted several questions for the opinion of the High Court under O. XLVI, r. 1 :

Held, that O. XLVI, r. 1 had no application, nor did O. VII, r. 10 apply as the suit was properly instituted in the first instance. 64 Ind. Cas. 919 (5), relied on.

Held, further that the High Court could properly take action under s. 24, of its own motion and in order to save difficulty and delay, transfer the suit to the First Class Court for disposal, since, the suit was properly filed in the First Class Court and the Second Class Subordinate Judge to whom it was transferred for disposal by administrative order had jurisdiction to entertain it and to deal with it up to the date of amendment. Hence there was no legal objection to the High Court passing an order under s. 24 transferring the case to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. 158 Ind. Cas. 382 (1), Ledgard v. Bull (2), Peary Lall Mozoomdar v. Komal Kishore Dassia (3) and Jagjivan Javerdas v. Magdum Ali (4), distinguished.

[The High Court in this case passed an order under s. 24, Civil P. C, ex majore cautela, withdrawing the suit from the Court of the extra joint Second Class Subordinate Judge and transferring it for trial to the First Class Subordinate Judge.]

C. Ref made by the Fisrt Class Sub-Judge, Surat.

Messrs. M. R. Vidyarthi and S. M. Vidyarthi, for the Plaintiff.

Messrs. G. N. Thakor and B. G. Thakor, for the Defendants.

Broomfield, J.—This is a reference by the First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat purporting to be under O. XLVI, r. 1. The facts are as follows : A suit for a declaration and injunction valued at Rs. 205 was instituted in the First Class Subordinate Judge's Court. According to the practice by which the work of that Court is distributed the case was allocated to the joint First Class Subordinate Judge for disposal. Subsequently, by order of the District Judge (it is not quite clear whether this was an administrative order or an order under s. 24, Civil P. C.) the case was sent to the Court of the extra joint Second Class Subordinate Judge, who is one of the four Subordinate Judges attached to the first class Court. While the case was pending in the Court of the joint First Class Subordinate Judge, an application was made to amend the plaint by including additional properties in the list of suit properties and asking for partition. This application for amendment was granted by the Second Class Subordinate Judge after the case had been taken up by him. The result was that the suit became one beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction and he made the following order :

"The suit is now valued at more than Rs. 5,000. So this Court can have no jurisdiction to hear the suit. I therefore pass the order below : The suit be sent to the first class Court as this Court has no jurisdiction."

Apparently he reported the action taken by him to the District Judge and in a letter sent by the clerk of the Court of the District Judge by order of the District Judge the First Class Subordinate Judge was informed that the sanction applied for had been granted. It is not clear, however, that any judicial order of transfer under s. 24, Civil P. C., had been made. When the case was taken up by the First Class Subordinate Judge, the defendants objected that he had no jurisdiction and that the only legal way of dealing with the case was that the Second Class Subordinate Judge should have returned the plaint for presentation to the First Class Subordinate Judge under O. VII, r. 10. The learned First Class Subordinate Judge was of opinion that this was the correct view. He doubted whether the District Judge had power to transfer the case under s. 24, Civil P. C., and also whether any order of transfer under that section had in fact been made. He thought that there was a difficulty in the way of his entertaining the suit by reason of a decision of the learned Chief Justice in Shankerji Samalji v. Vrajlal Bapalal (1), and he submitted several questions for the opinion of this Court under O. XLVI, r. 1.

The first point that has to be decided is whether a reference under O. XLVI, r. 1 lies in the circumstances of the present case. It is clear from the wording of the rule that it cannot apply except in cases where there is a pending suit or appeal in which the decree is not subject to appeal. In the present case it appears to us that the First Class Subordinate Judge in whose Court the suit was instituted and who is the only Judge who can possibly have jurisdiction to try it must either try it or dismiss it. He cannot refuse to try it. Whether he dismisses it without hearing it or decides it after hearing, in either case there will be an appealable decree. That being so we do not consider that O. XLVI, r. 1 has any application.

At the same time we think it is a case in which this Court may properly take action of its own motion under s. 24, Civil P. C., and in order to save difficulty and delay transfer the suit to the First Class Subordinate Judge for disposal. The learned First Class Subordinate Judge doubted whether an order under s. 24 could be made, and learned Counsel who appears here for the defendants has also argued that at any rate according to some authorities an order under this section cannot be made in such a case. The points relied upon seem to be two. It is urged that there must, first of all, be a pending suit, and, secondly, there must be a suit pending in a Court which has jurisdiction to try it. As regards the first point the suit must be regarded as pending before the Second Class Subordinate Judge, if, as is contended, the First Class Subordinate Judge has as yet no jurisdiction to hear it. As regards the second point, reliance is placed on a Privy Council ruling, Ledgard v. Bull (2), where it was held, following Peary Lall Mozoomdar v. Komal Kishore Dassia (3), that under s. 25 of the old Civil P. C., which corresponds to the present s. 24, a superior Court cannot make an order of transfer of a case unless the Court from which the transfer is sought to be made has jurisdiction to try it. It was also held in Jagjivan Javerdas v. Magdum Ali (4), that the District Court could not transfer a suit under s. 24 which had not been properly instituted. We think, however, that these authorities only mean that the Court from which the suit is to be transferred must have had jurisdiction at the time the suit was instituted. The present case was properly instituted in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge and the Second Class Subordinate Judge to whom it was transferred for disposal by administrative order had jurisdiction to entertain it and deal with it up to the time when the plaint was amended.

We are of opinion that there is no legal objection to our passing an order under s. 24 transferring the case to the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. We think the present case is distinguishable from any case which has been cited before us by the facts that the two Courts with which we are concerned are in a sense parts of one Court, and that the suit was properly instituted and registered in the first instance and would have been properly instituted even if the amendment had been part of the original plaint, since all suits whether of special or ordinary jurisdiction are according to the recognized practice instituted in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge. As at present advised we are not in agreement with the view taken by the learned First Class Subordinate Judge that the only legal way of dealing with the case was that the Second Class Subordinate Judge should have made an order under O. VII r. 10. Speaking for myself, I must say that if the learned First Class Subordinate Judge was of opinion that a re-presentation of the plaint to him was necessary before he could proceed with the case, there was nothing to prevent him returning the plaint to the plaintiff in order that it should be re-presented. But in the view we take, O. VII, r. 10 has no application in a case like the resent when the suit was properly instituted in the first instance. In Mahomedbhai Husenbhai v. Adamji Halimbhai (5) Macleod, C. J. at p. 236 said :

"Under O. VII, r. 10 it is no doubt obligatory that the plaint, if instituted in the wrong Court, shall at any stage of the suit be returned to be presented to a Court in which the suit should have been instituted. But it is only in a case where the suit is instituted in a wrong Court that the plaint must be returned."

If it transpires during the hearing of a suit that the plaint has been instituted in a wrong Court, everything that has been done by that Court is without jurisdiction and therefore the suit has to be instituted afresh in the proper Court. But, in the present case, everything that was done by the Second Class Subordinate Judge up to the time when the amendment of the plaint was allowed was within his jurisdiction. We are not aware of any authority for the view that in such a case it is necessary that the suit should be instituted again and re-registered as a fresh suit under O. IV. The amendment of the plaint did not make it a new suit and no re-institution of the suit was necessary. Although, we propose to make an order under s. 24, we should not be taken to have decided that an order of transfer is really necessary. Shankerji Samalji v. Vrajlal Bapalal (1) to which the learned First Class Subordinate Judge has referred, did not deal with similar facts. There a suit had been sent for disposal to a Subordinate Judge Subordinate to the First Class Subordinate Judge by administrative order. It was afterwads removed from his file and transferred to another Subordinate

Judge also by administrative order. The learned Chief Justice said (p. 468*):

".....there is a clear distinction between orders of transfer and administrative orders allocating business to Courts of particular Judges. When once a Judge has taken congnizance of a suit, it seems to me, that any order removing the suit from his file is an order of transfer."

Holding that the order made by the First Class Subordinate Judge there was an order of transfer, he ruled that it was invalid because the First Class Subordinate Judge has no power of transfer under s. 24, Civil P. C., but only the District Judge or the High Court. It is to be noted that in that case the Subordinate Judge from whose Court the case was transferred was competent to try it. He had not only taken cognizance of it, but, apart from the order removing the suit from his Court, he would have been competent to proceed with it and dispose of it. In our opinion, the position is not the same when, as in the present case, the Judge to whom a suit has been sent by an administrative order has become functus officio because by reason of an amendment of the plaint the valuation of the suit exceeds his pecuniary jurisdiction. Where under those circumstances an administrative order for the allocation of business has become inoperative we can see no reason why the difficulty should not be removed by the First Class Subordinate Judge resuming control administratively of the suit which was properly instituted in his Court. He might in our opinion himself send for the papers in exercise of his powers under s. 23, Bom. Civil Courts Act, but whether he sends for the papers or whether they are sent to him makes no material difference. However, for the reasons already given, we have decided to make an order under s. 24 ex majore cautela, and we order accordingly that Regular Civil Suit No. 298 of 1938 be withdrawn from the Court of the extra joint Second Class Subordinate Judge and transferred for trial to the First Class Subordinate Judge, Surat. Costs to be costs in the case.

Appeal No. 329 of 1939

G. A. ARATOON—RESPONDENT

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 50, 99—Order of substitution by executing Court under s. 50 not affecting merits of case—No interference with, by Appellate Court by reason of s. 99.

When the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution makes an order for substitution under s. 50, Civil P. C it is a matter of procedure and not of jurisdiction. 109 Ind Cas. 417 (1), 139 Ind. Cas 397 (2) and 141 Ind. Cas. 61 (3), relied on.

An Appellate Court cannot therefore interfere with that order by reason of s. 99, where the merits of the case are not affected by the irregularity. 109 Ind. Cas. 417 (1) and 168 Ind. Cas. 346 (6), distinguished, Amar Chandra Banerjee v. Guru Prosunno Mukerjee (5), explained, Sham Lal Pal v. Modhu Sudan Sircar (4) and 133 Ind. Cas. 609 (7), relied on.

A. from the appellate order of the Judicial Commissioner, Chota Nagpur, dated August 9, 1939.

Mr. K. Sahay, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. P. Jaruhar, for the Respondent.

Agarwala, J.—The facts material to this appeal are as follows: G. A. Aratoon & Co., obtained in the Calcutta High Court a decree for Rs. 2,000 against Upendra and Debendra, a firm carrying on business at Bundu near Ranchi in this province. On the application of the decree-holder the decree was transferred for execution to Ranchi. In the Ranchi Court a compromise was entered into under which the judgment-debtors agreed to pay Rs. 100 a month to the decree-holder until the decretal debt should be satisfied. The compromise also provided that in default of any payment the decree-holder should be entitled to realize the entire balance then due. Only one instalment was paid. The Ranchi Court which executed the decree then struck off the execution and returned the decree to the Calcutta High Court with a report that the decree had been satisfied only in part. Thereafter the decree was again transferred for execution to Ranchi on an application made by the decree-holder for its execution there. On receipt of the report of the process-server by the Court at Ranchi it was learnt that Upendra had died. On the application of the decree-holder the widow and the son of Upendra were substituted in his place in the execution proceedings by the Court at Ranchi to which the decree had been transferred. These persons appeared and objected that the Court at Ranchi had no jurisdiction to execute the decree as against them. They relied upon s. 50, Civil P. C., which provides that :

"Where a judgment-debtor dies before the decree has been fully satisfied, the holder of the decree may apply to the Court which passed it to execute the same against the legal representative of the deceased."

The contention of the objectors therefore was that it was only the Calcutta High Court which could direct the decree to be executed against them. That objection has been considered by the Court below and overruled. They have preferred the present appeal and in support of their appeal a number of decisions relating to the construction of s. 50 have been referred to. The first of these is the decision of the Privy Council in Jang Bahadur v. Bank of Upper India Ltd. (1). There it was held that it is the Court which passes the decree which has power under s. 50 to substitute the heirs of a deceased judgment-debtor ; it was, however, observed by their Lordships that the matter was not one of jurisdiction but of procedure, and that in the case that was before them objections to the defect in the procedure of the executing Court had been waived by acquiescene.

The same view has been taken in two cases of this Court, namely, Chandra Chur Deo v. Shyam Kumari (2) and Kalu Ram v. Sheonand Rai Jokhi Ram (3), in both of which cases the defect in procedure had been waived by the persons who subsequently challenged the order of the Court on the ground that the procedure was defective. It cannot now be disputed that when the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution makes an order for substitution under s. 50, it is a matter of procedure and not of jurisdiction. The question therefore arises whether an Appellate Court should interfere with an order under s. 50 made by a Court to which a decree has been transferred for execution where the merits of the case are not affected by the irregularity. Section 99 of the Code provides in unequivocal language that no decree should be reversed or substantially varied, nor any case should be remanded in appeal on account of any misjoinder of parties or causes of action or any error, defect or irregularity in any proceedings in the suit, not affecting the merits of the case or the jurisdiction of the Court. Unless therefore, the defect in the procedure of the Court below is a material irregularity which has occasioned injustice to the aggrieved party, this Court, in exercise of its appellate powers, cannot interfere with the order of the Court below. In Sham Lal Pal v. Modhu Sudan Sircar (4) it was held that, even assuming that an application under s. 234 of the Code of 1882 (which has been replaced by s. 50 of the Code of 1908) to the Court which passed the decree was a necessary preliminary to proceedings under s. 248 by the Code executing the decree, the omission to make it was only an irregularity which did not affect the merits of the case, and, under s. 578 (which has been replaced by s. 99 of the present Code) the order of the Court of first instance could not be reversed on account of such irregularity. This case was referred to in a later decision of the Division Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Amar Chundra Banerjee v. Guru Prosunno Mukerjee (5). In that case it was held that an application by the transferee of a decree for execution after substitution of his name can be entertained only by the Court which passed the decree and the Court to which the decree has been transferred has no jurisdiction to entertain it. With reference to Sham Lal Pal v. Modhu Sudan Sircar (4) Banerji, J. said :

"As to the case in Sham Lal Pal v. Modhu Sudan Sircar (4) that case is distinguishable from the present. The question there was as to the meaning and effect of s. 234, Civil P. C., which provides that an application for executing the decree against the legal representative of a deceased judgment-debtor is to be made to the Court which passed it but does not, like s. 232, leave any discretion in that Court to allow execution or not."

Order XXI, r. 22 has replaced s. 232 of the old Code. Stevens, J. agreed with the judgment of Banerji, J., but said that he desired to express no opinion with regard to the construction of s. 234. In the Privy Council case to which I have already referred both these decisions were referred to, and Banerji, J.'s explanation of the decision in Sham Lal Pal v. Modhu Sudan Sircar (4) was accepted. The case before their Lordships of the Privy Council was a case in which the judgment-debtors had acquiesced in the defect of procedure and their Lordships therefore held that they must be taken to have waived the defect. They were not dealing with a case in which it was necessary to decide whether an Appellate Court should interfere where a defect of procedure has occurred but where it is not shown that the defect has affected the merits of the case. The case which at first sight supports the contention of the learned Advocate for the appellants is a Division Bench decision of this Court in Official Trustee of Bengal v. Basdeo Bhagat (6). That was a case in which there had been no waiver of the irregularity in the procedure of the Court executing the decree in making an order under s. 50, Civil P. C., but the learned Judges who dealt with that case, after referring to the Privy Council decision, decided that the execution should not be allowed to proceed. The facts were that the executing Court had refused to order the substitution of the representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor, and it was against that order of refusal that the appeal had been preferred. Mohammad Noor, J. delivering the judgment of the Court said :

"We are at a stage where no execution has been issued. When it is brought to the notice of the Court that a certain procedure is irregular, and when the proceedings can be regularised by applications to the proper Court, there is no reason why the Court should allow the irregular proceeding to continue."

It will be observed therefore that Mohammad Noor, J. was not dealing with a case like the present where the Court has passed an order in favour of continuing the execution proceeding and the Appellate Court has to consider whether the order should be interfered with. The last case to which I propose to refer is the decision of a Division Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Marahmat Husain v. Oudh Commercial Bank, Ltd. (7). There it was held that s. 50 (1) does not confer exclusive jurisdiction on the Court which passed a decree for the purpose of substituting the names of the legal representatives of a deceased judgment-debtor, but that an application for substitution is also entertainable by a Court to which a decree has been transferred for execution. In delivering the judgment of the Court, Bennet, J. observed :

"For the judgment-debtor-appellant it was argued that although s. 42 gave jurisdiction to the Court to which a decree was transferred for purposes of execution that jurisdiction does not include the particular jurisdiction given by s 50 (1), exclusively to the Court which passed the decree. Now if that were so a very remarkable result would follow, because s. 47 (3) states that a Court executing a decree shall determine all questions which arise as to whether any person is or is not representative of a party."

In my view the defect in procedure which has occurred has not affected the merits of the decision and should not be interfered with. The appellants admittedly reside in Ranchi and, prima facie therefore it was more convenient for them to have the matter decided at Ranchi than at Calcutta. It has not been made a matter of grievance that they have been inconvenienced in placing their case before the Ranchi Court or that they were not representatives of the deceased judgment-debtor. I would therefore dismiss this appeal with costs.

Rowland, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, r. 89—Mortgagee purchasing property at auction sale in execution of mortgage decree—Application under O. XXI, r. 89 by prior purchaser of half of mortgaged property—Applicant, if becomes party to mortgage suit—Rejection of application—Subsequent suit for redemption by applicant, if barred—Application under O. XXI, r. 89, if falls under s. 47.

Where the mortgaged property is sold in execution of the mortgage decree and an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C, to have the sale set aside is made by the prior purchaser of half of the mortgaged property, the applicant does not become a party, to the mortgage suit in which the decree was passed. The dispute between him and the mortgagee who himself is the auction purchaser cannot be deemed to be a dispute between the parties to the suit within the meaning of s. 47 and hence a suit by the applicant for redemption of half of the mortgaged property cannot be said to be barred by s. 47.

The rejection of the application under O. XXI, r. 89 does not bar the subsequent suit to redeem, for, the applicant did not by his application under r. 89 make himself a party to the suit in which he could have been impleaded. 65 Ind. An application by a person interested under O. XXI, r. 89, does not fall under s. 47, for there is now special provision for an appeal against such an order under O. XLIII, (1) (f), and the controversy on the question as to whether an appeal did or did not lay in the case of a dispute between the judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser, is now set at rest. Krishna Satapasti v. Saraswatula Sambasiva Row (5), Maganlal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji Bhaichand (6), Bashir-ud-din v. Johri Singh (7) and Anandi Kunwari v. Ajudhia Nath (8), referred to. S. A. against the judgment and decree of the First Class Sub-Judge, Shikarpur, dated November 24, 1937.

Mr. Srikishendas H. Lulla, for the Appellant

Mr. Kodumal Issardas, for the Respondents.

Davis, J. C.—This is an appeal against a judgment of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Shikarpur, with appellate powers, reversing a judgment of the Subordinate Judge at Shikarpur who passed a preliminary decree for the redemption of half of Survey No. 426 in deh Khanpur in a redemption suit brought by the plaintiff for the redemption of the whole survey number. The plaintiff grounded his suit for the redemption of the whole survey number upon a purchase by him from defendant No. 2 of half the survey number being a sale deed, dated February 6, 1934, in satisfaction of two mortgage bonds, dated January 24, 1922, and July 14, 1922, (Exs. 40 and 41) and a money decree, the mortgages having merged in the sale. Defendant No. 1 however, resisted plaintiff's suit on the ground that he was a prior mortgagee under a mortgage, dated February 9, 1920, and that on the foot of this mortgage he had obtained an award decree on an award out of Court, and that in execution of that decree he had purchased the whole survey number in the Court auction on December 19, 1934.

In the trial Court the suit was decided on the question of whether the plaintiff had a right to redeem. The learned trial Judge stated that it was not seriously disputed that the plaintiff as purchaser of part of the mortgaged property had a right to redeem under s. 91, T. P. Act, and the question which was urged before him was whether the plaintiff was entitled and bound to redeem the entire mortgage, but he came to the conclusion that, as the integrity of the mortgage was broken by the purchase by the mortgagee of part of the mortgaged property and following a long line of cases decided by the Allahabad High Court from Kuray Mal v. Puran Mal (1) and Ahamed Husain v. Muhammad Qasim Khan (2) the plaintiff suing for redemption could sue only for that part of the property which he had purchased. He referred particularly to the case in Amba Prasad v. Vahid Ullah (3), as a case with facts similar to this. Therefore, he allowed the plaintiff to redeem only the half of the survey number which he had purchased on payment of Rs. 625 which was the amount claimed by the defendant, the prior mortgagee and auction purchaser.

In the first Appellate Court, however, the suit seems to have proceeded on altogether different lines and while the trial Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit in part, the learned Appellate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that he had by an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., before the sale in execution of the award decree was confirmed, to set aside the sale, become a party to the suit and that any question between him and the auction-purchaser should have been decided in execution proceedings under s. 47, Civil P. C. The learned Judge also held that the plaintiff's suit was barred under O. XXI, r. 92 (3), Civil P. C., because the suit is a suit to set aside an order confirming a sale by the party against whom the order is made. So far as the suit is barred under s. 47, Civil P. C., the learned Judge relied on the fact that the word "suit" includes execution proceedings, and that as the plaintiff in suit No. 542 of 1932 applied under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C. to have the sale set aside, and to redeem the land, as he has sued in this suit to redeem the land so he was a party to Suit No. 542 of 1932, and as this application was disallowed and he did not appeal, he cannot reagitate the matter in this suit. The learned Judge, however, points out that as Suit No. 542 of 1932, was based upon an award out of Court, the appellant could not have been joined as a party to the suit at any rate before the decree and he relies upon a judgment of the Privy Council in support of his conclusion that the appellant did become a party to Suit No. 542 of 1932 within the meaning of s. 47, Civil P. C., when he made an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C. to set aside the sale. In the Privy Council case in

Ganpat Lal v. Bindbasini Prashad Narayan Singh (4), their Lordships said (p. 929):

"Turning to the legal questions that thereupon arise in this case, the appellant did not dispute the proposition that if a person interested in mortgaged property, who should have been joined as a party to a mortgage suit, but has not been so joined comes in before foreclosure or sale, he has all the rights of redemption that his interest in the property gives him and may exercise them notwithstanding the decree."

The learned Appellate Judge in another part of his judgment points out that the appellant could not have been joined under O. XXXIV, r. 1, Civil P. C. in Suit No. 542 of 1932, because that order applies to regular suits and not to applications made under para. 20, Sch. II, to file private awards as was the case here. Therefore, the learned Judge takes the application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., as an application in the suit within the meaning of s. 47, Civil P. C., holding then as a consequence that the appellants' rights as a mortgagee in the land must have been extinguished because in that same judgment their Lordships hold that where mortgaged land has been sold in execution of the decree, parties to the suit cannot thereafter sue to redeem so long as the sale is not set aside because the sale extinguished the right to redeem and the owner holds as purchaser, and is entitled to raise all defences that belong to him as such. But their Lordships were dealing with a case, as they pointed out, where the sons were suing to redeem land which their father had mortgaged and which he had a right to mortgage binding their interest; the sons did not challenge the mortgage or the debts, and when the land was sold and their father's right in it extinguished, their rights were extinguished also. They had also refused to amend the plaint and to add a prayer to set aside the sale, so their Lordships held that the sale must stand and their right to redeem must remain extinguished.

But the facts in this case are different, and we find it difficult to hold that an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., makes the person who makes it a party to the suit within the meaning of s. 47, Civil P. C. It is not all applications made in execution of a decree which fall under s. 47, Civil P. C An application by a person interested under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., does not fall under s. 47, Civil P. C., for there is now special provision for an appeal against such an order under O. XLIII (1) (f), and the controversy between the High Courts as to whether an appeal did or did not lay in the case of a dispute between the judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser. Krishna Satapasti v. Saraswatula Sambasiva Row (5), Maganlal Mulji v. Doshi Mulji Baichand (6), Bashir-ud-din v. Jhori Singh (7) and Anandi Kunwari v. Ajudhia Nath (8) is now set aside at rest. But a dispute between a stranger to the suit and an auction purchaser, as was the case when the appellant in this suit made his application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., could not be deemed a dispute between parties to the suit within the meaning of s. 47, Civil P. C., and, with all respect to the learned Judge, we do not think it can be said that the appellant's suit in this case was barred by s. 47, Civil P. C.

The question then however remains as to whether this suit is barred by reason of the provisions of sub-r. (3) of r. 92, and if this suit is a suit to set aside a sale or if the suit for redemption will not lie until the sale is set aside, the learned Appellate Judge would be right and the plaintiff's suit is barred. Clearly the plaintiff's application to set aside the sale was disallowed; he did not appeal, and the order was an order made against him, and he cannot under sub-r. (3) of r. 92 sue to set the sale aside. The decision on this point appears to us to turn upon the question whether by the refusal of the Court to set aside the sale, the appellant's right to redeem was extinguished. It is to be remembered that he applied under O. XXI, r. 89 as purchaser of half the survey number and his right to redeem in this suit was based upon his title as purchaser. The three cases to which the learned Judge refers, do not appear to assist his conclusions. In Sukhi v. Ghulam Safdar Khan (9) the Judicial Committee held that the puisne mortgagee not impleaded in a suit against the prior mortgagee could sue the prior mortgagee, but that if the prior mortgagee was owner by virtue of the purchase of the mortgagor's rights, he could raise the prior mortgage as a shield against the claims of the puisne mortgagee; but this does not show that the appellant as purchaser and a party interested within the meaning of O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., and not impleaded in that prior suit, cannot sue for redemption in a subsequent suit. In Bhekdhari Mahton v. Radhika Koer (10) it was decided that if the integrity of the mortgage is broken up by the purchase by the mortgagee of the mortgagor's property, and the mortgagee omits to implead persons interested in a portion of the property, he cannot resist redemption of the portion concerned on payment of a proportionate amount, and it was also decided, following line of cases, that if a mortgagee is not impleaded in a suit when he should be so impleaded, he is not bound by the decree.

In Dharindhar Boral v. Panchanan Saha (11) it was held that where the purchaser of the equity of redemption was not joined as a party to a suit in which the mortgagee obtained a decree, the purchaser is entitled in a subsequent suit to occupy the position in which he would have been had he been a party. He can sue for redemption and it is not essential for him to proceed to get the mortgage sale set aside before he can bring a suit for redemption. It was pointed out that when the Code was amended the words in s. 89, T. P. Act, "and therefore the defendant's right to redeem and the security shall both be extinguished was not carried into O. XXXIV, Civil P. C. and that in Sukhi v Ghulam Safdar Khan (9) the Judicial Committee had pointed out that where a mortgagee had not been made a party to a suit in which the prior mortgagee has obtained a decree, the puisne mortgagee is entitled in a subsequent suit to occupy the position which he would have had, had he been a party.

The learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court were of the opinion that there was no difference between the purchaser as plaintiff, as in the case before us, or the puisne mortgagee as plaintiff. It is true that in the Calcutta case the plaintiff had not complicated the position by making an application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., but we do not think the failure of that application to set aside the sale bars the present suit to redeem if the plaintiff can redeem without setting aside the sale. We think the plaintiff can so sue, because he did not by his application under O. XXI, r. 89, Civil P. C., make himself a party to the suit in which he could not have been impleaded. We think, therefore that the judgment of the trial Court was right and must be restored, and that the judgment of the lower Appellate Court must be reversed and the appeal allowed with costs throughout.

Thakur JAMUNA PRASAD SINGH—RESPONDENT

Landlord and tenant—Rent—Suspension, doctrine of—Essentials for applicability of—Landlord realising rent of part of demised land from sub-tenant by mistake and not with intention of evicting tenant—Tenant not entitled to suspension of rent.

Mere dispossession of the tenant from part of the demised premises is not sufficient to justify a total suspension of rent, but in order to apply the doctrine of suspension it must be proved that the landlord deliberately and intentionally evicted the tenant from a part of the demised premises. 156 Ind. Cas 1066 (7) and Henderson v. Mears (8), relied on.

Where a landlord has realised the rent of a part of the demised land from the sub-tenant by mistake and his purpose was not to evict the tenant from that portion of the land, his action does not entitle the tenant to a suspension of the rent of the tenure.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur, dated January 24, 1940.

Messrs. S. N. Bose and K. N. Lal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Kanhaiyaji and Mahabir Prasad, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This second appeal by the defendant arises out of a suit for recovery of rent of a sub-tenure for the last quarter of 1344 and the year 1345 Fasli. The rent of the sub-tenure is Rs. 302 a year. The defendant pleaded that he had been dispossessed of a portion of the tenure by the plaintiff. It appears that the plaintiff realised rent for the period in suit in respect of plot No. 688 of Khata No. 35 from the tenant in possession. At the time when the sub-tenure was created no rent had been assessed in respect of this plot. Since then, however, the defendant has settled it with a tenant at the rate of Rs. 3-12-0 per annum. The first Court was not satisfied that the defendant was entitled to realise rent in respect of this plot under the terms of his lease, or that if he was so entitled, he had not in fact realised it. The Appellate Court held that the plaintiff had in fact realised Rs. 5 in respect of plot No. 688 for the period in suit and that it was the defendant who was entitled to this rent. The Appellate Court, however, held that the plaintiff had realised this rent inadvertently, that is to say, that he realised it under a mistake, and that the plaintiff did not intend to dispossess the defendant from any part of the sub-tenure. Accordingly the plaintiff's suit has been decreed subject to the plaintiff refunding to the defendant Rs. 5 which he has realised.

In appeal it is contended that as the rent for the sub-tenure was a lump sum the defendant is entitled to suspension of the rent in its entirety. Reference was made to the decision of the Privy Council in Katyayani Debi v. Udoy Kumar Das (1), and to the decisions of this Court reported in Deoki Kuer v. Shiva Prasad Singh (2), Dalip Narayan Singh v. Suraj Narayan Missir (3), Bhuneshwar Nath Pandey v. Gudur Nath Pandey (4), Rameshwar Lal v. Butto Krishto Rai (5), and to the decision in Sajjad Ahmad Chowdhury v. Trailakhya Nath Chowdhury (6). On the other hand, in Hira Lal Singh v. Rinkauri Singh (7), a Division Bench of this Court held that mere dispossession of the tenant from part of the demised premises is not sufficient to justify a total suspension of rent, but that in order to apply the doctrine of suspension it must be proved that the landlord deliberately and intentionally evicted the tenant from a part of the demised premises. This is in accordance with the decision in Henderson v. Mears (8). The facts of that case were that the defendant being a tenant of certain apartments belonging to the plaintiff, left them and put K into possession, for the purpose of taking care of and letting them. The plaintiff turned K out by force and afterwards brought an action for rent. The defendant contested the action on the ground that there had been an eviction. The plaintiff, however, alleged that he turned K out because he was not a proper person to be in the rooms and because he had misconducted himself. The Judge directed the jury that the question was whether the trespass upon K was committed merely for the purpose of expelling him from the house or whether it was for the purpose of depriving the defendant of his possession and held that it was a right question. In appeal it was held that there was no misdirection. On the finding of fact in the present case that the plaintiff realised the rent of plot No. 688 by mistake it must be that his purpose was not to evict the defendant and that his action, therefore, does not entitle the defendant to a suspension of the rent of the sub-tenure.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed. In the circumstances, however, as this litigation has been occasioned by the plaintiff's mistake it is only right that the parties should bear their own costs throughout.

Landlord and tenant—Estoppel—Termination of tenancy—Estoppel, when continues—S. 43, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), if modifies rule—S. 46 of the Act if applies.

The ordinary rule is that a tenant must deliver possession before he can dispute his landlord's title and that, that estoppel ordinarily continues even beyond the term of the tenancy unless the tenant first delivers possession. Section 43, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act does not purport to lay down any law modifying the ordinary law with regard to relations between landlord and tenant. Section 46 of that Act has no application. 79 Ind. Cas. 881 (1), approved.

A. against the decree of the City Civil Court, Madras (Additional), dated August 18, 1939.

Messrs. T. V. Muthukrishna Aiyer and T. V. Bhagawat, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Aiyer, for the Respondents.

Judgment. — The Sri Parthasarathi Temple, Triplicane, leased the suit land to defendant No. 1, defendant No. 1 sub-leased it to defendant No. 2, and defendant No. 2 to the plaintiff. At the termination of the period of tenancy, defendant No. 2 brought proceedings under Chap. VII, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, to recover possession from the plaintiff. An order was passed under s. 43 in defendant No. 2's favour, and the plaintiff thereupon filed this suit under s. 47. He raised very many pleas and they are set out in the five issues. Inter alia, the plaintiff alleged that defendant No. 2 agreed to allow the plaintiff to remain in possession for three years which, he said, was the period of the lease of defendant No. 1 from the temple and defendant No. 2, from defendant No. 1. After the plaint was filed the temple obtained an order under s. 43, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, against defendant No. 1. The plaintiff thereupon obtained permission to amend his plaint and add another ground that the period of tenancy having determined, defendant No. 2 had no right to possession. The plaintiff's suit was dismissed and hence this appeal.

The only point argued in appeal was whether defendant No. 2 could retain possession in view of the fact that the period of her own tenancy had terminated. As already pointed out, one of the plaintiff's contentions was that the period of tenancy was for three years and that he too was entitled to remain in possession for three years. His present contention is therefore inconsistent with one of his main contentions in the amended plaint. It is however said that the matter has now been determined by an order under s. 43 in proceedings between the temple and defendant No. 1 and that finding is final and binding until defendant No. 1 has had it set aside in the City Civil Court under s. 47. Such a suit was filed by defendant No. 1 and that suit is still pending. The ordinary rule is admitted to be that a tenant must deliver possession before he can dispute his landlord's title and that that estoppel ordinarily continues even beyond the term of the tenancy unless the tenant first delivers possession. A number of cases are quoted by Mulla in his "T. P. Act," as holding that the estoppel continues after termination of the tenancy unless possession is given up. Halsbury, in Vol. 13 at p. 506, says:

"But, if the tenant came into possession under a lessor, the better opinion would seem to be that he must surrender possession before he disputes the lessor's title; it has however been held that it is not necessary that he should actually go out of possession... .. ...and that it is sufficient that he should come to a new arrangement with the person who really has the title to hold under him."

The only case quoted by the learned Advocate for the plaintiff in appeal is Ramaswami Thevan v. Alaga Pillai, 79 Ind. Cas. 881 (1) which was a case in which the Govt. had granted tree patta to a certain person who had sub-leased his rights to a tenant. The Govt. issued a notice to the pattadar which amounted to an eviction and Wallace, J. held in the words of another case he quoted, Ram Chandra v. Pramatha Natha, 63 Ind. Cas. 754 (2) 'that there was the equivalent of eviction'. If the tenant has been evicted and he is put into possession by the person who evicts him, then his possession is not referred back to his original lessor and so the estoppel would not operate as it would if he had not been evicted. So it is seen that even in Ramaswami Thevan v Alaga Pillai, 79 Ind. Cas. 881 (1) it was considered that eviction or something equivalent to it must have taken place before the lessee can deny the title of the lessor.

The learned Advocate for the plaintiff has relied on the wording of ss. 43 and 46, Presidency Small Cause Courts Act. Section 43 merely lays down the procedure to be adopted by the Court in applications for recovery of possession of property. If the occupant has proved that the tenancy has been determined and that his lessor had no right to possession, then it is sufficient cause, for the purpose of that section, why the Court should not pass an order for possession. The section does not purport to lay down any law modifying the ordinary law with regard to relations between landlord and tenant. Section 46 of that Act has no application as far as I can see; for the very question under consideration is whether defendant No. 2 is entitled to possession. It is further argued that a decision under s. 43 is, in the absence of a decree of a Civil Court varying it, final and that therefore the tenancy must be deemed to have been determined. I have already held that even if that were the case, defendant No. 2 would still be entitled to retain possession until he is ousted by regular proceedings; but in view of the fact that a suit is still pending in the City Civil Court in which the right of defendant No. 1 and therefore of defendant No. 2 to remain in possession is being agitated and in view of the plaintiff's own case that his tenancy and defendant No. 2's tenancy are for three years, I do not consider that it can be assumed that the tenancy has terminated. In any event therefore whether on the facts or in law, the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of Dhanbad, dated September 18, 1939.

Mr. S. C. Mozumdar, for the Appellants.

Mr. R. S. Chatterjee, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit to recover plot No. 462 which belonged to one Alhad Mia. The latter died leaving two sons, Ramjan and Basarat. These two sons executed a usufructuary mortgage of the property in favour of the appellants for a period of seven years, expiring in 1340 Fasli. Basarat died leaving a minor son Abdin. In 1934, Ramjan and the mother of Abdin, as the latter's guardian, executed a sale deed in favour of the plaintiff. The present suit was to recover possession on the basis of this sale deed. The Court below has decreed the plaintiff's suit.

In appeal it is now contended that the mother of Abdin, being merely his de facto guardian, had no power to sell any immovable property belonging to him and that, consequently, the sale of his interest to the plaintiff was absolutely void. There can be no doubt of the correctness of the proposition in view of the decision of the Privy Council in the case of Imambandi v. Mutsaddi (1), but by the purchase the plaintiff indubitably acquired the 8 annas interest of Ramjan and thus became a co-owner of the property. The question, therefore, resolves itself into this: Is the plaintiff who has acquired the interest of Ramjan as a co-owner entitled as a co-owner to eject the defendants who are trespassers since the expiry of the mortgage under which they were in possession. In Maganlal Dulabhadas v. Budhar Purshottam (2) it was held that where a tenancy is entered into for a fixed term with co-owners of property, and the tenant continues on sufference after the expiration of the period of the tenancy, a suit brought to eject the tenant by one only of the co-owners is maintainable. Similarly, in Syed Ahmed Sahib Shutari v. The Magnesite Syndicate, Ltd. (3) it was held that one of several co-owners is entitled to maintain an action in ejectment against a trespasser without joining the other co-owners as parties to the action. On behalf of the appellants reference was made to the decision in Hossein Mahomed v. Fakir Mahomed (4). The facts of that case were that several joint landlords had assented to a transfer of a non-transferable holding. The remaining co-sharer landlords sued to eject the trespasser from their shares only and to recover possession of the whole holding on the basis of the defenant being a trespasser. It was held that the defendant could not be ejected from the holding as his transfer had been recognised by some of the co-sharer landlords and that the plaintiff ought not to be given a decree for joint possession with the purchaser as he had sued for possession of the entire holding. The facts of that case are distinguishable from the facts of the Bombay and Madras cases. Here, there is no question of the defendants not being trespassers. Their mortgage has expired and if there had been no transfer to the plaintiff the mortgagors would have been entitled to recover possession. The plaintiff is the owner of a share of one of the mortgagors and in principle there is no bar to his obtaining possession of the mortgaged property.

Criminal Revision No. 271 of 1940
April 23, 1940
EIGLBY, J.

FAZLUR RAHMAN SARKAR AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—PETITIONERS
versus
ATAL BEHARY GHOSE—COMPLAINANT—OPPOSITE PARTY

Bengal Agricultural Debtors Act (VII of 1936), ss. 25 (1) (e), 27 (1) — Under s. 25 (1) (e), subject to s. 27 (1), Board can order usufructuary mortgagee to restore possession to mortgagor.

Under s. 25 (1) (e), Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, the Board has jurisdiction to give directions subject to the provision of s. 27 (1) as to the manner in which the sum for which the debt had been settled should be paid. The intention of the Legislature in enacting s. 27 (1) was merely to specify the extent to which a mortgage will continue to subsist after an award has been made. Subject to the provisions of this section, the Board have full authority to modify the terms of the original mortgage upon which the loan had been advanced.

Board has, therefore, jurisdiction to order the usufructuary mortgagee to restore possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagor and thus convert the usufructuary mortgage into a simple mortgage. The amount at which the mortgage debt is settled would however continue to be a charge under s. 27 on the mortgaged property until the terms of the settlement have been fulfilled.

Mr. Dinesh Chandra Roy, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Jnanendra Kumar Roy, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This rule is directed against the order of Moulavi Abul Hossain, Honorary Magistrate of Serajganj, dated December 22, 1939 under which he convicted the petitioners under s. 379, I. P. C. and sentenced them to pay fines of Rs. 52 each or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for two months each. The case for the prosecution appears to have been that the complainant was the mortgagor in respect of certain property which had been mortgaged to Fazlur Rahman Sarkar, petitioner No. 1 and also to the father of Abdul Gani, petitioner No. 2 under a usufructuary mortgage which was executed on February 17, 1932. In due course the complainant applied to the Mesra Debt Settlement Board for the settlement of his debts including the debt covered by the above-mentioned mortgage. The amount of these debts was duly determined under s. 18, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, and on October 8, 1938 the Debt Settlement Board settled the complainant's debts under an award, one of the terms of which was that, as far as the debts due to the petitioners were concerned, these should be liquidated by means of annual payments of Rs. 7-5-0 a year for 20 years and that, in the meantime, the mortgaged property would be made over to the possession of the mortgagor with effect from the beginning of Magh 1345 B. S. It was the complainant's case that in accordance with the terms of this award the mortgaged property came to his possession and he cultivated it through his bargardars, but that on July 17, 1939 the petitioners together with a number of other people entered the land and cut away and took jute therefrom valued at about Rs. 80. The main defence of the petitioners before the trial Court was to the effect that they were not guilty and did not take part in the alleged occurrence. The learned Magistrate after a careful discussion of the evidence came to the conclusion that the complainant's debt to the petitioners had been settled under the award of the Debt Settlement Board on October 8, 1938, as alleged by him, and that as a result of the award he had obtained possession of the mortgaged property and had grown jute thereon through his bargardars, which had been cut and taken away by the petitioners. The learned Magistrate further found that the prosecution case had been satisfactorily proved and the petitioners were guilty under s. 379, I. P. C.

The main point urged on behalf of the petitioners in connection with this rule is that they should not have been convicted under s. 379, I. P. C. because in view of the provisions of s. 27, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, the Debt Settlement Board had no jurisdiction to direct that the mortgaged property should be made over to the complainant and in this view of the case, this term in the award dated October 8, 1938, must be regarded as being without jurisdiction. It is, therefore, contended that the usufructuary mortgage dated February 17, 1932, should have been regarded as still subsisting on July 17 1939, the date of the occurrence; and this being the case, the petitioners could not be convicted of theft. From a reference to the proceedings of the Debt Settlement Board there is no doubt that the debt due to the petitioners was duly determined under s. 18, Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, and that this debt was settled by means of an award under s. 19 of the Act. Under s. 25 (1) (e) of the Act it is laid down that amongst other particulars which should be included in the award are directions as to the manner and the order in which and the times at which the amounts referred to in cl. (d) shall be paid. Clause (d) of this section refers to the amount to be paid to each creditor for each debt owing to him under the terms of an amicable settlement or of an order of the Board under s. 19 or s. 22. It is, therefore, clear that the Board had jurisdiction to give directions as to the manner in which the sum for which the debt had been settled should be paid; their directions on this point were to the effect that the debt should be settled for Rs. 151-4-0 which sum should be payable by annual instalments of Rs. 7-5-0 as already stated. Under the terms of the usufructuary mortgage, which was executed on Februaay 17, 1932, it was stipulated that the amount of the debt together with the interest thereon would be liquidated, by making over possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee for a period of 15 years. It would therefore appear to have been the intention of the parties according to the terms of the mortgage that the debt should be liquidated in the above mentioned manner.

Obviously, having regard to the provisions of s. 25 (1) (e), Ben. Agri. Debtors Act, the Debt Settlement Board had authority to prescribe some other manner for liquidating the debt and in my view, it cannot be said that the directions which they gave in respect of this matter were beyond their powers. In this connection, it is argued by the learned Advocate for the petitioners that, in view of the provisions of s. 27 of the Act, the Debt Settlement Board had no authority to alter the usufructuary character of the mortgage. Section 27 (1) of the Act is in the following terms:

"When an award is made as regards any debt which is secured by a mortgage, lien or charge on any immovable property of a debtor, such mortgage, lien or charge shall subsist to the extent of the amount payable in respect of such debt under the award until such amount has been paid or the property has been sold for the satisfaction of such debt or the debtor has been granted a certificate of discharge under sub-s. (5) of s. 22."

In my view the intention of the Legislature in enacting this section was merely to specify the extent to which a mortgage will continue to subsist after an award has been made. The sum specified in the award must obviously be regarded as a charge on the mortgaged property until the conditions of the settlement have been fulfilled, but subject to the provisions of this section, it would appear that the Board have full authority to modify the terms of the original mortgage upon which the loan had been advanced. In the case with which we are now dealing the effect of the award dated October 8, 1938 was merely to convert the usufructuary mortgage dated February 17, 1932 into a simple mortgage, and I am not prepared to accept the argument to the effect that in doing so the Debt Settlement Board acted without jurisdiction. There can be no doubt from the findings of the learned Magistrate that, at the time of the occurrence, the mortgaged land was actually in the possession of the complainant, and that all the elements of an offence under s. 379, I. P. C. are present. This being the case, I am of opinion that the convictions of the petitioner are correct. This rule must therefore be discharged and the order of the learned Magistrate dated December 22, 1939 is affirmed.

SAIDU KHAN AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS

GAYA PRASAD—OPPOSITE PARTY

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 200—Anticipatory protest petition and petition filed after Police report—Distinction between—Anticipatory protest petitions, if amount to complaints.

The only distinction between anticipatory protest petition, that is to say, petition made to the Magistrate before the receipt of the Police report and that filed after Police report, is, that an anticipatory protest petition may possibly call for no action at all if the Police report that is received afterwards actually places the accused persons on their trial. This position can of course never arise in connection with petitions of protest filed after the receipt of the Police report. But apart from this, the two stand on much the same footing. Petitions amount to petitions of complaint on which the petitioners must be examined under s. 200, Criminal P. C.

Cr. R. App. from an order of the Sessions Judge, Patna, dated July 15, 1940.

Messrs. S. Jafar Imam, K. P. Varma and S. C. Chakravarti, for the Petitioners.

Messrs. S. K. Banerji and B. K. Banerji, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Sessions Judge of Patna directing a further enquiry under s. 436, Criminal P. C. It appears that on the evening of March 31, 1940, the opposite party lodged an information with the Police about offences under ss. 147, 379 and 436, I. P. C. against the first seven petitioners before me. The Police investigation took a long time, and on May 10, 1940, the opposite party put in a petition to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate praying that a charge sheet may be called for from the Police, and the accused persons, namely the first seven petitioners, who were accused in the first information, as well as the six other persons who are among the petitioners before me, be placed on their trial. Three days afterwards the Magistrate disposed of the Police report which was what they called a final report as distinguished from a charge sheet, and ordered that the case be entered as true under ss. 147 and 379, I. P. C. but as a case of insufficient evidence. On the application made by the opposite party on May 10, the Magistrate on this date merely passed the order "file." The learned Sessions Judge was moved in revision and treated this order "file" passed on the opposite party's application of May 10, as an order summarily dismissing a complaint.

Mr. Jafar Imam who appears for the petitioners suggested that though similar applications filed by parties who were dissatisfied with a Police report have been treated in many reported decisions as petitions of complaint on which the petitioners must be examined, there is a distinction attaching to anticipatory protest petitions, that is to say, petitions made to the Magistrate before the receipt of the Police report. The only distinction that I can see seems to be that an anticipatory protest petition may possibly call for no action at all if the Police report that is received afterwards actually places the accused persons on their trial. This position can of course never arise in connexion with petitions of protest filed after the receipt of the Police report. But apart from this, it seems to me that the two stand on much the same footing. It is also common ground before me that it has actually been held on more than one occasion in this Court that such petitions amount to petitions of complaint on which the petitioners must be examined under s. 200. It is, therefore, impossible to interfere with the order of the learned Sessions Judge on the footing that he erred in treating the application made by the opposite party on May 10, as a complaint.

It was also suggested on behalf of the petitioners that this was not a case in which a further enquiry should have been ordered, but that the form of the order of the Sessions Judge should have been somewhat different. The answer to this is that s. 436 specifically authorizes the Sessions Judge in a case of this kind to direct the Subordinate Magistrate concerned 'to make further enquiry.' My attention was drawn to the fact that petitioners Nos. 8 to 13 were not named in the first information at all. That may be, but the point does not really arise at the present stage. It will be for the Magistrate who makes the further enquiry and who deals with the case to decide how far any distinction can be made between the first seven petitioners and the next six I cannot go into the merits of the case at this stage any more than could the learned Sessions Judge; and indeed, learned Counsel for the petitioners has carefully, and very properly refrained from taking me into the merits of the case. The application in revision fails and is dismissed.

The Trustees under the trust constitute an association of individuals within the meaning of s 3 of the Act, but that does not make them owners within the meaning of s. 9.

A difference must be drawn between property dedicated in name and in fact to God, in short a difference must be drawn between a private waqf created, if not primarily, at least in part, for the maintenance of the settlor's family, and a waqf created for charitable or religious purposes falling within the exception in s. 4 (3) (i) of the Income Tax Act. So far as the waqf operates as a waqf for charitable and religious purposes, immunity from taxation can be claimed, but so far as the waqf operates for the maintenance of the settlor's family or other quasi secular purposes, so far it appears to us the income is liable to taxation. 182 Ind. Cas. 712 (1), relied on. [p. 259, col. 2.]

For the purpose of ss. 6 and 9, Income Tax Act, the trustees of a private waqf created for maintaining the settlor's family are not the owners of the income. The income should, therefore, be taxed in the hands of the beneficiaries and not in the hands of the trustees. [p. 260, col. 1.]

It is not open to an Income-tax Officer, when he has proceeded to a final assessment to reopen that assessment whenever and, however, he pleases. The powers of Income-tax Officers in the matter of revision are limited by ss. 33, 34 and 35 of the Income Tax Act. [p. 258, col. 2.]

Reference made by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay &c., dated November 14, 1938.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate General, for the Applicant.

Mr. Suganlal Hassanand, for Opponents (Assessees).

Davis, C. J.—This is a reference by the Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay Presidency and Sind under s. 66 (2), Income Tax Act, relating to the assessment for the year 1937-38 of an association of individuals Messrs. Ibrahimji Hakimji, Ghulam Hussain Ibrahimji and others, Trustees of the waqf properties of Seth Ibrahimji Hakimji. This is a case of private waqf, now valid under the Mussalman Waqf Validating Act of 1913, and the real question at issue is whether the tax is to be assessed upon the income in the hands of the trustees as an association or upon the income in the hands of the beneficiaries.

The Advocate for the assessees relies principally upon a Bombay case in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay v. Abubakar Abaul Rehmam (1). Some confusion appears to have arisen in the first instance as to the proper designation or identity of the assessees. The assessment was first made by the Income-tax Officer upon the Ibrahimji Hakimji trust on an income of Rs. 2,937 left after payments to charities and various beneficiaries had been deducted. An appeal was made against this assessment principally upon the ground that the waqf as a charity was exempt, but also upon the question of the identity of the assessees. Before this appeal was decided, however, the Income-tax Officer came to the conclusion that this assessment was incorrect and he issued a second notice in the matter of this same income but addressed it, as he thought, to other assessees, namely, Seth Ibrahimji Hakimji, Ghulam Hussain Ibrahimji and others, trustees of the waqf properties of Seth Ibrahimji Hakimji, as "per Seth Ghulam Hussain Ibrahimji, Garden Road, Karachi". Though we accept for the purpose of this reference the finding of fact by the Commissioner that these two assessees, the Ibrahimji Hakimji trust in the first case, and the trustees by name in the second case, were different entities, and he answers the questions referred to us on this basis, were we deciding this question of fact, we think we should have come to the conclusion that the trust on whom the first notice was issued and the individual trustees who composed the trust were essentially the same. Indeed, the fact that the Income-tax Officer issued these two notices has been made the basis of much argument before us, for relying upon the case in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay, Presidenby & Aden v. Firm Khemehand Ramdas (2), it has been argued before us that the Income-tax Officer had no power to cancel his first assessment, he having proceeded finally under the Act to make a formal asssesment on the assessees, the trust. He could not, therefore, make a second assessment upon the same income on the second assessees, the trustees, as an association of individuals. Therefore, it was argued the second assessment was bad; and there is no first assessment in existence because that has been quashed on appeal by the Assistant Commissioner, when by consent the appeals against both assessments were heard together and the second assessment upon the trustees as an association was confirmed.

There is, however, no need for us to decide in this referenee the general question of how far an Income-tax Officer, having proceeded to a formal assessment upon the income in the hands of A, can treat that assessment as of no effect and proceed to a formal assessment upon the same income in the hands of B. The third question referred to us, which involves this question of what might be called a double assessment of the same income, is in the following form;

"(iii). Whether the assessment in dispute is invalid because the appeal londged against the assessment in the name of "Ibrahimji Hakimji Trust" was not decided by the Assistant Commissioner but was kept back for hearing along with the appeal against the assessment in dispute as agreed to by the assessees," and must be decided on its own particular facts.

It could have been argued that if the Income-tax Commissioner had not found as a matter of fact that the "trust" and the "trustees" were different persons, and second notice issued nominally under s. 22 could have been regarded as essentially a notice by the Income-tax Officer under s. 34, on the principle that what has to be looked at is what in fact and in substance has been done, and that mere labels, mere references to sections, do not count. So it might be held that the second notice on the assessees under s. 22 in the circumstance of the case substantially complied with and was in effect a notice under s. 34. We must, however, treat this case on the basis that the two notices were on two different persons. Thus, it might well be argued that the first assessment under the order dated July 21, 1937, was valid until it was set aside in appeal, and that the second assessment made under the order dated January 14 1938, and while the appeal against the first assessment was pending, was contrary to law because it was made after the first assessment, which had not been set aside and was still in force and the same income cannot be assessed twice in the hands of different persons.

It appears, however, that it was agreed between the assessees and the Assistant Income-tax Commissioner that the appeal against the first assessment, when it came up for hearing before the Assistant Commissioner on October 5, 1937, should be adjourned pending an appeal to be made against the second assessment when it was made and that both appeals should be heard together. Otherwise the Assistant Commissioner would have heard the appeal against the first assessment on October 5, 1937, before the second assessment was made, when, if the appeal had been dismissed, presumably the second assessment would not have been made, while if the appeal had succeeded, the way for the second assessment would have been left open.

It would thus appear that the assessees themselves agreed to the course that was taken, and that in equity they had no cause for complaint. We do not think that we have here a question of jurisdiction which consent cannot give but a matter of errors in procedure which could be, and were in this case, in fact, condoned. It cannot be said that the Income-tax Officer had no inherent jurisdiction over the subject-matter in dispute so as to attract the principal laid down in Ledgard v. Bull (3), referred to in Allah bux v. Nusserwanji & Co. (4). We would invite the attention of the Income-tax Officers concerned to the case in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay Presidency and Aden v. Firm Khemchand Ramdas (2), to which we have referred and the necessity of following the priniciples laid down therein. It is not open to an Income-tax Officer, when he has proceeded to a final assessment to reopn that assessment whenever and however he pleases. The powers of Income-tax Officers in the matter of revision are limited by ss. 33, 34 and 35 of the Act. Now the questions referred to us are four in number and are as follows:

"(i) Whether in the circumstances of the case, the assessees formed an association of individuals within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act; (ii) whether the said association can be said to be the owner of the waqf properties within the meaning of s. 9 of the Act and is rightly assessed as such; (iii) whether the assessment in dispute is invalid because the appeal lodged against the assessment in the name of "Ibrahimji Hakimji Trust" was not decided by the Assistant Commissioner but was kept back for hearing along with the appeal against the assessment in dispute as agreed to by the assessees; and (iv) whether the procedure adopted by the Income-tax Officer in serving notices on Seth Ghulam Hussain Ibrahimji contravened the provisions of ss. 2 (12) and 63."

With the third question we have already dealt as it was argued first before us. But the second question really covers the decision in this case whether it is the trustees or the beneficiaries under the trust who are to be assessed to income-tax, and it does appear that in answering this question as he had done, the learned Income-tax Commissioner has fallen into the same error as is referred to in the Bombay case in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay v. Abubakar Abdul Rehman (1), for in this case, as in that, the learned Commissioner quotes a passage from the judgment of the Bombay High Court in the case of Kantisen Mohanji Ganjawalla and Brothers (Civil Reference No. 10 of 1937) as follows:

"In the case of the other property involved, the assessees did not purchase this but it was conveyed to them by the trustees of a settlement under which they were the beneficiaries. It seems to me to be irrelevant to consider how the property vested in the association of individuals became vested in them. The question is how they have it and are using it. If they are using it for the purpose of producing income, I think the property is vested in them as an association of individuals, and they are properly assessable under s. 9."

And with reference to this passage also cited by the learned Commissioner in the reference to the High Court at Bombay in Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay v. Abubakar Abdul Rehaman (1) the learned Chief Justice remarked:

"The main question which arises is whether under this wakf the trustees or the beneficiaries ought to be assessed. Up to a recent date, the Commissioner of Income-tax had assessed the beneficiaries on the income which they received under the waqf deed, as appears from his order of June 20, 1935, which is an accompaniment to Ex "E". But recently he has altered that practice in accordance with what he considers to be the law as laid down by this Court in Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Laxmidas (5) and Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay v. Dwarkadas Pitale (6), and in two unreported cases to which the learned Commissioner refers. Those cases, in my opinion, do not govern the present questions, because in none of those cases was the Court dealing with trustees. In all those cases immovable property had become vested in two or more persons who were using it for the purpose of producing income for their own benefit, and the Court held that they were properly assessable as an association of individuals under s. 3 in respect of the property and were not assessable separately in respect of their respective interests in the property. But in none of those cases, as I have said, was there any question as between a trustee and beneficiary. The trustees in this case are no doubt an association of individuals, but that consideration does not determine the question whether they or their beneficiaries should be assessed to income-tax."

Now under the waqf deed made by Ibrahim Hakimji, dated February 17, 1932, which made certain immovable properties the subject of the waqf, after the payment of rates and taxes, and 10 per cent. of the net income into a depreciation fund for repairs, Rs. 35 per month was to be spent on the Dawoodi Borah Madressah in Karachi, and of the balance of the net income, Rs. 200 per month was to be paid to the wife of the settlor Amtullabai, Rs. 50 per month to each of the four daughters of the settlor, while the residue was to be divided in equal shares among the four sons. The settlor appointed himself and his four sons as trustees, but we do not think that this makes any difference to the decision of the case. After the extinction of all male descendants in the direct line the waqf property was to go to its ostensible purpose, charities, such as musjids, madressahs, musaffirkhanas of the Dawoodi Borah community and other uses such as the maintenance of the poor and needy of the Dawoodi Borah community.

It was argued before us on behalf of the assessees that a waqf being a dedication to God could not be the subject of taxation but we think a difference must be drawn between property dedicated in name and in fact to God, in short a difference must be drawn between a private wqaf created, if not primarily, at least in part, for the maintenance of the settlor's family, and a waqf created for charitable or religious purposes falling within the exception in s. 4 (3) (i) of the Act. So far as the waqf operates as a waqf for charitable and religious purposes, so far, it appears to us, immunity from taxation can be claimed, but so far as the waqf operates for the maintenance of the settlor's family or other quasi secular purposes, so far it appears to us the income is liable to taxation. This is the opinion of the Bombay High Court in Commissioner of Income-Tax, Bombay v. Abubakar Abdul Rehman (1) already referred to. This is also the opinion of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Muhammad Qamar Shah v. Muhammad Salamat Ali Khan (7), at p. 517. At p. 517 the learned Judges say:

"It is true that according to the view taken in Muhammad Rustam Ali Khan v. Mushtaq Hussain (8) the estate in the waqf property vests in God after the creation of a public waqf. But we doubt if it can be argued that in private waqfs the estate vests in God. The correct view would be to hold that the estate vests in the beneficiaries."

It was argued by the learned Advocate-General that not only was the income of the waqf other than that part spent on charitable purposes liable to taxation, but it was liable to taxation in the hands of the trustees, and he referred to the case in Umar Bakhsh v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Punjab (9), but the question there at issue was not as to whether the income was liable to taxation in the hands of the trustees or the beneficiaries, but whether it was liable at all. It of course makes a difference to the revenue whether the income is liable to taxation in the hands of the trustees before it is divided up among the beneficiaries or after it is divided up.

In this case the total income assessed in the hands of the trustees for the second assessment confirmed in appeal was Rs. 8,967 liable to a tax of Rs. 455-5-0, but the position will be very different if the wife, each of the four daughters and each of the four sons is to be taxed on their individual shares. But this we think was the intention of the Legislature and the scheme of the Act, and must be done. We have heard arguments on behalf of the assessees that the trustees, so misnamed under the deed of trust, are not owners, for the owner is God, but are merely managers or superintendents. We doubt if God can be rightly described as the owner of waqf properties subject to the quasi religious or charitable burden of the maintenance of the settlor or his family, at least not within the meaning of the Income Tax Act. But we do not think for the purpose of ss. 6 and 9, Income Tax Act, that the trustees are the owners of the income, for after all it is income which is taxed under the Income Tax Act. It is true the language of s. 9 does give rise to some difficulty. Section 9(1) is as follows :

"The tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head 'property' in respect of the bona fide annual value of property consisting of any buildings or lands appurtenant thereto of which he is the owner, other than such portions of such property as he may occupy for the purposes of his business, subject to the following allowances.'

Now, we think this must mean that the "annual value" is the "assessable income" of the immovable property. The person liable to taxation is the owner of the income of the annual value, and we think this is the beneficiary who receives and keeps the income and not the trustees who, in this case are the mere channel through which the income passes to its named recipients. It is, we think, no answer to say that the trustees first receive the income, and a person is not immune from income-tax on his own income because he chooses to give that income away. But the trustees do not here receive an income which they can give away or retain as they wish. It is not their income; they cannot keep it; they must deal with it as the trust declares.

We think the decision in Currimbhoy Ebrahim v. Commissioner of Income-tax, Bombay (10) must be read in the light of its own facts. Under the Act endowing the Baronetcy the trustees paid only the balance to the Baronet. In their hands was the disposal of the income, it is true, in accordance with the terms of the trust, but the beneficiary had no claim on any particular sum. We think, therefore, this is a case where the income is found with the beneficiaries and should be taxed in their hands. There remain then only questions (i) and (iv). So far as question (i) is concerned, we have no doubt that the trustees under the trust constitute an association of individuals within the meaning of s. 3 of the Act, but that does not make them owners within the meaning of s. 9. The answer to the first question is in the affirmative. The answer to the fourth question is, we think, also in the affirmative. In this case it has been found as a matter of fact that Seth Ghulam Hussain Ibrahimji was the managing trustee. He was therefore properly served with notice under s. 2 (12) (a) read with s. 63, Income Tax Act, but in view of our answer to the second question, the answers to the three other questions are irrelevant.

We think, the assesses are entitled to their costs, and the refund of the Rs. 100 fee. The questions are answered accordingly. We have also a reference relating to the assessment on the same assessees for the year 1936-37. There is no material difference in the two cases; the questions referred to us are the same, and the answers will be the same as the answers given on the case stated for the year 1937-38 for the reasons given in the order. It is true that in the course of the proceedings for the assessment of 1936-37, the Income-tax Officer issued a notice to the assessees under s. 34 of the Act, but this makes no material difference to the answers to be given on the questions referred to us. The order as to costs in this case will be the same as the order as to costs in the connected case.

S. Answer accordingly.

Criminal Miscellaneous No. 7 of 1940

October 2, 1940

COLLISTER AND BAJPAI, JJ.

RADHEY LAL—APPLICANT

NIRANJAN NATH—OPPOSITE PARTY

Contempt—Contempt of Court—Essence of offence —Insolvency application by L against N containing statements defamatory of N*—Complaint by* N against L under s. 500, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), to vindicate his character and integrity—N held not guilty of contempt of Court.

It is of great importance to the administration of justice that it should be allowed to take an unfettered course and not be sullied and besmirched in any manner. The essence of an offence of contempt of Court lies in the fact that the person complained of has done something which might have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of a pending case. [p. 263, col. 2.]

L applied to the Insolvency Court praying that N should be adjudged insolvent and in this application made certain statements defamatory of N. N instituted a complaint against L under s. 500, I. P. C, in order to vindicate his character and integrity:

Held, that N was not guilty of contempt of Court, as nothing was done by N from which it could be gathered that if L withdrew the allegations which he had made against N's character in the insolvency proceedings N would drop the complaint which he had preferred under s. 500, I. P. C.

[Case-law referred to.)

Held, also that threat by N before the institution of the insolvency proceedings that if L filed insolvency proceedings against N, he would file a complaint for defamation against L amounted only to a warning so that an unguarded action may not be taken and did not amount to contempt of Court.

Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Messrs. Shiva Prasad Sinha and C. B. Agarwala, for the Applicant.

Messrs. S. K. Dar and Din Dayal, for the Opposite Party.

The Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Bajpai, J.—Lala Radhey Lal, a money-lender of Agra, is the applicant before us. He prays (1) that Niranjan Nath, the opposite party, may be dealt with and punished according to law for contempt of Court of the Insolvency Court of Agra which is seized of the insolvency case filed by the petitioner against Ram Chand Niranjan Nath and, (2) that the proceedings in the criminal case under s. 500, I. P. C. (Seth Niranjan Nath, Complainant versus Lala Radhey Lal, accused) pending in the Court of the City Magistrate of Agra be stayed till the decision of this application. The facts seem to be that Niranjan Nath carries on business at Agra as a bookseller and is also a military contractor. He had occasion to borrow money on negotiable hundis in the market of Agra. The hundis were drawn in favour of creditors and such hundis sometimes used to be endorsed in favour of other persons. In the month of April 1940, some of the hundis drawn by Niranjan Nath fell due and although some of them were paid by the endorsers they were not paid by the drawer Niranjan Nath, whereas some others were not honoured at all. On May 25, 1940 Lala Radhey Lal filed an application in the Court of the Insolvency Judge of Agra against Ram Chand Niranjan Nath through Niranjan Nath praying that the opposite party be declared insolvent and a Receiver be appointed of his property and his estate be administered according to law. In this application Lala Radhey Lal makes mention of five hundis which came to be held in due course by Lala Radhey Lal the amounts of which hundis were not paid by Niranjan Nath. It was stated in para. 5

"That the business of the opposite party failed and he suspended payment on or about Chait Sudi 5, Sambat 1997, corresponding to April 11, 1940, and has as a matter of fact given notice to his creditors that he cannot pay his debts for the last time again on or about the second week of May 1940."

In para. 6 it was said:

"That with the object of bringing pressure on the creditors the opposite party also gives out that he has transferred his property to his relations. The applicant does not admit this but in any view if there is any such transfer it is entirely bogus farzi and fraudulent."

Notice of this application was issued to Niranjan Nath and was served some time in the first week of June. It is however admitted that Niranjan Nath came to know of this application on May 26, 1940 through one of his servants and he then obtained a copy of the application in order to file his objections in the Civil Court, but such copy was delivered to him on June 2, 1940 and the Civil Courts had by that time closed for the long summer vacation. On June 10, 1940, Niranjan Nath filed a complaint in the Court of the City Magistrate of Agra under s. 500, I. P. C., against Lala Radhey Lal. He alleged in this complaint that he was a rais and an approved Govt. military contractor and a reputed businessman of Agra coming from a respectable and rich family and that he was a fellow of the Royal Society of London and paid substantial amount of income-tax and last year was assessed to income-tax of Rs. 857-3 0 on an income of Rs. 11,500. The complainant said that the accused was a near relation of the complainant's rivals in his trade of books and with a view to affect his credit in the market adversely made the following false statements in the course of an insolvency petition filed by him without justification and with absolutely false allegations on May 25, 1940 and thereby caused the complaintant's credit to fall in the estimation of his fellow businessmen and in the money market generally:

"That the business of the opposite party failed and he suspended payment on or about Chait Sudi 5, Sambat 1997, corresponding to April 11 1940, and has as a matter of fact given notice to his creditors that he cannot pay his debts."

The allegations aforesaid regarding failure of business, suspension of payment and giving notice to creditors intimating inability to pay were absolutely false and malicious and had been made solely with the object of lowering his credit and as the insolvency petition containing the aforesaid defamatory allegations was presented by the accused in open Court on May 25, 1940 and as it was pressed in open Court by his Counsel on the aforesaid date within the hearing of persons present in Court and as it was given publicity by the accused and his agents, the accused was guilty of an offence punishable under s. 500, I. P. C., and therefore a warrant of arrest should issue against the accused and he be tried according to law. The City Magistrate issued a bailable warrant fixing June 26, 1940. The complainant was examined on June 10, 1940 on the back of the complaint and he corroborated the statements made in the complaint and said that his business had not failed at all and that he had given no notice of suspension of payment to his creditors, but that, as a matter of fact, the complainant had sent money to the accused after April 11, 1940 and had got receipts by him. The complainant further stated that he had been defamed in general because the accused person made the statement in the presence of people as well as spread it among people in various other ways and he therefore desired that the accused might be arrested by means of a warrant and punished. It is stated by the learned Counsel for the applicant that on June 18, 1940 the complainant Niranjan Nath applied for a search warrant for the seizure of the account books of Radhey Lal for the year 1996-97 and the books were actually seized on June 20, 1940, and later, on June 22, 1940, Niranjan Nath submitted for the information of the Criminal Court an application that the accused had defamed him not only in the complaint, but also on previous occasions the accused had defamed the complainant with similar applications and the allegations in the insolvency case were simply repetitions and that the accused persisted in defaming the complainant.

On June 27, 1940 a regular application was filed by the complainant in Court to the same effect and it was prayed that either the Court can be pleased to consider the said petition as a part of the complaint already filed or it may be pleased to treat this as a separate complaint and amalgamate this with the previous one so as to avoid multiplicity of complaints. Niranjan Nath was also examined by the Criminal Court on June 27, 1940 when he made a fuller statement as to the defamatory statements made by Radhey Lal in Court in the insolvency petition of May 25, 1940 and before that on earlier occasions in the presence of persons and it was stated therein that when the accused Radhey Lal made defamatory statements prior to May 25, 1940 and had expressed his intention of getting Niranjan Nath declared an insolvent, Niranjan Nath had sent word to Radhey Lal that if he would do so Niranjan Nath would bring a case for defamation. This message was sent through one Jwala Prasad. The accused had then said that if Niranjan Nath liked he was at liberty to do so. Niranjan Nath further stated that on April 12, 1940 he had paid the money of a hundi to the accused and he had paid the money of another hundi to the accused in the month of Baisakh.

The present application for contempt of Court was filed in this Court on July 3, 1940, and one of us issued notice to Niranjan Nath to reply to the application and the proceedings in the Criminal Court were stayed. Niranjan Nath has appeared in response to the notice, and learned Counsel for the parties have argued the case at length. Our attention has been drawn to three cases of this Court and to a case in Oudh. One of the cases cited at the bar was decided by ourselves and we shall refer to the various authorities at this stage and in the light of those authorities proceed to determine "whether the acts of the opposite party which are complained of by the applicant were calculated to prejudice a fair trial" in the insolvency proceedings pending before the Insolvency Judge of Agra or were intended to "exert pressure upon the applicant in respect to those proceedings and if so, whether they amounted to a contempt of Court." The contention of the opposite party is that they could not in any way prejudice a fair trial of the insolvency proceedings and that they were filed with the sole object of clearing his character and with that object alone the protection of the Criminal Court was sought.

It cannot be doubted for a single moment that it is of great importance to the administration of justice that it should be allowed to take an unfettered course and not be sullied and besmirched in any manner. The essence of an offence of contempt of Court lies in the fact that the person complained of has done something which might have the effect of prejudicing the fair trial of a pending case. In Rajender Singh v. Uma Prasad (1), a plaintiff after the settlement of issues gave notice to the defendant's guardian drawing attention to a certain plea taken in the written statement and alleged that the said plea was defamatory per se of the plaintiff's deceased father and lowered his reputation in the estimation of his fellowmen and caused him harm in various ways and then added that unless within a week of the receipt of the notice an unqualified apology was sent and the aforesaid statement was withdrawn by putting an application to that effect in the said Court and also by publishing the said withdrawal and apology in such newspapers as were required by the sender of the notice in order to clear the character and the conduct of his late father and unless further within the same one week the sum of Rs. 10,000 was paid as damages, action would be taken by him in Civil and Criminal Courts as advised; and it was held by a Bench of this Court the sending of the notice amounted to a direct interference with the administration of justice in preventing the defendant from pressing his defence and putting forward the plea which might, if established, prove fatal to the suit; and in that way an indirect attempt was made to exclude the plea taken on behalf of the minor defendant from the consideration of the Court and, as such, the plaintiff and his Counsel were guilty of contempt of Court. It is of importance to note that the notice complained of and the threat held out was after the filing of the civil suit and "was intended to put extraneous pressure on the defendant in order to compel him to withdraw the plea contained in his written statement."

In Baldeo Sahai v. Shiva Datt (2), the facts were that a suit had been instituted for possession of land for removal of certain constructions. In the written statement the defendant alleged that the suit had been brought at the instance of the brother of the plaintiff who was awara. The plaintiff then filed an application for striking out the word awara and asked for an apology stating that on failure of the apology proceedings would be taken. The Munsif passed an order stating that the defendant's Vakil had stated that the word awara be substituted by the word awaragard which simply meant an aimless wanderer while awara might also mean a vagabond and therefore an amendment should be made. The plaintiff then sent a notice to the effect that the use of the word awara in the written statement was without justification and defamatory and therefore a sum of Rs. 1,000 should be paid as damages, otherwise action would be taken in law. The defendant then applied to this Court that the application to strike out the word awara and the notice demanding damages amounted to a contempt of the Civil Court where the oringinal suit was pending. It was held that the plaintiff of the suit was not guilty of contempt of Court and it was observed by Bennet, J., that a distinction was to be drawn between Rajender Singh v. Uma Prasad (1), and the case before them because the notice in the former case required that the plea in the written statement was to be withdrawn, whereas in the case before them there was nothing in the notice asking that any action should be taken in the conduct of the civil suit and the notice was merely the usual notice which was given as a preliminary to filing a suit for damages for libel. In Mohammad Yusuf v. Imtiyaz Ahmed (3), the facts were that one Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan filed a complaint under s. 500, I. P. C., against Nur Muhammad who was a prosecution witness in a case proceeding against Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan under ss. 420 and 406, I. P. C., and had made certain statements which might be said to be defamatory of Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan, and the question for consideration before the learned Judges was whether Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan was guilty of contempt of Court where the proceedings under ss. 420 and 406, I. P. C., were pending. The complainant of that case filed an application before the Oudh Chief Court praying that Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan should be punished for contempt. The argument was that Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan should have waited until the case under ss. 420 and 406, I. P. C., had terminated. The learned Judges ob-

"In the first place, we do not think that he was bound to do so, and in the second place that case has been kept dragging on already from 1936 to 1939, and the implication of the argument is that Imtiyaz Ahmad Khan is to put up with defamatory statements being made without protest until such time as those proceedings terminate which might not be for several years to come. It is the existence of uncontradicted defamatory statements which damages a man's reputation beyond repair, and we are not prepared to hold that the circumstances being as they were, Imtiyaz Khan was precluded from taking action."

In Hrishi Kesh Sanyal v. A. P. Bagchi (4) we had to deal with a contempt matter and we in the end discharged the rule that was issued and held that the opposite party to the rule was not guilty of contempt of Court. The facts were that one Mr. Bagchi, an Advocate of this Court, had applied to the District Judge of Allahabad for his appointment as guardian of certain minors and notice of the application was issued to certain relations including one Hrishi Kesh Sanyal. Sanyal then filed an objection accompanied by an affidavit in which he made various imputations against the character and conduct of Mr. Bagchi. Mr. Bagchi then moved the District Judge of Allahabad for proceedings under s. 476, Criminal P. C., against Sanyal praying that an inquiry be made into certain of the allegations in the affidavit of Sanyal which were alleged to be absolutely false and Bagchi further preferred a complaint against Sanyal before the City Magistrate under s. 500, I. P. C. Sanyal then moved this Court for taking proceedings for contempt of Court against Bagchi, and we held that under the circumstances the application under s. 476, Criminal P. C., and the complaint under s. 500, I. P. C., did not amount to a contempt of Court. We discussed the previous Allahabad cases to which reference has already been made in this judgment, and we held, that "there were no sufficient materials before us upon which we could find as a fact that the motive which actuated the opposite party in filing this complaint when he did instead of waiting until the conclusion of the guardianship proceedings was to harass and handicap the applicant in those proceedings and so interfere with the administration of justice"

"whatever the opposite party's real motive might have been, there was nothing in his action to suggest to the applicant that, if he withdrew any of his pleas regarding the opposite party's character, the latter would drop the complaint which he had preferred under s. 500, I. P. C."

We have considered with anxious care the circumstances under which Niranjan Nath filed his complaint under s. 500, I. P. C., against Radhey Lal and we have also taken account of the various steps which Niranjan Nath took in connection with his complaint and we find that it would be fruitless to speculate into the motives of Nirjanjan Nath. Learned Counsel on his behalf has argued that Niranjan Nath was a military contractor and a man dealing in the business of books, and it was not expected that he should wait for the termination of the insolvency proceedings before he should seek the protection of the Criminal Courts for the clearing of his character and that if he did so wait and the insolvency proceedings had taken their dreary course for a year or so, his reputation would be damaged irretrievably and his contract in the army department might have been cancelled. The argument is that it was, therefore, necessary for him to vindicate his reputation at the earliest possible opportunity and there was nothing in what he had done which would justify the inference that the object of the criminal complaint was to handicap Radhey Lal in the insolvency proceedings and thus prevent Radhey Lal from conducting with safety his insolvency proceedings. We have come to the conclusion that nothing was done by Niranjan Nath from which it could be gathered that if Radhey Lal withdrew the allegations which he had made against Niranjan Nath's character in the insolvency proceedings Niranjan Nath would drop the complaint which he had preferred under s. 500, I. P. C. In Hrishi Kesh Sanyal v. A. P. Bagchi (4) at p. 584* of the reports we said :

"Had the opposite party first tried to intimidate the applicant by holding out a threat of prosecution, thereby bringing pressure to bear upon him, the matter would have had a very different aspect."

Learned Counsel for the applicant before us contends that in the present case it is clear from the statement of Niranjan Nath made on June 27, 1940 in support of his complaint that before the institution of the insolvency proceedings Niranjan Nath had come to know that Radhey Lal intended to file insolvency proceedings and Niranjan Nath had then and there said that if insolvency proceedings were taken a case for defamation would be brought. The following passage occurs in the statement of Niranjan Nath:

"From April 1940, the accused person began to tell me and the bazar people that I would not pay the money due to a large number of people and that I had given notice to my creditors to the effect that I would not pay anyone's money. My business had failed and that he would have me declared insolvent. Thereupon, I sent word to the accused that if he would do so I would bring a case for defamation. I sent this word through Jwala Prasad. Thereupon the accused said that if I liked to do so, I was at liberty to do so."

The contention, therefore, is that the opposite party in the present case had tried to intimidate the applicant by holding out a threat of prosecution and thereby brought pressure to bear upon him and therefore the case before us assumes a different aspect and the opposite party is guilty of contempt of Court. We did not intend to say that in every case where proceedings are intended to be taken against a person and if that person on coming to know of the intention holds out a threat that if such proceedings are taken he himself would take counter-proceedings to protect himself, the latter person is guilty of contempt of Court if both persons institute proceedings and counter-proceedings. If when the earlier proceedings have been taken a threat is held out then to the person who institutes the proceedings by the opposite party to the effect that unless the proceedings are withdrawn drastic action would be taken, the holder of the threat would be guilty of contempt of Court; but where the threat is held out before the institution of the proceedings it amounts only to a warning so that an unguarded action may not be taken. We may well conceive of a contemplated action in the nature of a blackmail and it would be dangerous to hold that if the person attempted to be blackmailed were to hold out a counter-threat, he would be guilty of contempt of Court. There is a difference between a threat before proceedings are instituted and a threat after proceedings have been instituted, and in the present case we find that all that Niranjan Nath did was to warn the applicant that if insolvency proceedings were taken by Radhey Lal, Niranjan Nath would take proper action. This does not, to our minds, amount to a contempt of Court, nor does the filing of the criminal complaint amount to a contempt of Court, and we therefore discharge the notice. It was then said that we should order the stay of the criminal complaint and our attention has been drawn to the order that we made in Hrishi Kesh Sanyal v. A. P. Bagchi (4). We find that in matters like these

"no hard and fast rule can be laid down to indicate the considerations by which a Court ought to be guided in considering the question of the stay of a criminal proceeding, pending the disposal of a civil suit, and each case must be determined upon its own facts," vide the case in Gopalchandra Chakravarti v. Emperor (5). In Hrishi Kesh Sanyal v. A. P. Bagchi (4) we held the view that the interests of the minors which were of paramount importance and which ought to be zealously guarded by Courts ran the risk of being jeopardized owing to the squabbles of their relations and we, therefore, thought that the guardianship proceedings should be conducted in an atmosphere of perfect serenity and for ought we knew the guardianship proceedings would come to a termination, at least so far as the original Court was concerned, soon and we, therefore, stayed the criminal complaint. Here we find that the insolvency proceedings were started on May 25, 1940 and in connection with a preliminary matter, namely the appointment of an interim Receiver, the record has come to this High Court and at this rate it is not likely that the insolvency proceedings would be over at an early date. The findings in the Criminal Court will not be of any importance in the insolvency proceedings and vice versa, and in the circumstances of he case we think that it is not desirable that the criminal complaint should be stayed. We dismiss this application, but in the circumstances make no order as to costs.

S. Application dismissed.

Criminal Appeal No. 42 of 1940
July 27, 1940
GRILLE, J.

In re ABDUL GAFOOR AND OTHERS—
APPELLANTS

Confession—Co-accused—Confession by co-accused if can be made basis of conviction—Retracted confession—Value and use of—Self inculpatory confession—How far can be acted upon.

The very existence of s. 30, Evi. Act postulates that the confession of the co-accused may be used in cases where the evidence afforded—and some such evidence there must be—lacks the requisite volume and certainty to insure conviction. [p. 269, col. 2.]

The retraction of a confession may throw doubt either on the truth of it or on the fact that it was voluntarily made, but it certainly does not follow because a confession is retracted that it was either untrue or involuntary, and the truth or voluntariness of a confession operates equally—where such a confession is self-inculpatory in respect of the person who made it and the person implicated therein. Merely because these confessions have been retracted in the Court of Session, it cannot be said that they were involuntarily made. The motive for making a self-inculpatory confession is the very simple one of an expectation of leniency in the matter of sentence, and where a number of people are jointly tried and some have made confession to a Magistrate before the trial and some have not, it is again not unnatural that persons who have made confessions should retract them under pressure and persuation by their fellows who have not confessed. 154 Ind. Cas. 273 (3), not approved. [p. 269, col. 2; p. 270, col. 1.]

No doubt when a confession is retracted and the truth of it denied, the person retracting has lied on one occasion or the other, and although in the case where the retractions are merely in respect of the voluntariness of the statements and there is no express denial of the fact that the confessions were true in substance, it must be presumed that if these accused had been asked by the Magistrate, as they should have been, whether the confessions were false in substance or no, they would have replied in the affirmative. This does not, absolve the Court from examining the question whether the confessions are in fact true or not and, if true, whether they can be taken into consideration along with the other evidence. [p. 270, cols. 1 & 2.]

Retracted confessions must be used with caution, but when it is possible to come to the conclusion that the confessions cannot be otherwise than true, they may be taken into consideration in connection with the evidence appearing in the case, whether they are retracted or no. [p. 270, col. 2.]

Cr. A. from an order of the Court of the Magistrate, First Class, Buldana, dated January 2, 1940,

Mr. M. Y. Shareef, for the Appellants.

Mr. Y. S. Tambe, for the Crown.

Judgment. — This appeal is by seven persons and Criminal Appeal No. 43 of 1940 by one Ganpatsingh. All these eight persons have been convicted of dacoity and all have been sentenced in the aggregate to ten years' rigorous imprisonment each. Three dacoities are said to have been committed in the course of one night at the same village and all the appellants, have been sentenced to six years' rigorous imprisonment for the first dacoity, to two years for the second and to two years for the third. The fact that there are two appeals arises as Ganpatsingh claimed that he accompanied the other persons on instructions of the Police and was in fact a Police informant, and that consequently he should not have been convicted at all. His appeal has been separately argued, but this judgment will cover both appeals.

The dacoity took place on the night of August 16, at the village of Pangri which is about four miles from Fattekherda, the nearest Police Station. Of the accused Abdul Gafoor, Syed Usman, Sheikh Hussein, Syed Miroo and Ramsingh are inhabitants of Fattekherda. Umar Khan is a resident of Pangri, and Sherali was temporarily staying at Pangri. Ganpatsingh is an inhabitant of Fattekherda. The raid on the village which occurred during a drizzling August night began at about 10 in the evening and lasted for about two hours The village is a small one of about 30 houses. The first house to be visited was that of Sawalaram (P. W. No. 30). The raid was conducted with very considerable noise so as to terrify the rest of the villagers, and corrugated iron roofs were beaten with sticks and stones thrown. Sawalaram was caught by two of the assailants and beaten with sticks and was told to hand over Rs. 1,100 which he was said to have with him. He denied that he had any money. He was dragged out of his house and the assailants searched the house. His mother Mst. Ahelabai, who had been sleeping near him, called out to a servant, Hariba, to open the main door of the house; this was by way of precaution. This man did so and was beaten. The main part of the house was then ransacked, boxes were burst open, but nothing was found, and the dacoits eventually left the house taking with them no more than Rs. 25. The next house visited was that of Balwanta (P. W. No. 11) which was near by. Balwanta and the other inmates of his house had already fled, having heard the uproar at Sawalaram's. No details of the actual ransacking of this house are available, but when Balwanta returned after the dacoits had left the village, boxes were found broken open, clothes and papers littered on the floor, and silver ornaments were missing. After this the dacoits came back to the house of Bhiwaji (P. W. No. 6), which is next door to Sawlaram's. Bhiwaji fled to the Mahar quarter of the village, and when he came back he found a similar state of things to that which had prevailed in Balwanta's house. Silver ornaments were missing and money had been stolen. After that the house of Kachra is said to have been attacked, but this is not included in the charges in this case.

In the course of the events of this night the victims profess to have recognised five of the assailants. Sawalaram and his mother both recognised Abdul Gafoor as did Bhiwaji and Balwanta, although the latter says that he recognised him by his voice alone when a question was put by him to Umarkhan whom also he recognised by his voice. Umarkhan was also recognised by Sawalaram and his mother, and both profess to have seen him. They also speak to recognising Sherali who was on a visit to their village, and in addition Sawalaram recognises Ramsingh whom he identifies as wearing a gunny bag by way of a hood to keep off the rain, and Mst. Ahelabai identifies Sheikh Hussein, who is identified by no one else, as a man who was making a noise by beating the corrugated iron roof with his lathi. Syed Usman, Syed Miroo and Ganpatsingh were at no time identified in the village. The general concensus of the witnesses is that the raiding party numbered about nine. The village patel after the dacoits had departed made a hurried enquiry. Sawalaram who had been severely beaten was unable to give any details at the time, and Gyanu Mahar, the village Kamdar, left at 3 o'clock in the morning to report at the Fattekherda Police Station. He reached there at 4 in the morning and made his report. He found a crowd outside the Police Station and sat at Fattekherda till 1 o'clock as the Police told him that he was wanted to help to carry the Sub-Inspector's luggage to Pangri when the latter proceeded to go for investigation. The crowd was as a matter of fact occasioned by the fact that the Police had already arrested four men before Gyanu arrived to make his report of the dacoity, and although it has been strongly contended by the learned Counsel for the seven appellants that Gyanu must have been fully aware of the identity of these people and that it was because he was so aware that the written report that he made at the dictation of the victims when he returned to Fattekherda was influenced by this knowledge, it is strange that not a single question was asked him in cross examination to elicit from him that he knew who the people who had been arrested were or even that he knew that anyone had been arrested in respect of the dacoity.

The Police at Fatekherda were not unaware that a dacoity was about to be committed although they were unaware of the locality where it was to take place. The Station-House Officer at the time was Sub-Inspector Pitale (P. W. No. 1), and he had received information on August 13, and on August 15, that some Rohillas and Bundelas of Fattekerda were planning a dacoity. Both these rumours had turned out to be false, and when he was warned again on August 16, at 9 P. M., he decided to verify the statement of his informant Lalsingh (P. W. No. 5) who is a brother of Ganpatsingh and who had brought Ganpatsingh, who, he says, was his own informant, to the Police Station that night to impress on the authorities the genuineness of his information. The Sub-Inspector accordingly visited the houses of certain people as they were suspicious characters, and he found that four of them were absent, namely, Ramsingh (also Chainsingh who lives next door but who does not appear in the proceedings), Syed Miroo, Abdul Gafoor and Syed Usman. He sent for additional Police constables and called out choukidars and other people and set posts round these houses. Towards 3 o'clock in the morning all these four persons were captured on the way back to their houses. Abdul Gafoor was accosted outside his own house, but ran away and was apprehended in his bagicha about a furlong away and captured after some resistance. Syed Usman was met near the baithak of Rohillas and claimed that although he was a married man with a family, he had been sleeping in the baithak and had gone out to ease himself and was returning. Ramsingh was met near his own house and said that he had come back from his field. He gives the time as before midnight. The circumstances of the apprehension of Syed Miroo are somewhat different. When the other people were caught, there was a considerable noise, and the party watching Syed Miroo's house ran back to the Police station thinking that their man had been caught. The others had, but not Syed Miroo, and consequently a constable was ordered to go back to Syed Miroo's house. A call was then made at the house and a reply was given that Syed Miroo was not there. The party waited and after some time they heard a thud on the earth as of someone jumping over a compound wall. They then heard a cough, they repeated the challenge and Syed Miroo came out of the house. I give these details in view of the apparent discrepancy which arises from the evidence of the Police Constable concerned, Mahomed Subhan when he states that after arresting Ramsingh he was ordered to go to Miroo's house, when according to the Sub-Inspector a guard had already been posted there. It is thus clear that four of the people brought before the Court were actually arrested before any news of the dacoity had reached the Police Officers. The remaining three appellants and also Ganpatsingh were arrested on later days.

Some of the stolen property has been recovered from some of the accused. The fact that the dacoity did occur has not been disputed, neither has the identification of the articles recovered as being the property of those who suffered in the dacoities ; all that is disputed is the identity of the raiders and their identification by the victims. Property was recovered from Sheikh Hussein, Sherali and Umarkhan in circumstances which make their participation in the dacoity—and it may be noted that they were all identified—positive. An ornament was also recovered from Ganpatsingh, and this I will deal with, later. In addition Sheikh Hussein, Umarkhan and Sherali all made detailed confessions which implicated all of the accused. These confessions were in no way self-exculpatory and tallied in a remarkable degree in wealth of detail. All these three confessions were retracted in the Court of Session. There was also a confession recorded as such, although Ganpatsingh countered the statement, by Ganpatsingh. This may be left out of account as in the circumstances of Ganpatsingh's connection with the affair the learned Counsel appearing for the Crown has very rightly conceded the position contended for by the learned Counsel for the appellants that Ganpatsingh's statement cannot be taken into evidence as against them. An attempt was made to argue that no evidence concerning the recovery of the property based on s. 27 of the Evi. Act was admissible in view of the Privy Council ruling in Pakala Narayana Swami v. Emperor (1). It was pointed out to the learned Counsel that no fewer than four Judges of this Court including myself have recently held contrary to the interpretation that the learned Counsel wished to put on this ruling, and consequently the argument was not pressed. On the question of the identification, principal stress is laid on the fact that the victims mentioned no names until the following afternoon when the Sub-Inspector arrived in the village and written complaints were taken from them which were written out by Gyanu. It is contended that by that time Gyanu must have known the names of the persons who had been arrested and had detailed these to the victims. This argument, however, is based only on supposition, and admittedly there is no evidence whatever to support it, and if it were true and all these identifications were false and prompted by the Police and the Kamdar, one would have expected the identifications to have included Syed Usman and Syed Miroo who had been arrested as well as those of Abdul Gafoor and Ramsingh. There is, however, no mention of these two persons. Included by name in the written report is also Umarkhan of whom the Police knew nothing up to that time, and one of the names mentioned is of a man who was not arrested. This militates against Police tutoring. One of the minor details which form the grounds of attack is that Bhiwaji stated that he was so afraid that he went to the Mahar part of the village and hid in Gyanu's house and that therefore he could not have been able to identify Gafoor, whom he says he did, and one Sabjalkhan whom he mentioned in his report (Ex. P-27). It is clear, however, from his evidence that he is referring to different times. When Sawalaram's house was attacked, he hid near by and identified Gafoor. When the assailants entered his own house, which was the third, Sawalaram's house being the first, it was then that he ran to the Maharpura. There is thus no inconsistency. The only other point is that Hariba, Sawalaram's servant who was told to open the door and who was himself beaten, stated in cross-examination that when everything was over, he met his master again who told him that he was struck by thieves but could not recognise them, and that his wife and mother had said the same. It is not very difficult to elicit answers of this kind in cross-examination in the case of villagers like Hariba, and on the evidence of the patel it is apparent that Sawalaram was in no fit condition to give details before Gyanu was sent in to make the preliminary report. I consider that the evidence of identification is acceptable and true, and had there been any tutoring or embellishment on the part of the Police, a much more perfect case would have been made out, particularly in respect of two of the accused who had already been arrested and against whom the evidence is less than against the others, namely Syed Usman and Syed Miroo. The evidence against the five people, Abdul Gafoor, Sheikh Hussein, Ram Singh, Umarkhan and Sherali is convincing. All have been identified as participating in the dacoity, property was recovered from three of them, and of those from whom property was not recovered Ramsingh was actually wearing a gunny bag over his head when arrested at 3 o'clock in the morning, and he was dressed like this when identified by Sawalaram, and Abdul Gafoor has been identified by all three victims. In respect of the remaining accused their conviction is dependent on whether the only substantive evidence against them, namely, the circumstances of their arrest before the fact that any dacoity had actually been committed was known, can be supported by the confessions of their three co-accused, Sheikh Hussein, Umarkhan and Sherali.

A reference has naturally been made to the Full Bench decision in the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Nagpur, in Gobaraya v. Emperor (2), and raliance is placed on the judgment epitomized in the headnote, which runs:

"The self-inculpatory confesson of an accused implicating his co-accused is not a fact upon which alone the conviction of his co-accused can legally be based. It cannot be said that such a confession, corroborated by other evidence, from a legal basis for his conviction: for it is not permissible to start with the confession and proceed to enquire how for it receives corroboration from other evidence on record. Where there is other relevant matter implicating the co-accused, the course which the Judge is permitted by s. 30 of the Evi. Act to take, is to consider the confession along with the said matter and decide after such consideration whether or not conviction is justified."

The problem of course resolves itself into the question of fact whether the evidence against Syed Miroo and Syed Usman is sufficient to form a basis for conviction which would warrant the Court in taking the material appearing in the self-inculpatory confessions of Sheikh Hussein, Umarkhan and Sherali into account against the non-confessing accused therein implicated. Here, we have the fact that information was given to the Police that certain persons including the two accused Syed Miroo and Syed Usman were to participate in a dacoity that night, and when late at night they were found to be away from their houses and a guard was kept on their houses, they were found attempting to return to them at 3 o'clock in the morning and gave explanations of their absence which were unacceptable. It is urged that this is not enough to form a basis for a conviction and that it is possible that they may have been absent for purposes which they have not chosen to disclose and that these circumstances do not necessarily implicate them in the dacoity which took place. My considered opinion is that the circumstances do form a sufficient basis. Were a stranger basis required connecting them with the dacoity, a basis on which a conviction itself would be permissible, then there would be no need of corroboration, or, to use the words of s. 30 of the Evi. Act, "of taking such confession into consideration", and the provisions of s. 30 of the Evi. Act would be rendered otiose. The very existence of this provision postulates that it may be used in cases where the evidence afforded and some such evidence there must be—lacks the requisite volume and certainty to insure conviction. The facts which have been proved, excluding what appears in the confessions, raises a very strong suspicion against these two persons, and that suspicion has been confirmed and made certain by the confessions of their accomplices, confessions in which the accomplices do not exclude their own share in the dacoity. Next it is urged that these confessions lose their entire force as against these two accused, Syed Miroo and Syed Usman, because they have been retracted, and the authority given for this proposition is a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Kashimuddin v. Emperor (3). In that case the conviction in a jury trial was set aside because inter alia the trying Judge did not in his charge to the jury inform them that when a confession is retracted, it has no value at all as against the co-accused. With the greatest respect, I am unable to agree with this exposition of the law. The retraction of a confession may throw doubt either on the truth of it or on the fact that it was voluntarily made, but it certainly does not follow because a confession is retracted that it was either untrue or involuntary, and the truth or voluntariness of a confession operates equally—such a confession being self-inculpartory—in respect of the person who made it and the person implicated therein. The extent to which such a confession operates against another person therein implicated has been discussed in the preceding paragraph.

I can see no reason at all to hold that merely because these confessions have been retracted in the Court of Session, they were involuntarily made. The motive for making a self-inculpatory confession (and there is no question that all these three confessions are entirely self-inculpatory) is the very simple one of an expectation of leniency in the matter of sentence, and where a number of people are jointly tried and some have made confession to a Magistrate before the trial and some have not, it is again not unnatural that persons who have made confessions should retract them under pressure and persuation by their fellows who have not confessed. There is of course ample opportunity for this while parties are under-trial prisoners, and there is nothing to support the statements made by two of these three confessing accused that the confessions were the result of Police torture, that indeed is the common reason given and, barring the reason that they had changed their minds and thought better of it and were no longer trying to save their own skins, is the only reason for retracting which the confessing accused could possibly give. I am satisfied that these confessions were voluntary and that a mere allegation to the contrary raises no inherent probability that the confessions were not voluntarily made.

It must then be seen whether the confessions are true. In Kashimuddin v. Emperor (3), the learned Judge referred in support of the proposition there enunciated to the decision in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan Chuckerbutty (4). In that case Jenkins, C. J. stated that to place any reliance on retracted confessions against a co-accused would be most unsafe, and referred to Yasin v. Emperor (5). But a perusal of the following paragraphs will indicate that the learned Chief Justice disregarded the confessions implicating the co-accused because on examination they were found to be false, and in Yasin v. Emperor (5), it was not laid down as was laid down in Kashimuddin v. Emperor (3), that such a confession has no value at all against the co-accused, but only that it should carry practically no weight, which dictum was somewhat modified by the subsequent remark that a very full corroboration would be necessary in such a case.

Now, no doubt when a confession is retracted and the truth of it denied, the person retracting has lied on one occasion or the other, and although in the case before me the retractions are merely in respect of the voluntariness of the statements and there is no express denial of the fact that the confessions were true in substance, it must be presumed that if these accused had been asked by the Magistrate as they should have been, whether the confessions were false in substance or no, they would have replied in the affirmative. This does not, in my opinion, absolve the Court from examining the question whether the confessions are in fact true or not and, if true, whether they can be taken into consideration along with the other evidence. In the case before me the confessions are given with a wealth of detail in each case, and mutual corroboration which can leave no doubt at all as to their truth. It is to be noted that neither in Yasin v. Emperor (3), nor in Emperor v. Lalit Mohan Chuckerbutty (4), is it laid down that no weight at all is to be given to such retracted confessions. I am in respectful agreement with the proposition that such retracted confessions must by used with caution, but when it is possible to come to the conclusion that the confessions cannot be otherwise than true, I consider that they may be taken into consideration in connection with the evidence appearing in the case, whether they are retracted or no. In the present case all the three confessions agree as to the distribution of the booty which in the case of property other than cash was so inconsiderable that single ornaments had to be shared by the participants in the dacoity in pairs, and the distribution agrees in each case. There are differences in the confessions in respect of statements as to which persons entered which house in the four visits and the irruptions made into the houses that night, that is, discrepancies which are really no more than omissions except in the case of statements of the people who caught hold of Sawalaram, which bear the mark of truth and honesty and individual and uncollaboratory narrative, and Police tutoring would not attempt to produce such detailed narrative on unessential points. On the one point on which they ought to be clear and in agreement and on which agreement is to be expected, namely, the division of the spoils, they are in agreement. Where the confessions inspired by the Police, the Police would have taken care to see that there was equal and meticulous agreement on the question of who were the persons who actually caught hold of Sawalaram when his house was invaded. The result is that I am satisfied that the confessions are true, that they were voluntarily made and that they can be taken into consideration against the accused Syed Miroo and Syed Usman.

Ganpatsingh's case is a peculiar one. There is no doubt that he was the informant who warned the Police as the result of which the houses of all the accused who have been arrested, residing in the village, except Sheikh Hussein were watched and their arrests effected. It is also clear that he was told to accompany the dacoits and when he protested against this was told sharply to obey orders and to report at the station house the next morning. The learned Magistrate has found that he betrayed his trust to the extent of retaining some of the stolen property in consequence of which he was arrested, and he has been given the sentence of 10 years rigorous imprisonment as if he had whole heartedly participated in the dacoity with the others. I am of opinion that Ganpatsingh has been the victim of circumstances in that the Sub-Inspector Pitale who was in charge of the station house and to whom information was given and at whose orders he accompanied the dacoits was transferred during the early stages of the investigation. He admits that he was given an ornament which was subsequently recovered from him, and his story is that after the return of the expedition and the booty had been divided he went to the station house but did not find the Sub-Inspector there, so went to his own house and when sent for the next morning said that he would come later as he was dressing a wound which he had received from a stone during the dacoity. He was then brought to the station house and had left behind the money and the ornament in his own house as he was on his way back from easing himself when the Constable met him, and he then related the whole story to the Sub-Inspector. This would be on the morning of the 17th. He was then ill for a day or two, and when he went to the station house again, the Sub-Inspector was not there, a change in officers having taken place. He said he would relate everything to the previous Sub-Inspector, Mr. Pitale. He handed over the money which he had received to the new Sub-Inspector Desasingh, but not the kadola as in his peculiar position of an informer he did not trust a new man. After he was arrested he had the kadola handed over by his daughter. Now, a good deal of this is confirmed by the prosecution witnesses. Sub-Inspector Pitale, did not investigate the case beyond August 20 and admits directing Ganpatsingh to accompany the dacoits. He admits seeing Ganpatsingh on the following day, namely, August 17, and Ganpatsingh stated to him that he would produce his portion of the stolen property, that is to say, that the Police were aware on the next day that their informer had stolen property with him which would appear to make any deliberate concealment on his part useless. The Sub-Inspector says that he instructed the Station-House Moharir, Ramsingh, to seize the property from Ganpatsingh and also says in cross-examination that he saw Ganpatsingh on the after-noon of the 17th as he was going off to investigate and directed him to hand over the property, if any, to the Thana Moharir. This phrase, "if any", dose not seem to agree with what he stated of in cross-examination where he implies that Ganpatsingh had admitted that he had property, and Ramsingh the Moharir, also gives a slightly different version where he states that the Station House Officer's orders to him were that any property which might be produced by Ganpatsingh should be seized and that as Gangpatsingh did not produce any property he did not do anything more about it. This last portion of the evidence appears to me an excuse for not having recovered the property earlier when they were aware of its existence. Desasingh, the relieving Sub-Inspector, is P.W. No.4, and he received orders to take over the investigation on August 19 and he began investigation the following day. He at once began with questioning Ganpatsingh, and after the latter had handed over the money he searched Gangpatsingh's house and arrested him the same day. This was before he had any communication with Sub-Inspector Pitale, from whom he took over, at the scene of the dacoity. On the 25th at at Mehkar Ganpatsingh agreed to produce the property, and they went to his house where the property was produced. The Sub-Inspector Desasingh says he was aware from the thana record that Ganpatsingh was the informer in the case and he arrested him because he had agreed to produce the money and had an injury to his forehead. He admits that Ganpatsingh immediately claimed to be an informer and that he had done what he had under the instructions of Sub-Inspector Pitale; yet he does not remember asking Pitale about this when he met him the next day at Pangri. Neither does he remember if Ganpatsingh's brother Lalsingh (P. W. No. 5) requested that Sub-Inspector Pitale should be sent for before Ganpatsingh was arrested. He arrested him on his own initiative without consulting his predecessor.

Now, what has weighed heavily with the learned Magistrate in convicting Ganpatsingh is the fact that the kadola was not recovered from him until a week later. It is of course quite possible that owing to the change of Sub-Inspectors Ganpatsingh might have been under the impression that the new Sub-Inspector would not be aware that he had already told Pitale that he had an ornament in his possession and that he might be left in undisturbed possession of it. On the other hand, it is equally probable that Ganpatsingh, a Police informer, who as such leads a precarious existence at the best of times, might well have distrusted a newcomer and considered that he would be endangering himself if he owned that he possessed part of the proceeds of the dacoity without being satisfied that the new Sub-Inspector knew that his predecessor had ordered him to accompany the dacoits, and I think the statement of his brother Lalsingh (P. W. No. 5) in cross-examination to the effect that in the Mekhar lock-up he met Ganpatsingh and said "You are not a thief. You were sent by Pitale. If there is any property with you, give it up," and that Ganpatsingh said "I was sent by Pitale. I cannot trust the other Police Officers" is true and reasonable. I think it probable that if there had not been this change of controlling officers at the beginning of the investigation, Ganpatsingh would not have been arrested at all. It is admitted by the learned Counsel who appears for the the Crown that at the most he can only press in respect of Ganpatsingh for a conviction under s. 411 of the I. P. C., Admittedly Ganpatsingh went with the dacoits in the capacity of a spy, and apparently an unwilling one, as he considered he had done his duty sufficiently to the Police in giving the names of the people who were going to commit the dacoity. Having gone with them, he could not without awakening suspicion have declined to receive any share in the booty. It is also apparent that he admitted possession of his share on the following morning. I consider he should be given the benefit of the doubt, and acquitted. He is accordinly acquitted and I direct that he be set at liberty forthwith.

There now remains the question of sentence on the other accused. The learned Magistrate appears to have adopted a somewhat unusual principle. He has sentenced the accused to six years' rigorous imprisonment on account of the entry into the house of Sawalaram and two years' rigorous imprisonment each for the entry into the other houses and directed that the sentences shall run consecutively, making the aggregate to ten years which is the maximum penalty for the offence. The offence so far as Sawalaram's house is concerned does not appear to be any more heinous than that of the entry into the other houses, and it is difficult to see any other reason for this allotment than that the Magistrate desired to pass the maximum sentence and was unable to divide it by three. Further, I do not consider that this is a case in which the passing of the maximum sentence permitted by s. 395 of the I. P. C., was necessary. The dacoity was not accompanied by any particular violence or brutality. The sentences are reduced to five years' rigorous imprisonment in each case.

Mortgage—Construction—Usufructuary—Mortgagor binding himself to deliver possession and authorising mortgagee to retain possession till payment of money advanced—Indication in document that property is to be taken as security—Mortgage held usufructuary within meaning of s. 58 (d), Transfer of Property Act (XX of 1929)—Mortgagee not put in possession—He is entitled to decree under s. 68, Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

Where the mortgagor binds himself to deliver possession of the property in Jeth 1341 F. and authorizes the mortgagee to retain possession until Jeth 1350 F. when the executant binds himself to pay the money and the mortgagee is entitled to retain possession until payment of the money advanced, the transaction is an usufructuary mortgage. The mere absence of hypothecation clause is immaterial when in the deed the word 'rehan' is expressly mentioned in the heading and in the body of the document in more places than one there are indications that the parties intended that the properties described in the document should be taken as security for the loan advanced.

In such a case where the mortgagee is not put in possession against the stipulation contained in the document under s. 68, T. P. Act, he is entitled to either a decree for the amount which he lent or for possession.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge Gaya, dated September 29, 1937.

Mr. Sarjoo Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. C. P. Sinha, Saiyid Ali Khan and H. R. Kazimi, for the Respondents.

Manohar Lall, J.—This is an appeal by the fifth defendant against a decision of the learned Subordinate Judge, dated September 29, 1937, by which he decreed the suit instituted by the plaintiffs in part.

The suit was instituted for recovery of possession of property covered by Ex. 3 styled as a rehan deed by the mortgagor (defendant No. 1) in favour of the plaintiffs and another on June 6, 1933. The document was executed on taking an advance of Rs. 13,000. It was stipulated that the defendant No. 1 was to remain in possession for a certain period and to pay certain amount of interest on the sum advanced. It was also stipulated in the document that, if the entire amount was not paid in Jeth 1341 F. this document will be operative till 1350 F. at the expiry of which period, namely 1350 F. the defendant No. 1 will be entitled to repay the entire amount to the plaintiffs who will then have to deliver up possession to the executant. In case the amount was not paid, the plaintiffs would remain in possession until satisfaction of the sum advanced. On April 10, 1935, the interest of defendant No. 1 was sold in execution of some decree and purchased by the appellant. The plaintiffs have never obtained possession of the lands since the execution of the deed of June 6, 1933. In these circumstances, the present suit was instituted on June 6, 1936, for recovery of possession of the properties described in the bond of 1933. Plaintiffs claimed to be the usufructuary mortgagees who were entitled to possession under the terms of this document. They also claimed mesne profits for 1342 and 1343 Fasli, that is to say, for the period anterior to the institution of the suit and also mesne profits pendente lite and in future up to the date of recovery of possession.

The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for possession; but no mortgage decree can be passed in this suit; hence the appeal by defendant No. 5.

It was contended by the learned Advocate for the appellants that there is no hypothecation clause in the deed (Ex. 3) and, therefore, the plaintiffs are not usufructuary mortgagees with the result that the decree for possession passed in favour of the plaintiffs should be set aside. Now, the definition of usufructuary mortgage is given in s. 58, T. P. Act which was amended in 1929. The definition, as it stands, is wide enough to cover the transaction in the present case. By sub-cl. (d) it is provided that

"Where the mortgagor delivers possession or expressly or by implication binds himself to deliver possession of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, and authorizes him to retain such possession until payment of the mortgage-money, and to receive the rents and profits accruing from the property or any part of such rents and profits and to appropriate the same in lieu of interest, or in payment of the mortgage-money, or partly in lieu of interest or partly in payment of the mortgage-money, the transaction is called an usufructuary mortgage and the mortgagee an usufructuary mortgagee."

This is exactly what the present document provides. It states that the mortgagor binds himself to deliver possession of the property in Jeth 1341 F. and authorizes the plaintiffs to retain possession until Jeth 1350 F. when the executant binds himself to pay the money. It further provides that the plaintiff will be entitled to retain possession until payment of the money advanced. It was argued that there is no hypothecation clause in the document such as is commonly found in similar deeds. But the word rehan which is expressly mentioned in the heading of the document and in the body of the document in more places than one indicates that the parties intended that the properties described in the document should be taken as security for the loan advanced. The amount of Rs. 13,000 is spoken of as the rehan money at p. 5, line 7. I am, therefore, of opinion that, upon a proper consideration of this document, it must be held that the plaintiffs were usufructuary mortgagees and, in the circumstances, as has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge, they were not put in possession against the stipulation contained in the document. It follows that under s. 68, T. P. Act, plaintiffs are entitled to either a decree for the amount which they lent or for possession. In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has granted them a decree for possession to which the plaintiffs were entitled. I do not see any error in the judgment delivered by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

It was argued on behalf of defendant No. 7 who is not an appellant before us, that he is aggrieved by certain findings which have been arrived at in the case; but notwithstanding the findings the decision is in his favour. I do not see, therefore how he is aggrieved when the decree is in his favour.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

NAGPUR HIGH COURT

Miscellaneous Appeal No. 146 of 1938
October 24, 1939
NIYOGI, J.

ZIBAL AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS AND PURCHASERS—APPELLANTS
versus
MUKA alias JAIRAM AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 68, 47—Decree transferred to Collector for execution—Jurisdiction of Court passing decree, if ousted—Application by judgment-debtor to Civil Court for payment of decree by instalments—Stay of proceedings before Collector ordered—Order not communicated and sale held—Sale and subsequent confirmation held invalid—Decree-holder purchasing property—Sale confirmed—Judgment-debtor applying to have sale declared void—Civil Court alone can decide issue under s. 47—Issue cannot be decided by superior revenue Court.

The transfer of a decree to the Collector does not oust the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in all matters. [Case-law relied on]

After such a transfer the judgment-debtor applied to the Court which passed the decree for payment of the decree by instalments under s. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act. The Court entertained the application and ordered the stay of the proceedings before the Collector. But the stay order was not communicated to the Collector with the result that the Collector held the sale and confirmed it;

Held, that the order of the Civil Court must be construed as an order recalling the decree and the Collector ceased to have jurisdiction to sell or to confirm the sale after the Court passing the decree recalled it. Consequently, the power of the Collector to proceed with the case was suspended by virtue of the order made by the Court passing the decree.

Held, also that when the Civil Court exercised its authority and recalled the decree, its order recalling the decree by its own force deprived the power of the Collector to execute the decree and the Civil Court's order came into effect as soon as it was passed so as to suspend the Collector's power to proceed with the sale. 147 Ind. Cas. 700 (13) and Sant Lal v. Umrao-un-nissa (14), relied on, 102 Ind. Cas. 665 (11) and 43 Ind. Cas. 214 (12) referred.

The judgment-debtors moved the Court which passed the decree to have the sale declared void and not for setting aside the confirmation of the sale under O. XXI, Civil P. C., on the ground that it was a nullity.

Held, that the proceeding was one under s. 47, Civil P. C., as it related to execution of the decree and was one between the parties to the suit, the decree-holders being the purchasers. The Civil Court was the only authority to determine whether or not the execution sale held by the Collector was valid. That issue could not be decided by the superior revenue Courts.

Misc. A. from an order of the Court of the Additional District Judge, Bhandara, dated June 21, 1938.

Mr. D. T. Mangalmoorti, for the Appellants.

Mr. Y. V. Jakatdar, for the Respondents.

Order.—This is an appeal under s. 47, Civil P. C. from an order passed by the Additional District Judge in Civil Appeal No. 12-B of 1938 arising out of execution proceedings.

A decree obtained by the appellants against the respondents had been transferred for execution under s. 68 of the Civil P. C. The Collector ordered the sale of the respondents' malik makbuza fields to be held on November 1, 1937. On October 9, 1937, the judgment-debtors applied to the civil Court for reduction of interest and making the decree payable by instalments under s. 11 of the C. P. Money-lenders Act. On that very date the civil Court (Sub-Judge, II Class, Bhandara) made an order in these terms:

"Applicants by Mr. Lakhnikar. Mr. Lakhnikar has filed an application for instalments under Money-lenders Act. Application be registered as a Miscellaneous Judicial Case under s. 11 of the C. P. Money-lenders Act. Issue notices to the non-applicants decree-holders to show cause. Collector be informed to stay the proceedings until further orders. Case for November 27, 1937."

This order was not communicated by the Execution Mohurrir as he was in usual course of routine bound to do. The Collector held the sale on November 1, 1937, as advertised and the decree-holders became the purchasers. On November 27, 1937, the decree-holders appeared in the civil Court and reported that the sale had been held in their favour. It was discovered that the order ordering stay of proceedings before the Collector had not been communicated. The Court warned the Execution Mohurrir for his lapse and directed instructions to be sent to the Collector that the sale should not be confirmed. For some mysterious reason even this was not brought to the notice of the Collector with the result that the sale was confirmed. Thereon the judgment-debtors made an application to the civil Court for an order setting aside the sale as void in consequence of its order directing the proceedings before the Collector to be stayed. That Court held that, since rightly or wrongly the sale was held and confirmed, it was conclusive and that it had no jurisdiction to interfere with it. That order was reversed by the lower Appellate Court on the ground that the effect of the civil Court's order dated October 9, 1937, staying the sale porceedings was to suspend the power of the Collector to execute the decree transferred to him irrespective of the fact that it was not communicated to him.

The case has been argued at great length and the points which arise for determination are:—

(i) Whether the civil Court has power in the circumstances to suspend the proceedings before the Collector after the decree is transferred to him for execution.

(ii) Whether, if the civil Court has such a power, its order would take effect only when it is communicated to the Collector.

(iii) Whether the proper remedy of the judgment debtor was to take recourse to the superior Revenue Courts and whether the civil Court, in the circumstances, is competent to set aside the sale.

On the first question, it may generally be conceded that the civil Court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the proceedings before the Collector after it has transferred the decree to the Collector for execution under s. 68, Civil P. C. That is a proposition which requires no authority to confirm its validity in view of the plain terms of s. 70 (2), Civil P. C. It was by virtue of this enactment that in Daulat Singh v. Jugal Kishore (1), Mathura Das v. Lachman Ram (2), Gulzari Lal v. Madho Ram (3), Shahzad Singh v. Hanuman Rai (4), Krishna Das v. Ram Gopal Singh (5), Shriniwas Appacharya v. Jagadevappa (6) and Rudrappa Virappa v. Bashettappa Chenbasappa (7), it was held that the transfer of the decree to the Collector under s. 68, Civil P. C. ousted the jurisdiction of the civil Court in matters in respect of which power had been conferred on the Collector. The problem arising for decision in the present case is different, if one looks to the substance and not merely the form. Can it be said here that the civil Court was seeking to exercise the powers which the law has conferred on the Collector to the exclusion of the civil Court? The answer must be in the negative since the civil Court manifestly never intended to usurp the powers of the Collector in respect of the execution proceedings. The judgment-debtors' application under s. 11, C. P. Money-lenders Act could lie only in the civil Court which alone had the power to order the decree to be paid by instalments. This power was not and could not be withdrawn from the civil Court and vested in the Collector by any rules made by the Local Govt. under s. 68 of the Civil P. C. The decree could be amended by the civil Court alone as desired by the judgment-debtors and if so amended the Collector's power would automatically come to an end since the decree which was transferred to the Collector would itself cease to exist.

The transfer of decree to the Collector does not oust the jurisdiction of the civil Court in all matters. Zipru Krishna v. Pannalal Bahirudas (8) and Shankar Atmaram v. Keshav Govind (9), may be cited as illustrations. In these cases it was held that the power to give permission to the decree-holder to bid and the power to certify adjustment of a decree remain with the civil Court notwithstanding the transfer of the decree to the Collector. The case in Kadhey Mal v. Murtaza Ali (10), bears a close analogy to the present case. In the cited case an application was made to the civil Court under s. 5 of the U. P. Agri. Relief Act with the prayer that execution proceedings might be re-called from the Collector. The civil Court entertained the application and sent an order to the Collector staying further proceedings for confirmation of sale. The Collector, however, confirmed the sale and granted a sale certificate to the execution purchaser. It was held that the civil Court in re-calling the decree did not pass any order which was within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Collector but exercised a power which was expressly reserved to it. Although the order of the civil Court was one staying further proceedings it was construed as an order re-calling the decree. That is the construction which the order in the present case can reasonably bear. As pointed out in the cited case, the Collector ceases to have jurisdiction to sell or to confirm the sale after the Court passing the decree re-calls it. Whether the Collector fails to comply with the civil Court's order in disregard or in ignorance of it, that order must prevail against anything done by the Collector subsequent to that order. It must, therefore, be held that the Collector's power to proceed with the case was suspended by virtue of the order made by the Court passing the decree.

The next question is whether the civil Court's order could take effect only after it was communicated to the Collector. In Parsotam Saran v. Barma Nand (11) and Venkatachalapati Rao v. Kameswaramma (12), it was held that communication was essential. In the former case the Subordinate Court held the sale in ignorance of the High Court's order staying the execution of the decree. It is pertinent to observe that purchaser was an innocent third party largely influenced the decision of the Court. Moreover, O. XLI, r. 5, Civil P. C. expressly lays down that mere filing of an appeal shall not operate to stay proceedings under the decree. It is, therefore, clear that until the officer executing the decree comes to know about the order staying execution, his power must be presumed to continue. The other cited case was also decided on this principle. The Appellate Court's order staying execution was interpreted as having the effect of a prohibitory order which could not come into effect until it was communicated to the officer who was prohibited. In Ma Ti v. Ma Thit (13), this principle was held not to apply to a sale held by ministerial officer of the Court passing the decree with the result that the sale was set aside even though the Court's order staying execution proceedings was not brought to the notice of that officer. The reason, as pointed out in Sant Lal v. Umrao-un-Nissa (14), is that the ministerial officer is deprived of his power as soon as the order staying execution is made by the Court. The Collector is not a Court and has no power to execute decrees except when they are transferred to it by the civil Court for execution. The power to execute decrees comes into operation only by virtue of the transfer of the decree. The civil Court which has the authority to transfer the decree, has also the authority to re-call the decree for any lawful cause such as adjustment by the parties or modification of the decree by the Appellate Court. Consequently, when the civil Court exercises its authority and recalls the decree, its order re-calling the decree by its own force deprives the power of the Collector to execute the decree. I hold that the civil Court's order came into effect as soon as it was passed so as to suspend the Collector's power to proceed with the sale.

Finally, there survives the question whether the proper remedy of the judgment-debtors was to move the higher revenue authorities. In this case the judgment-debtors moved the Court which passed the decree to have the sale declared void and not for setting aside the confirmation of the sale under O. XXI, Civil P. C. on the ground that it was a nullity. The proceeding was one under s. 47, Civil P. C. as it related to execution of the decree and was one between the parties to the suit—the decree-holders being the purchasers. The civil Court is the only authority to determine whether or not the execution sale held in the circumstances stated above was valid. That issue could not be decided by the superior Revenue Courts.

The result is that the lower Appellate Court's order is affirmed and the appeal is dismissed with costs. The costs in the Courts below will be borne as ordered by the lower Appellate Court. Counsel's fee Rs. 30.

FAZL ALI AND ROWLAND, JJ.

NAND KUMAR SINHA—PETITIONER

versus

Rai Bahadur PASHUPATI GHOSH AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (3), 115, O. I, r. 10—Order of trial Court striking off some of defendants on ground that suit was not maintainable against them in absence of consent of Governor of Province under s. 270, Government of India Act—Whether decree—Revision, if lies—Government of India Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. V. Ch. 42), s. 270 (1)—Applicability—Act done by public officer apparently official Act—Character, if changed by allegations in plaint of conspiracy or malice—Receipt of affidavit and making of complaint for offence under s. 193 Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860) by Sub-Divisional Officer are official Acts—Suit for damages based on such acts—Consent of Governor, if necessary—Giving of evidence by Police Officers—When official act.

Order of the trial Court striking off some of the defendants holding that the suit was not maintainable against them in the absence of consent of the Governor of the Province under s. 270 (1) of the Govt. of India Act, 1935, those defendants being the servants of the Crown, amounts to a decree within the meaning of s. 2 (2), Civil P. C., even if the Court erroneously refers to O. I, r. 10, as, between the parties the trial Court had finally decided that the plaintiff could get no relief in the suit against those defendants. Such an order is therefore appealable and no revision is maintainable under s. 115 as it is the practice of the High Court to abstain from interference in revision in favour of a party who has another remedy by way of appeal and has not availed himself of it. 49 Ind Cas. 835 (3), 131 Ind. Cas. 548 (4) and 85 Ind. Cas. 90 (5), relied on, 143 Ind. Cas. 476 (9), referred to. [p. 278, col. 2; p. 279, col. 1.]

If an act done by a public officer is apparently an official act, its character as such will not be changed by allegations that it was done in bad faith or that it had not that character which it purported to have. Applicability of the statute depends on what the act purports to be and is not affected by allegations that the apparent state of things is not the real one. The allegation that an official act was maliciously and corruptly done will not derogate from its official character if it had that character: and what applies to the attribution of malice or corrupt motive in the mind of a single officer applies no less where the same malice is attributed to him jointly with others. The word conspiracy only means that a malicious purpose is entertained by two or more persons jointly. [p. 279, col. 2.]

The receipt of an affidavit of a person by a Sub-Divisional Officer and making of the complaint against such person to the District Magistrate of an offence under s. 193 read with s 116, Penal Code are official acts done by the Sub-Divisional Officer in his capacity as such, whether rightly or wrongly done and no suit for damages for wrongful prosecution will lie in respect of these acts without the consent of the Governor of the Province under s. 270 (1), Govt. of India Act, 1935, when such acts are done before the relevant date i. e., April 1, 1937.

The giving of evidence by the Police Officers is not an act necessarily referable to their duty as Police Officers. The giving of evidence by a public officer may be an act regarding which it is to be determined on the facts of the particular case whether it was or was not done in an official capacity. There may be cases in which a public officer giving evidence does so in the execution of his duty as such officer. [p. 280, col. 2.]

Where however, the trial Court has found that the giving of evidence by the public officers in the case was done in the execution of their duty the High Court will not, in revision, go behind such finding. Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur v. Price (8), referred to.

C. R. from a decision of the Munsif of Monghyr, dated March 4, 1940.

Messrs. Nirsu Narayan Sinha, Sarjoo Prosad and K. Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Baldeva Sahay Advocate General and Nitai Chandra Ghosh, for the Opposite Party.

Rowland, J.—These two applications in civil revision have been heard together as they raise questions substantially identical namely, whether institution of the two suit, as against some of the defendants is barred by s. 270 (1) of the Govt. of India Act, in the absence of consent of the Governor of the Province. The section by its terms applies to a suit against any person in respect of any act done or purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a servant of the Crown. The words used are similar to those in s. 80 of the Civil P. C. The most authoritative decision of s. 270 (1) of the Govt. of India Act is that in Hori Ram Singh v. Emperor (1), and on s. 80 of the Civil P. C. in Bhagchand Dagadus v. Secretary of State (2). The words of the statute it has been authoritatively said are to receive their natural meaning. We have then to see whether the facts of each of the cases before us fall within the terms of the statute.

Civil Revision No. 137 arises out of suit No. 215 of 1938 in the Court of the Munsif of Begusarai. The facts are that during the pendency of a dacoity case one of the prosecution witnesses by name Sitaram Sahu on November 27, 1935, presented an affidavit in the Court of Rai Bahadur Pashupati, S. D. O. to the effect that the plaintiff had instigated this witness not to identify correctly before the Court some accused persons whom he had identified at a test identification. After the conclusion of the Sessions trial, a complaint was presented to the District Magistrate by Rai Bahadur Pashupati Ghosh, S. D. O. Begusarai against the plaintiff charging him with the offence punishable under s. 193 read with s. 116, of the I. P. C. in relation to the proceedings in the dacoity case. The plaintiff was put on his trial and acquitted. In the trial of the plaintiff Babu Ramprit Pandey, an Inspector of Police was a witness and so was Babu Bhubaneshwar Prasad, Sub-Inspector. The plaintiff instituted the present suit impleading Rai Bahadur Pashupati Ghosh as defendant No. 1, Babu Ramprit Pandey as defendant No. 2 and Babu Bhubaneshwar Prasad as defendant No. 6 along with three other defendants persons not in the service of the Crown. The plaint alleges that the complaint filed by defendant No. 1 was false and malicious and was the outcome of a conspiracy between him and the other defendants, that the affidavit of Sitaram Sahu was also false, that these were the outcome of a conspiracy among the defendants to procure the wrongful prosecution and harassment of the plaintiff. The relief claimed is that the Court may be pleased to declare that the complaint filed by defendant No. 1 was absolutely false, malicious and without any reasonable and probable cause and on adjudication of the above Rs. 499 be declared as expenses and damages. Notices under s. 80 of the Civil P. C. were served on defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 6 before the institution of the suit. These defendants raised the plea in bar that the plaintiff should also have obtained the consent of the Governor of the province as a condition precedent to the institution of suit under s. 270 (1) of the Govt. of India Act. It is conceded that the acts complained of took place before the "relavant date" referred to in that section namely April 1, 1937. The Munsif held that the suit as against defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 6 fell within the statute and that the suit was not maintainable against these defendants. He took the view that the suit was brought against defendant No. 1 in respect of acts, namely, receiving of an affidavit and the filing of a complaint, done ostensibly in the performance of his duty as a Magistrate and that it had been brought against defendants Nos. 2 and 6 in respect of acts, namely, the giving of their depositions in the trial of the plaintiff done in the performance of their duty as Police Officers. He allowed the suit to proceed against the other defendants by striking off the names of these defendants.

Civil Revision No. 175 of 1939 arises out of Suit No. 362 of 1938. The facts are that defendant No. 1 Babu Ajodhya Prasad Tewari presented a complaint before defendant No. 4, Rai Bahadur Pashupati Ghosh, alleging criminal trespass, with intent to annoy, insult and intimidate, to have been committed by the plaintiff. Defendant No. 4 received the complaint and took cognizance. He summoned the plaintiff and enlarged him on bail. The plaintiff was tried before another Magistrate and convicted, but on appeal he obtained an acquittal. The suit is brought to recover damages for alleged false and malicious prosecution said to have been started as a result of a conspiracy among the defendants. Notices under s. 80 of the Civil P. C. were served, but the plea was urged that the plaintiff should also have obtained the consent of the Governor under s. 270 (1) of the Govt. of India Act. The Munsif held that the section barred the suit as against defendant No. 4 Rai Bahadur Pashupati Ghosh, but that it could proceed against the other defendants. The application before us is against this order so far as it declines to allow the suit to proceed against defendant No. 4.

The learned Advocate General has taken a preliminary objection that neither of these application ought to succeed, because the petitioner has not availed himself of the more appropriate remedy that was open to him. He could have appealed to the District Judge from the decision of the Munsif as from a decree. We are referred to the definition of "decree" in s. 2 (2) of the Civil P. C. It means a formal expression of an adjudication which so far as regards the Court expressing it conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit and it is deemed to include the objection of a plaint. It is argued for the petitioner that the order striking off those defendants against whom the suit was held to be not maintainable was an order under O. I, r. 10 of the Civil P. C. and so not appealable. The answer is that as between the parties the Munsif had finally decided that the plaintiff could get no relief in the suits against those defendants, such an order, even if erroneously the Court refers to O. 1 r. 10, has been held to be a decree and appealable as such in Rama Rao v. Raja of Pittapore (3) and Sherali v. Jagmohan Ram (4), the substance rather than the form of the order is to be regarded. A similar view is taken in Ramji Pandey v. Alaf Khan (5), a decision of this Court.

It is then said that if the suit appeared to the Munsif to be barred by law, his proper course was not to proceed as under O. I, r. 10 by expunging the names of some defendants but under O. VII. r. 11 (d) by rejecting the entire plaint. Such an order would have been on in its face appealable and the plaintiff would have been left in no doubt as to his proper remedy. Whether the Munsif ought to have rejected the entire plaint in each suit may be a question of some difficulty. The cases cited before us have been under s. 80 of the Civil P. C., no decisions under s. 270 of the Govt. of India Act being available. Some observations in Venkata Rangiah v. Secretary of State (6) have been cited in support of the argument; on the other hand in a case of this Court Secretary of State v. Amar Nath (7), the name of the Secretary of State was expunged and the action was allowed to proceed against the other defendants. But we have not to express an opinion whether the whole plaints should have been rejected, not having been moved by the other defendants in these suits to revise that part of the Munsif's order which permitted the suits to proceed against them. It is sufficient to say that the decision of the Munsif on the preliminary issue finally negatived the claim of the plaintiff to get any damages against certain of the defendants and as between him and them must be considered to be a decree within the meaning of s. 2 (2) of the Civil P. C. and, therefore, appealable. The practice in this Court is to abstain from interference in revision in favour of a party who had another remedy by way of appeal and has not availed himself of it.

The preliminary objection, therefore, seems to be well founded and the applications are liable to be dismissed on this ground. As, however, both the cases have been fully argued I shall indicate the view I take on merits.

In the Civil Revision No. 137 stress is laid on the allegation in the plaint that the defendants had conspired together to bring a false case against the plaintiff. This it is said could not be or purport to be an act done in execution of their duty and, therefore, the bar in s. 270 (1) of the Govt. of India Act has no application. It is further argued that the maintainability of the suit must be decided on the allegations in the plaint alone and without reference to any matters of fact not contained in the plaint. The latter proposition is not to be accepted unreservedly as applying without qualification to every suit of this nature. If an act done by a Public Officer is apparently an official act, its character as such will not be changed by allegations that it was done in bad faith or that it had not that character which it purports to have, Applicability of the statute depends on what the act purports to be and is not affected by allegations that the apparent state of things is not the real one. Were it not so, ingenious allegations could be invented and criminal motives recklessly attributed in every case so as to nullify the effect of the statute which the Court would be unable to apply until the entire suit had been heard out and those imputations proved on the facts to be untrue. The suit would in that case fail under s. 270 (2) of the Govt. of India Act and the defendant would have no additional protection by reason of the existence of sub-s. (1) of this section. The allegation that an official act was maliciously and corruptly done will not derogate from its official character if it had that character; and what applies to the attribution of malic or corrupt motive in the mind of a single officer applies no less in my opinion where the same malice is attributed to him jointly with others. I can find no magic in the word conspiracy which only means that a malicious purpose is entertained by two or more persons jointly. The cause of action is incomplete without acts done under the influence of the corrupt motive or done in pursuance of the conspiracy. We have to see on what such acts the cause of action rests.

Defendant No. 1 received the affidavit of Sitaram Sahu and presented a complaint to the District Magistrate. Without these acts the cause of action is not complete. The malicious prosecution cannot be separated from them, nor can the alleged conspiracy to prosecute the plaintiff be separated from the institution of proceedings against him so as to form a self contained cause of action. The receipt of the affidavit and the making of the complaint before the District Magistrate were both officials acts of defendant No. 1 in his capacity of S. D. O. Whether rightly or wrongly done, no suit will lie in respect of these acts without the previous consent of the Governor of the Province. The Munsif, therefore, rightly held that no suit could be instituted against the first defendant.

(6) 54 M 416; 129 Ind. Cas 456; 59 M L J 923; 32 L W 810; Ind. Rul. (1931) Mad. 264; A I R 1931 Mad. 175.

As regards the second and the 6th defendants, the position is not so clear. In the criminal proceeding against the plaintiff they figured as witnesses for the prosecution, but the giving of evidence is not an act necessarily referable to their duty as Police Officers. The Munsif, however, has said that the giving of evidence by these two defendants against the plaintiff were acts done by these persons in the execution of their duty as servants of the Crown. It has been pointed out in Jogendra Nath Roy Bahadur v. Price (8) that an act may be one which on its very face could be nothing but an official act or it may be an act in respect of which the question would have to be determined on the facts whether the defendant in committing the act was or was not acting in his official capacity. The giving of evidence by a public officer may be an act regarding which it is to be determined on the facts of the particular case whether it was or was not done in an official capacity. There may be cases in which a public officer giving evidence does so in the execution of his duty as such officer. In the case of a Civil Surgeon who holds a post mortem examination and is examined as a witness to prove the post mortem report and the results of that examination, or in the case of an investigation Sub-inspector who after investigation submits a charge sheet and is examined to prove the course of his investigation and the submission of the charge-sheet, it can be very well be argued that the giving of such evidence is an act done in the discharge of their official duties. The proceedings in the trial of the plaintiff including the depositions of these witnesses are not before us, but they may have been placed before the Munsif and I do not think that in revision we should go behind his finding that the giving of evidence by these defendants was done in the execution of their duty. On that finding the Munsif was entitled to hold that the statute was applicable and the suit was not maintainable against these defendants.

In Civil Revision No. 175, as in the other application the allegation as to conspiracy is stressed and we are asked to hold that the basis of the suit is conspiracy and not the institution of a criminal proceeding against the plaintiff. As the conspiracy could be no part of the S. D. O.'s duty it is said, the suit is not in respect of anything purporting to be done in the execution of his duty and therefore the statutory bar does not apply. In my view the argument fails for reasons similar to those already given in discussing Civil Revision No. 137. The taking of cognizance of an offence on complaint whether done in good or bad faith was clearly an official act of S. D. O. purporting to be done in the execution of his duty as a Magistrate. It was an act which he could not do in any other capacity and it was an act without which there could be no institution of the criminal proceeding and so no foundation for the suit. It cannot be said that the claim against the defendant is irrespective of that act. On the contrary it is clearly in respect of it.

It follows that both these applications should be dismissed with costs.

Fazl Ali, J.—In my judgment these applications fail on the preliminary ground raised by the learned Advocate-General.

Order VII, r. 11 provides that the plaint in a suit shall be rejected when the suit appears from the statement in the plaint to be barred in law. It has been held in many cases that non-compliance with s. 80 of the Civil P. C. where the notice required under the section is necessary as a preliminary to the institution of a suit will bring the case under this provision. As the language of s. 270 of the Govt. of India Act is similar to the language used in s. 80 of the Civil P. C. there can be no doubt that there s. 270 applies and it has not been complied with, the plaint is liable to be rejected. Section 2 of the Civil P. C. states that the rejection of a plaint will amount to a decree. The order rejecting the plaint therefore is appealable and if the order passed by the Munsif in the present case is taken to amount to rejection of the plaint as against the parties represented by the Advocate-General, that order must be held to be a decree and was as such appealable. It is, however, contended that the order of the Munsif was not passed under O. VII, r. 11 because that provision contemplates the rejection of the plaint as a whole and not the rejection of the plaint in part or against some of the defendants. The learned Advocate-General does not concede that this is so. But assuming that the contention is correct, we have still to enquire whether the order passed by the Munsif was appealable or not under the Civil P. C. In my opinion, the order was appealable, because it is fully covered by the definition of the decree in s. 2 of the Code. The question which was raised before the Munsif was whether in law any suit could be instituted against the opposite party before us without obtaining the consent of the Governor as laid down in s. 270. The Munsif has held that such a suit cannot be instituted. This decision conclusively determines the rights of the parties so far as regards the Court which decided the matter and must therefore be held to be a decree. The Munsif has not merely dismissed some of the defendants out of the action, but he has held that the suit against them cannot proceed. As to what is meant exactly by dismissing some of the defendants out of the action, it will be sufficient to quote the following observations made by Beasely, C. J. in Jujishiti Panda v. Lakshmana Dola Behara (9).

"It is quite clear that where the parties have been wrongly joined and the suit against them is given up by the plaintiff or upon that ground he exonerates them or there is a finding come to that they have been wrongly joined, then the correct procedure is to strike out their names as having been improperly impleaded. On the exoneration or the striking out of the names of persons on the ground of misjoinder they cease to be parties to the suit. That is quite clear from the judgment of the Full Bench. In this case the learned District Munsif has adopted the correct procedure He clearly by the decree is shown to have treated these defendants as persons who had been dismissed from the suit and not as persons against whom the suit had been dismissed."

In the present case the opposite party, who are represented by the learned Advocate-General, cannot be said to have been dismissed from the suit because they were proper parties and if the procedure laid down in s. 270 had been complied with, the suit should have proceeded against them as it is proceeding against the other defendants.

The order passed by the Munsif is in effect an order dismissing the suit as against these persons on a preliminary ground. Such an order, in my opinion, is clearly appealable and that being so, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to invoke the special remedy afforded by s. 115 of the Code. This view is supported by many decisions, but I shall refer only to the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Sherali v. Jagmohon Ram (4). That decision is an authority for the following two propositions :

(1) Where the cause of action against the defendant has been specifically pleaded and a distant relief has been claimed against him, an order under O. I, r. 10 cl. (2) of the Code directing the removal of his name from the array of parties is in substance, although not in form, a decree and is open to appeal as such ; because the effect of the order is the refusal to grant the relief to the plaintiff; and

(2) the right to file a civil revision under s. 115 (Civil P. C.) is dependent upon the fulfilment of the condition that no other remedy by suit, by application or by appeal is available to the applicant. As the applicant did not persue the right remedy, namely, appeal to the lower Appellate Court, he could not be permitted to invoke the special and extraordinary remedy afforded by the exercise of revisional powers.

This Court has also pointed out in Syed Razaur Rahaman v. Udit Singh (10), that it is the established practice of the High Court not to exercise its revisional powers in cases where the party entitled to appeal has not appealed.

I therefore, agree with my learned brother that these applications should be dismissed with costs and in the view that I have taken I do not consider it necessary to express any opinion on the merits of the applications.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Civil Revision Petition No. 1657 of 1938

November 17, 1939

KUNHI RAMAN, J.

ATHIYAPPA GOUNDAN—

PETITIONER

versus

RAMANATHAN CHETTIAR—

RESPONDENT

Madras Agriculturists Relief Act (IV of 1938), s. 10 (2)—Mortgage executed for price payable to mortgagee for land purchased from him—Scaling down of such debt.

Where a mortgage is executed for the price payable by the mortgagors for lands purchased by them from the mortgagees, the debt falls under the category of s. 10 (2), cl. (2) and cannot therefore be scaled down.

C. R. P. to revise the order of the Sub-Judge, Salem, dated August 24, 1938

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Ayyar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. S. Ramabhadra Ayyar, for the Respondent.

Order.—This is an application to revise the order made by the learned Subordinate Judge of Salem in Execution Application No. 261 of 1938 in Original Suit No. 52 of 1932. The application before the lower Court was presented under s. 19, Mad. Agri. Relief Act, IV of 1938, to scale down the amount of mortgage decree. It is admitted that the original mortgage was executed for Rs. 7,000 on November 4, 1914, the whole of the mortgage-debt being the price payable by the mortgagors for lands purchased by them from the mortgagees. Subsequent to this mortgage and before the debt was discharged, there was a partition among the mortgagors and after that partition, by consent of parties, the mortgage debt was split up with the result that under a fresh mortgage deed, Ex. C, security was given only for Rs. 2,500 which was the portion of the debt that fell to the mortgagors under that documant. This was executed on January 22, 1925. Under this mortgage deed, the properties that were given as security were not the lands that were originally purchased in 1914 but some of the ancestral properties of the mortgagors under this deed. The decree debt that was sought to be scaled down under s. 19 of the Act was under the decree passed to enforce this mortgage. The application for scaling down was resisted in the Court below under s. 10, sub-s. 2, cl. 2 of the Act by the decree-holders. According to this clause nothing contained in s. 8 and 9 of the Act shall affect any liability for which a charge is provided under s. 55, cl. 4, sub-cl. (b), T. P. Act. The objection raised on behalf of the decree holders was upheld by the learned Subordinate Judge who found that the exemption provided for in this clause clearly indicated that the Act was not intended to benefit debtors whose debts could be under the category of debts referred to in it.

Mr. Ramakrishna Ayyar, the learned Advocate for the petitioner, argues that since under the fresh mortgage deed, Ex. C, the lands originally purchased by the mortgagors, in respect of which alone the charge provided for in s. 55, T. P. Act, can operate were not given as security and since fresh properties were given as security, the lower Court erred in holding that the clause of s. 10 relied on by the respondents was applicable to the case. In view of the scheme of the Act and in view of the wording of the clause, I am not able to accept this contention as well-founded. The clause describes a particular category of debts in respect of which the debtor should not be given relief under the Act and it cannot be denied that the debt in the present case is included in that category. It is only equitable that a person who purchases property should pay the price that he agreed to pay. In these circumstances I hold that the view taken by the Court below that the clause is a sufficient answer to the petition for scaling down the debt is correct. The civil revision petition must therfore be dismissed with costs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 125 of 1940

May 6, 1940

SEN AND ROXBURGH, JJ.

GERON ALI—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 84, 302—Insanity—For applicability of s. 84 what is to be seen is whether accused knew that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law—Accused killing two persons including his own daughter considering that he was doing meritorious deed qualifying him for heaven—Accused held protected by s. 84.

For the application of s 84, I. P. C, what is to be seen is not only whether the accused knew the nature of his act, but whether he knew what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. The law will punish a man for doing something which he knows to be contrary to the law whatever his private opinion may be regarding its ethics. Again if an act is contrary to law ignorance of the law will not protect a man from punishment when it is shown that the man knew that what he was doing was wrong.

The accused was a disciple of the Pir and called him father and the Pirani mother. The Pir said to him, "Take the head of those who dissuade you and come to your doors." At this time the Pirani, said to him that he would go to heaven if he offered a human head in sacrifice, on that day which was an auspicious day being the first day of Ramzan. The accused cut off the heads of two persons including that of his own infant daughter and offered the same to the Pir and said: "Father, you asked me for one human head, I present you with two." The evidence showed that he considered that he was doing a meritorious act which qualified him for heaven:

Held, that the accused did not know that what he was doing was wrong or contrary to law and he was therefore, entitled to the protection of s. 84, I. P. C.

Judgment.—The appellant has been convicted of murder and sentenced to transportation for life by the Sessions Judge of Tippera. The case against him is as follows: One Khoaz Ali was known to be a Pir or holy man in the village of the appellant. He had a mistress Tayeba who used to be known as Pirani. The appellant was a disciple of the Pir and called him father and the Pirani mother. The Pir had become unpopular in the village because of the irregular relationship between him and Tayeba. The appellant was however loyal to them and on October 14, 1939 complained to them about the attitude of the villagers. The Pir said to him "Take the head of those who dissuade you and come to your doors." The Pir also gave him a dao. In the evening the Pir gave the appellant some substance to swallow which the latter did. At this time the Pirani said to the appellant that he would go to heaven if he offered a human head in sacrifice. She also told him that the day was auspicious as it was the first day of Ramzan. Geron armed himself with a dao and severed the head of one Shaz Ali. He carried the head to his house. He saw his young daughter, aged about three years, and he cut off her head also. Taking these two heads he approached Khoaz Ali and Tayeba Bibi and said: "Father, you asked me for one human head, I present you with two." He gave Khowaz Ali the head of Shaz Ali and the head of his daughter to Tayeba Bibi. When people tried to seize him, he rushed at them shouting "Ma Kali ! !" Eventually he was secured and the Police were informed. After investigation, Khoaz Ali and Tayeba were set up on a charge of abetment of murder and the appellant on a charge of murder. The jury by a unanimous verdict found Tayeba not guilty. By a majority of six to three they found Khoaz guilty of the charge of abetment of murder and by a unanimous verdict they found the appellant guilty of murder.

The learned Judge accepting the verdict acquitted Tayeba and convicted Khoaz Ali and the appellant. Khoaz Ali was sentenced to death and the appellant to transportation for life. Khoaz Ali appealed and he has been acquitted. We are concerned with the case of the appellant only. The defence taken on behalf of the appellant in the Court below was of a two-fold character. First, it was contended that an intoxicating drug had been administered to the appellant and that he committed this crime under its influence. Next it was argued that the appellant was not responsible for his acts as he was insane at the time. In his petition of appeal a third defence is taken to the effect that he struck Shaz Ali as the latter was misconducting himself with his wife. He says that he knows nothing of how his daughter was killed. There is no substance in the first and last defences. There is no evidence to show that the substance given to the appellant was a drug which caused him to become intoxicated, nor is there any indication given in the Court below that the deceased Shaz Ali was misconducting himself with the appellant's wife.

There is however good reason to accept the defence of insanity. A mere narration of the facts relied upon by the Crown establishes that the appellant was insane at the time of the occurrence. He kills his own infant daughter for no assignable reason. His conduct after doing so also establishes that his mind was disordered. The question for consideration is whether this disordered state of mind is sufficient to bring the case within the purview of s. 84, I. P. C., which describes the type of insanity which would render a person not liable for his acts. The learned Judge has gone completely wrong in his charge to the jury on this point. He has told the jury that unless they are satisfied that the appellant was incapable of understanding the nature of his acts by reason of insanity at the time of the occurrence he would be liable for the consequences of his acts. He then points out to them that the appellant knew that he was killing somebody and that therefore he could not claim the protection of s. 84, I. P. C. This is what he told the jury in express terms. Now, this is certainly not the law. Section 84, I. P. C. is quite clear on the point. It says that if a person by reason of unsoundness of mind is incapable of understanding the nature of his acts at the time of the commission of the acts, then such acts will not amount to an offence. The section however does not stop there. It goes on to deal with another type of insanity which would also take away the criminality of an act. It says that if a person does an act and at the time of doing the act by reason of insanity does not know that the act is either wrong or contrary to law then also he would be protected even though he knew the nature of the act. This is perfectly clear from the section and it is nothing but sound common sense. A person may be under the insane delusion that he is an executioner and under that delusion he beheads his son thinking that he has been ordered to do so by the king. He knows the nature of his act but obviously he cannot be held criminally liable inasmuch as he did not know that what he was doing was either wrong on contrary to law. The learned Judge entirely failed to appreciate this portion of s. 84, I P. C.

We are satisfied that the appellant knew the nature of his act; what we have to see is whether he knew that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law. If he knew that what he was doing was wrong then he will not be protected even if he did not know that it was contrary to law. If he knew that what he was doing was contrary to law then also he would not be protected even though he did not know that what he was doing is wrong. The law will punish a man for doing something which he knows to be contrary to the law whatever his private opinion may be regarding its ethics. Again if an act is contrary to law ignorance of the law will not protect a man from punishment when it is shown that the man knew that what he was doing is wrong. In our opinion, the appellant did not know that what he was doing was wrong. The evidence showed that he considered that he was doing a meritorious act which qualified him for heaven.

We also find that he did not know that what he was doing was contrary to law. His conduct establishes this. He killed these persons without any effort at concealment and he did not try to escape after doing this. We have also no doubt that this frame of mind was brought about by insanity. This is proved by his behaviour both prior to and subsequent to this act. In our opinion, the appellant is entitled to the protection of s, 84, I. P. C. We find that the appellant killed Shaz Ali and his daughter Shazda Banu, but that he was incapable of knowing that what he was doing was either wrong or contrary to law by reason of unsoundness of mind at the time of the occurrence. We accordingly set aside the order of conviction and sentence and acquit the appellant. The appeal is allowed. The appellant shall continue in safe custody in the jail in which he is now confined until further orders by the Provincial Govt. Let the Govt. be informed of this.

PESHAWAR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 374 of 1940

October 16, 1980

ALMOND, J. C. AND SOOFI, J.

Mst. HASSAN PARI—ACCUSED—APPELLANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 26, 114—Accused sent to doctor for medical examination, with head constable—Examination made not in immediate presence of head constable — Confession to doctor during examination — Admissibility — Birth of first child to young woman and not in presence of any one—Presumption that child was born alive, if can be drawn— Criminal trial — Confession — Murder — Question by Magistrate held defective and answer by accused held no admission—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 318 — Prosecution seeking to prove offence under both s. 302 and s. 318—Charge should be framed under two heads— Accused found guilty under both charges — Conviction under both charges and not in alternative.

Where the accused made a confession to the doctor while being medically examined but not in the immediate presence of the head constable in whose charge she was sent to the doctor:

Held, that the accused was in the custody of Police when she made the confession to the doctor and hence it was inadmissible under s. 26, Evi. Act.

[Case-law relied on]

No presumption under s. 114, Evi. Act, that the child born was born alive can be reasonably made especially in the case of a young woman giving birth to her first child and entirely unattended during the process.

Question put to the accused by the Magistrate recording the confession was to the following effect: "Did you throw the born child into the well as the result of which he died of drowning?" To this the answer given was "Yes":

Held, that question was put in an unfortunate form as it was a question composite in nature to which it was almost impossible to give a direct answer 'yes' or 'no' and it could not therefore be inferred from it that the accused did actually admit that the child was born alive.

A conviction in the alternative should be made where on the facts proved it is not certain under which section the offence falls. Where the prosecution set out to prove both that the accused had murdered her child (s. 302, I. P. C.) and had also secretly disposed of the body by throwing it into a well (s. 318, I. P. C.) the charges should be framed under two heads and not in the alternative and where the accused is found guilty of both offences she should be convicted under both the sections and not in the alternative. 41 Ind. Cas. 310 (1), referred to.

Cr. A. against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Peshawar, dated September 19, 1940.

Lala Manohar Lal, for the Appellant.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Almond, J. C.—In this case Mst. Hassan Pari, an unmarried girl aged 17-18, has been convicted under s. 302, I. P. C. or in the alternative under s. 318, I. P. C. for the murder of her illegitimate child and for subsequently throwing it into a well and has been sentenced to transportation for life under s. 302, I. P. C. and in the alternative to two years' rigorous imprisonment under s. 318, I. P. C. We may state at the outset that we are of opinion that the charges should have been framed under two heads in this case and not in the alternattve, for the prosecution set out to prove both that the appellant had murdered her child and, had also secretly disposed of the body by throwing it into a well. On the facts which were found by the Sessions Judge she should have been convicted under both the sections and not in the alternative. A conviction in the alternative should be made where on the facts proved it is not certain under which section the offence falls. There is an illustration of such a case reported in Hiranand v. Emperor (1), in which it was not certain on the facts proved whether the offence fell under s. 489-A or s. 420, I. P. C. In that case a conviction was recorded in the alternative and one sentence was imposed which had to be not greater than that permitted for the minor offence.

The facts of this case are very simple and the only points raised in the appeal are legal points. At the trial the appellant admitted that she had given birth to an illegitimate child and that out of shame she had thrown it into a well. She stated that the child was born dead. Before the committing Magistrate she stated that she did not know whether the child was born dead or alive. In view of advanced decomposition, the medical witness was unable to say whether the child was born dead or alive. The prosecution relied for establishing the principal charge on three confessions made by the appellant. The first of these was made to a Police Officer and was ruled out as inadmissible by the learned Additional Sessions Judge under the provisions of s. 25, Evi. Act. Of the other two confessions one was made to a lady doctor who examined the appellant and in that confession she unequivocally admittedly that the child had been born alive. The third confession which was made to a Magistrate did not specifically state whether the child was born alive or dead. At any rate that is the interpretation of the confession which has been made by the learned Additional Sessions Judge.

(1) A I R 1917 All. 29; 41 Ind. Cas. 310; 18 Cr. L J 790; 15 A L J 587.

The learned Advocate-General has argued before us that that confession also admits that the child was born alive. He relies in this connection on the second question put to the appellant by the Magistrate recording the confession which is to the following effect: "Did you throw the born child into the well as the result of which he died of drowning?" To this the answer given was "Yes." It is clear that that question was put in an unfortunate form as it is a question composite in a nature to which it is almost impossible to give a direct answer 'yes or 'no,' and we cannot therefore infer from it that the appellant did actually admit that the child was born alive. We are therefore of opinion that if the confession made to the lady doctor is inadmissible in evidence there is no evidence on the file to show that the child was born alive. The learned Advocate-General has suggested that we might presume that all children are born alive under the provisions of s. 114, Evi. Act. Such a presumption could not, in our opinion be reasonably made especially in the case of a young woman giving birth to her first child and entirely unattended during the process. Learned Counsel for the appellant has contended that the confession made to the lady doctor was inadmissible under the provisions of s. 26, Evi. Act, as it was made while the appellant was in the custody of the Police. This point does not appear to have been argued before the learned Sessions Judge who heard the case but in our opinion it must prevail. When the body was taken from the well the appellant had been called by the Police to identify it and she made before the Police Officer the statement which has been ruled out as being inadmissible. She was then sent in charge of a lance head constable of Police to the hospital to be medically examined. While she was being medically examined but not in the immediate presence of the lance head constable she made the confession to the doctor. The question is therefore whether the appellant was at the time this confession was made, in the custody of a Police Officer.

Learned Counsel for the appellant has referred us to three cases reported in Emperor v. Sheoram (2), Mg Lay v. Emperor (3).

(2) A I R 1928 Lah. 282; 108 Ind. Cas. 389; 29 Cr. L J 386; 10 Lah. L J 174.

and Sit Ro Saw v. Emperor (4). We have in addition consulted two cases referred to in Woodroffe and Amirali's Law of Evidence, namely Empress v. Lester (5) and Emperor v. Nallangowda Parawatgowda (6). In Emperor v. Sheoram (2), the facts were that a Post Office Official was accused of an offence. He was in the custody of the Police but was sent to a superior official of the Post Office Department and left with him alone for about three hours. He was alleged to have made a confession to this superior Post Office Official and the learned Judges refused to admit the confession into evidence as the procedure was taken with a view to evade the mandatory rule enacted by s. 26, Evi. Act. In Mg. Lay v. Emperor (3), it was alleged by the prosecution in order to secure the admission of a confession that the accused at the time had not been formally arrested. It was held that the question of formal arrest had not affected the merits of the case as the accused was actually detained by the Police at the time. Sit Ro Saw v. Emperor (4), does not appear to be a direct authority on the point as the section there applied was s. 24 and not s. 26, Evi. Act. The two Bombay cases however are directly in point. In the first of them an accused person was being taken in a tonga. In front of him was riding Policeman. The Policeman left the tonga to go to a roadside village and get another horse. In the meantime the tonga with the accused proceeded for some miles and during that period it was said that the accused had made a confession to a fellow passenger. It was held that the accused was still in the custody of the Police when the confession was made. The second Bombay case, namely Emperor v. Nallangowda Parwatgowda (6), is still more analogous to the facts of the present case. In that case an accused had been taken by a Policeman to a hospital. The Policeman stayed outside in the verandah while the accused is said to have made a confession inside the hospital but out of the hearing of the Policeman. It was held that the accused was still in the custody of the Policeman.

In our opinion, there can be no doubt that in the present case the accused was in the custody of the Police when she made the confession to the doctor and therefore its admissibility is ruled out by s. 26, Evi. Act. There remains therefore no evidence that the child was born alive and the conviction under s. 302, I. P. C. cannot be sustained. The conviction under s. 318, I. P. C. however is obviously correct for even at the trial the accused admitted having secretly thrown the child into the well with a view to hiding her shame. We set aside the conviction of the appellant under s. 302, I. P. C. and acquit her of that charge. We maintain the conviction and sentence passed upon her under s. 318, I. P. C.

RANGOON HIGH COURT

Letters Patent Appeal No. 5 of 1940,
July 1, 1940

ROBERTS, C. J. AND MOSELY, J.

DEOKALI PATTAH—APPELLANT

RAMDEVI AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Appeal—Letters Patent—Finding of fact impugned by High Court in Letters Patent or second Appellate Court—It is not enough for High Court to say that it is not satisfied that matters of fact were proved—It must be satisfied that there was no sufficient evidence—Soundness of conclusions derived from findings of fact—High Court in Letters Patent Appeal, if can adjudicate upon — Finding of fact arrived at on evidence, interference with — Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 53—Sole and only creditor, if can maintain representative suit—Transfer challenged as void under s. 53—Material question to be considered—Fact that all creditors have been paid off since transfer, if material — Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 100—Lower Appellate Court agreeing with trial Court, if bound to take every sentence of trial Court judgment and say that it agrees with it.

While considering a finding of fact arrived by the lower Appellate Court, it is necessary for the High Court in Letters Patent Appeal to distinguish between evidence which would be sufficient and evidence which the High Court itself might think satisfactory. It is not allowable for the High Court in second appeal, or in Letters Patent appeal to say merely that it is not satisfied that matters of fact were proved, within the meaning of s. 3, Evi. Act: it should have to go further, in order to impugn the finding of fact of the first Appellate Court and say that there was no sufficient evidence. The High Court can adjudicate on the soundness of conclusions which have been derived from findings of fact. On the other hand, if there is evidence upon which a finding of fact has been arrived at which could have been arrived at with propriety, function of the High Court is at an end. Ram Gopal v. Shameskhaton (2) and 161 Ind. Cas. 887 (3), relied on. 189 Ind. Cas. 817 (1), referred to.

Even if the plaintiff is the only creditor, he can bring a representatives suit for the benefit of or on behalf of all the creditors. 152 Ind. Cas. 555 (4), referred to.

Where a transfer is challenged as void under s 53 what the Court has to consider is whether the action of the transferee on the date of the transfer was intended to defeat or delay the creditors and not whether the creditors have been defeated since. The fact that all creditors have been paid off since the date of the transfer is immaterial.

There is no magic in any special formula of words, nor is the first Appellate Court bound to take every sentence of the trial Court's judgment and say in terms that he agrees with it as though he were a litigant dealing with all his opponent's pleadings. Where the lower Appellate Court while agreeing with the trial Court's finding of fact uses in a part of his judgment the phrase "it is not unreasonable to presume", with reference to lower Court's finding of fact, it means no more than that he was satisfied that the trial Court was right in the conclusion at which he arrived, or at least that he was unwilling to disturb it. Such a finding of fact is binding in second appeal. 128 Ind. Cas. 366 (5), distinguished.

L. P. A. against the decree of the High Court, in S. A. No. 191 of 1939.

Mr. P. N. Bhattacharyya, for the Appellant.

Mr. Srinivasan, for the Respondents.

Roberts, C. J.—This is a Letters Patent appeal in respect of which a certificate has been given that the case is a fit one for appeal, and the question before us is whether the finding of the District Judge, Meiktila, that a gift by registered deed, dated October 25, 1933, by one Ganesh Prasad to his wife Ramdevi, of two houses, was voidable as being made with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, within the meaning of s. 53, T. P. Act. If it is a finding of fact it cannot be interfered with by reason of the existence of the rule which has been recently explained in U. Rai Gyaw Thoo & Co. Ltd. v. Ma Hla U, Pru (1). The District Judge's finding purported to be one of fact, and we have to decide whether there was any material, sufficient in law, from which the District Judge could arrive by inference or deduction at the conclusion at which he arrived.

It is, of course, necessary for us to distinguish between evidence which would be sufficient and evidence which we ourselves might think satisfactory. It is not allowable for the learned Judge in second appeal, or for us, to say merely that we are not satisfied that matters of fact were proved, within the meaning of s. 3, Evi. Act : we should have to go further, in order to impugn the finding of fact of the learned District Judge, and say that there was no sufficient evidence. And the question here is whether the learned Judge was right in saying that there was no sufficient evidence in law, i. e., no material at all, from which a deduction and inference could be made. If there was any evidence at all, it is plain that we cannot interfere. We can, as pointed out by Mr. Srinivasan, referring to Ram Gopal v. Shameskhaton (2) adjudicate on the soundness of conclusions which have been derived from findings of fact. On the other hand, if there is evidence upon which a finding of fact has been arrived at which could have been arrived at with propriety, our function is at an end : see Asgar Ali v. C. V. R. Firm (3) where the judgment of the Court ended with these words :

"In the present case both Courts have found that as a matter of fact the transfer of the land in question was fraudulent, and against this finding of fact no second appeal lies. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs"

What, then, was the evidence upon which the learned District Judge purported to arrive at a finding of fact ? First of all, it is said by the learned Judge in second appeal that there was evidence that Ganesh Prasad was not financially embarrassed. That evidence, however, was disbelieved in the trial Court. It is clear that the gift which he purported to make to his wife on October 25, 1933, was made four days after he got a notice of demand for Rs. 2,500 from a creditor, Jagat Singh, and shortly after the gift to his wife had been made Jagat Singh was obliged to file a suit in order to get this money paid to him.

There is, moreover, evidence that the present appellant Deokali Pattah accepted the mortgage of same property of Ganesh Prasad in April 1934 to cover a debt of Rs. 2,532, due to the former. It is said that there is evidence on the record to show that the mortgaged property covered the amount of the debt, but, in our opinion, this is by no means clear. There is no doubt that the appellant took what he could get then by way of security, the mortgage being by way of renewal of an old promissory note. It is stated in the judgment appealed against, that it is inconceivable that the respondent would have accepted such a mortgage if he had not himself been satisfied at the time that his debt was sufficiently secure. But there is no contention that this was a mortgage which was taken by a person who was parting with his property in consequence of having obtained proper security ; on the contrary, he was a creditor who was trying to cover himself by every means in his power.

Not only did he take a mortgage on his property, but Ganesh Prasad also had a policy on his life which he mortgaged along with these lands, and it is in evidence and accepted that this was the subject of a prior assignment to his wife ; this was found by the learned Sub-Divisional Judge and inferentially confirmed by the District Court. There were other creditors who obtained decrees within a short time afterwards. It is, to my mind, unnecessary to go into their claims in detail ; it is enough to say that, when an examination of the position comes to be made, there were grounds for saying that Ganesh Prasad was financially embarrassed both after as well as before the time he made the purported gift of the houses to his wife.

It has been urged on behalf of the respondent that the gift of the two houses was made not by Ganesh Prasad alone but Ganesh Prasad and Muniram. Muniram is dead and it appears that his only legal representative is Lal Chand, respondent No. 2, who would be his grandson (Muniram being the father of Ganesh Prasad): however that may be, I cannot think that this point is one of importance since, the learned Judge having held that the gift was voidable and of no effect, it is clear that both the lower Courts accepted the plaintiff's views that the gift was made in collusion with Muniram, and that Muniram's name was used for the purpose of making what was represented as a gift, whereas in fact it was merely device in order to defeat or delay the creditors. Then it is said that this ought to be a representative suit and that the plaintiff-appellant represents no one except himself. It is, I think, clear that the suit has been instituted on behalf, or for the benefit, of all the creditors. The case to which reference was made in this connexion is that in Chidambaram Chettyar v. R. M. A. R. S. Firm (4). Even if the plaintiff were the only creditor, I do not see why he should not in these circumstances, bring a suit of this kind, and I agree with the observations of the learned District Judge in this connexion. It is urged that all creditors have been paid off now and that therefore it is impossible to say that the transfer is void; but what we have to consider is the action of Ganesh Prasad on Octbor 25, 1933, and not whether the creditors have been defeated since; it is quite clear that many of them may have been delayed.

The last point that was taken was that the learned District Judge did not specifically say that there was fraud and there must be concurrent finding of facts so that the Sub-Divisional Court and the District Court are agreed before the learned Judge in second appeal is bound. There is however, in my opinion, no magic in any special formula of words, nor is the District Judge bound to take every sentence of the learned Sub-Divisional Judge and say in terms that he agrees with it as though he were a litigant dealing with all his opponent's pleadings. He uses in a part of his judgment the phrase "it is not unreasonable to presume," and it is said that it is ambiguous. In my opinion, it means no more than that he was satisfied that the Sub-Divisional Judge was right in the conclusion at which he arrived, or at least that he was unwilling to disturb it. There I see a clear distinction between this case and the case in Ma Hla Me v. Maung Hla Baw (5) which is the only authority for the proposition that the High Court may intervene on a question of fact where the matter has been ambiguously dealt with and no satisfactory conclusion has been arrived at in the Court below. Bearing all these matters in mind, I am of opinion, that the whole case is really summed up in the observations of the Bench in Asgar Ali v. C. V. R. M. Firm (3) to which I have refered in the earlier part of my judgment. And, therefore, this appeal must be allowed and the judgment and decree of the learned Judge in second appeal must be set aside and the judgment of the District Court must be confirmed and the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court upheld with costs in all Courts, Advocate's fee in this Court 10 gold mohurs.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT

Criminal Reference No. 109 of 1940

BARTLEY AND ROXBURGH, JJ.

JOYRAM RAKSHIT—COMPLAINANT

ANNADA PROSAD KUNDU—ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 438—Reference under—Conviction under s. 323, if can be altered to one under s. 325, Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Reference recommending enhancement of sentence—Accused is entitled to show cause against conviction—High Court can examine actual evidence to decide propriety of conviction.

High Court has no power in a reference under s. 438, Criminal P. C., to alter a conviction under s. 323 to one under s. 325 I. P. C.

Where in a reference under s. 438, Criminal P. C., the District Magistrate recommends that the sentence should be enhanced, the accused is entitled to show cause against his conviction, and the High Court can itself examine the actual evidence in the case in order to decide whether the conviction was a proper one or not.

Mr. D. N. Bhattacharjee, for the Crown and in support of Reference.

Messrs. N. K. Basu and Ram Krishna Pal, for the Accused and against Reference.

Bartley, J.—This is a reference under s 438, Criminal P. C., made by the District Magistrate of Bankura. The matter arose in the following way: On July 4, 1939 at 6·30 in the morning one Gobinda Lal Rakshit laid an information at the Ohhatra Police Station that Probodhbala, wife of Annada Prosad Kundu, had committed suicide by hanging herself. The Sub-Inspector went to the spot and found the body of Probodhbala lying in the upper part of the house. He held an inquest and sent the body to Bankura for post mortem examination. In the original post mortem report, it was noted that opinion regarding the cause of death was reserved pending the receipt of the results of chemical examination of the viscera of the deceased. But it was also noted in the same report that there was a tear in the pelvic cavity and that the vaginal wall was intensely congested and bruised. The body at the time of the post mortem examination was in a more or less decomposed condition. After receipt of the report of the Chemical Examiner which showed that there was no poison detected the Medical Officer who made the post mortem gave it as his opinion that the woman probably died as a result of shock and haemorrhage resulting from the injuries to the vagina, probably homicidal. On receipt of this opinion, a case was instituted at the thana on August 4, 1939 which ended in the submission of the final report, that is to say, that there was no evidence on which to send up anybody on a charge of causing the death of the woman.

The next step was that on October 14, 1939 the father of the deceased woman lodged a complaint to the effect that his daughter's husband in collusion with some other people, had murdered his daughter on Ashar 18, last and then given out that she had committed suicide. The Police, however, failed to send up anybody and the complainant therefore moved the Court by way of a petition of complaint. The matter was enquired into and finally the accused Annada Prosad, husband of the woman, was placed on his trial on a charge under s. 326, I. P. C. The trying Magistrate convicted him under s. 323 of the Code and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 in default six months' rigorous imprisonment. The District Magistrate then made the present reference recommending that the charge should be altered to one under s. 325, I. P. C., and that the sentence which was grossly inadequate should be enhenced.

In the first place, it should be pointed out that this Court has no power to alter a conviction under s. 323 to one under s. 325, I. P. C., in the manner recommended by the learned District Magistrate. In the second place, as the recommendation is that the sentence should be enhanced, it follows that the accused is entitled to show cause against his conviction, and this has been done on his behalf in the present case. We have therefore been compelled to examine for ourselves the actual evidence in the case in order to decide whether the conviction was a proper one or not. On consideration of the entire evidence we are forced to come to the conclusion that it does not warrant a conviction under s. 323, I. P. C. In the case under consideration in which the Magistrate convicted, the prosecution attempted to establish that the woman had been killed by her husband at about 3 o'clock in the morning in an upper room in the accused's own house. In order to do so they examined two witnesses who claimed to have seen what actually happened and two other witnesses who deposed that they heard the woman crying out for help. Now, the evidence of the first of these two eye-witnesses is this: that on the night of occurrence at about 3 o'clock in the morning or one prahar before day-light he was in his room next door to the house of the accused. He heard shrieks coming from a room on the upper storey of the accused's house. There was a window in that room and there was a wooden ladder kept below the window. He climbed this ladder and saw through the window the accused beating his wife with a stick. He tried to dissuade the accused and told him not to beat his wife, but the accused went on beating her until the woman fell. The next morning he went to the house and found the woman dead. With regard to this evidence it is, in the first place, highly improbable that a witness would go to the trouble of climbing a ladder, looking through the window, remonstrating with the accused and then merely go back home. In the second place, his evidence if accepted does not tally with the medical evidence which suggests that the death of the woman was caused not by external beating but by internal injuries. Lastly, this witness is admittedly on bad terms with the father of the accused.

The evidence of the other eye-witness who was a servant in the house of the accused but was dismissed the next day, is that on that night the accused and his wife were in the upstairs room. He heard the wife screaming and went upstairs. He saw that the accused was poking her with a stick and that the accused's father was present and was inciting the son to keep on beating her. She fell down and looked unconscious. In the morning she was dead. The father and the son asked this witness to say that she died of hanging. This, of course, is a different story to that told by the first witness. According to P. W. No. 6 the father and the son were present at the time when the woman was being beaten and until she fell senseless. According to the other witness only the son was there and he was there until she fell down senseless. The only other evidence is that of some witnesses who say that they heard screams at the time of the occurrence and recognized the voice of Prabodhbala. One of these witnesses accounts for his presence at that time on the morning by saying that he was coming at that time along the gully past the accused's bari from his field of paddy-seedlings. The other witness who heard screams from the bari accounts for the fact by saying that he lived about a rashi off and that on that night he had not a sound sleep as he had stomach trouble and that he heard the woman crying out, "Do not beat me any more. I am dying." He called for the accused's father but got no answer and went away. This witness also admits that he had a suit with the father of the accused which went to the length of this Court. This is all the evidence upon which the conviction of the accused has been based.

Now, it appears perfectly clear to us that in view of the highly discrepant stories told by the two alleged eye-witnesses about the occurrence of the improbable nature of their stories and of the fact that neither story tallies with the medical evidence in the case it would be highly unsafe to convict the accused on testimony of this character. There is further consideration that this evidence such as it is was undoubtedly not given before the Police and that the doctor who made the post mortem very rightly reserved his opinion as to the cause of death until he was satisfied that it could not have been due to poison. In our view of the evidence, and of the whole history of the case it is not nearly so improbable that the accused might have been responsible for the death of his wife as it is that the alleged eye-witnesses saw anything whatsoever of what actually happened. In the result, we must reject the reference made by the District Magistrate and we must further set aside the conviction of the accused under s. 323, I. P. C., and direct that he be acquitted. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

THE MUNICIPAL BOARD OF LUCKNOW

PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

Lala RAMJI LAL—DEFENDANT

—RESPONDENT

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 100—U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), s. 177—Execution sale of immovable property—Municipal taxes in arrears—Auction-purchaser should be presumed to have constructive notice of charge—His failure to make enquiry—Effect—Duty of Municipality—Bye-laws of Lucknow Municipality—Municipality, if can follow property in hands of auction-purchaser in execution of decree.

The principle of constructive notice in the case of a transaction relating to immovable property which is required by law to be and has been registered by a registered instrument, should be applied to arrears of taxes which form a charge under the Municipalities Act on property sold at an auction sale. Even if any difficulty had been experienced by the auction-purchaser or was likely to be experienced by him in obtaining information regarding arrears of Municipal taxes standing against the immovable property, directly from the Municipal authorities, that would not be a valid defence. Rule 19 of the Municipal Account Code provides for the affixation to the assessment list of fly-leaves containing columns 5 to 13 of Form 3 appended to that Code. This form clearly shows what arrears are due. There are bye-laws of the Lucknow Municipality regulating inspections and the giving of copies of Municipal records and documents, and although permission has to be given by the Executive Officer, it may be presumed that where a house is being sold in execution of a Civil Court decree permission would be given. If on application being made permission was refused and the would-be purchaser could not otherwise obtain the necessary information, constructive notice could not of course be imputed to him. Intending purchaser is not bound to presume that the taxes have been paid. It must be presumed that a person who buys house property situated in a Municipality is acquainted with the law by which a charge is imposed on that property for the payment of taxes. When a charge has been expressly imposed in the Municipalities Act upon property for the payment of Municipal taxes, the Municipality is entitled to follow the property in the hands of a transferee who has not cared to make any enquiry as to whether payment of the taxes is in arrears. 27 Ind. Cas. 261 (1) and 191 Ind. Cas. 148 (3), considered, 185 Ind. Cas. 597 (2) and 191 Ind. Cas. 148 (3), held Overruled. [p. 292, col. 2; p. 293, cols. 1 & 2.]

A. against the order of Mr. Justice Zia-ul Hasan, dated August 20, 1936.

Mr. K. P. Misra, for the Appellant.
Mr. R. K. Bose, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal under s. 12 (2) of the Oudh Courts Act against the order passed by Mr. Justice Zia-ul Hasan on August 20, 1936, setting aside in second appeal the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, Lucknow, dated January 25, 1935, confirming the order of the learned Munsif, South Lucknow, dated October 10, 1934, decreeing the appellant's suit.

The suit was brought by the Municipal Board of Lucknow against Lala Ramji Lal to recover a sum of Rs. 48 4 on account of house and water taxes due for the period from April 1, 1931, to May 31, 1932. The house in respect of which these taxes were due had been purchased by Ramji Lal at a Court sale in execution of a decree obtained by him against Abdullah, the former owner of the house. The auction took place in March 1932, and the sale to Ramji Lal was confirmed in May 1932.

The defence put forward by Ramji Lal was that he was not liable to pay these taxes as they were due for a period prior to his purchase. This defence was not accepted either by the trial Court or by the learned Subordinate Judge in first appeal. It was, however allowed by Mr. Justice Zia-ul Hasan in second appeal. Mr. Justice Zia-ul Hasan first referred to s. 177 of the U. P. Municipalities Act of 1916 which reads as follows:—

"All sums due on account of a tax imposed on the all annual value of building or lands or of both shall, subject to the prior payment of the land revenue (if any) due to His Majesty thereupon be a first charge upon such buildings or lands."

It was in view of this provision that the Municipal Board claimed a charge over the house purchased by Ramji Lal for the arrears in suit. Mr. Justice Zia-ul Hasan then considered the effect of s. 100 of the T. P. Act under which it is necessary for the enforcement of a charge against any property in the hands of a person to whom it has been transferred for consideration that he had notice of the charge. It was contended by the Municipal Board that Ramji Lal should be deemed to have had constructive notice of the charge in view of the provision in s. 3 of the T. P. Act which reads:

"A person is said to have notice of a fact when he actually knows that fact, or when, but for wilful abstention from an inquiry or search which he ought to have made or gross negligence, he would have known it."

Ramji Lal did not claim that he had made any enquiry or search at the Municipal Office to discover whether or not any arrears of taxes were due in respect of the house, and the questions for consideration were whether he wilfully abstained from making an enquiry or search which he should have made, or whether there was gross negligence on his part in not making such enquiry or search. Mr. Justice Zia-ul Hasan answered these questions in the negative. He pointed out that in the bye-laws of the Lucknow Municipal Board house and water-taxes are payable in advance, and the Municipalities Act gives very wide powers to Municipal Boards for their recovery. He thought that in view of these provisions it should be very seldom that any taxes should fall in arrears. He therefore did not consider that it was incumbent on a would-be purchaser to make any enquiry about arrears holding that it would be stretching the doctrine of constructive notice too far to say that in every case in which a person wants to bid for property liable to Municipal taxes he ought to make enquiries, before making a bid, whether any Municipal taxes are outstanding against the property.

Reference was made to the case of Akhoy Kumar Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (I. L. R. 42 Cal. 625) (1), in which a purchaser was held to have had constructive notice of the Municipal taxes due in respect of the property sold, but Mr. Justice Zia-ul Hasan did not think that the ruling in this case was applicable, both because it was not known whether the Calcutta Municipal Act that was in force at the time the ruling was given was or was not similar in its provisions to the U. P. Municipalities Act of 1916, and also because the purchaser in that case was the mortgagee himself who had foreclosed the mortgaged property and was, therefore, presumably acquainted with the existence of the arrears.

(1) 42 C 625; 27 Ind. Cas. 261; 21 C L J 177; 19 C W N 87.

Learned Counsel for the Municipal Board first drew out attention to a ruling given by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Rai Indra Narain v. Muhammad Ismail, (I. L. R. 1939 All. 885) (2). In this case it was held that s. 100 of the T. P. Act as amended by Act XX of 1929, does not apply to auction sales or auction purchasers. The word "transfer" in s. 100 of the T. P. Act must be read as difined in s. 5 of the same Act and the definition would not, it was held, include an execution purchase. Moreover s. 2 (d) provided that nothing in the Act shall apply to any transfer in execution of a decree, save as provided by s. 57 and Chap. IV of the Act, and while s. 100 is in Chap. IV, it does not refer to auction sales. Section 100 can therefore have no application to the case of an execution decree, and it is not necessary that the purchaser should have had notice of the Charge.

Learned Counsel conceded that this view had been dissented from in the following year by another Bench of the Allahabad High Court, namely, in Municipal Board, Cawnpore v. Roop Chand Jain, (1940 A. L. J. R. 560) (3). In this case it was observed that the amendment to s. 100 introduced no change in the law as it stood before the amendment. It was held that s. 100 applies to transfers by auction sale in execution of decrees and therefore a bona fide purchaser takes property he buys free of all charges of which he has had no notice actual or constructive.

It will appear, therefore, that while in 1939 the Allahabad High Court held that no question of notice arises in such cases because s. 100 of the T. P. Act has no application to an auction sale, in 1940 the view taken was that s. 100 applies equally to transfers by auction sale as to transfers by act of parties, and, therefore it becomes necessary to consider whether a bona fide purchaser at such a sale has had notice, actual or constructive.

(2) I L R (1939) All. 885; 185 Ind. Cas. 597; A I R 1939 All. 687; (1939) A L J 849; 12 R A 337.

(3) (1940) A L J 560; 191 Ind. Cas. 148; A I R 1940 All. 456; 13 R A 217.

On the view which we take of the primary question under consideration in this case, namely, whether the auction purchaser Ramji Lal had or had not constructive notice of the charge upon the house, it is not necessary to consider which view of the Allahabad High Court should be followed.

After careful consideration we have come to the conclusion that the principle of constructive notice in the case of a transaction relating to immovable property which is required by law to be and has been registered by a registered instrument, should be applied to arrears of taxes which form a charge under the Municipalities Act on property sold at an auction sale.

Learned Counsel for the respondent Ramji Lal based his arguments largely on certain observations of the Allahabad High Court in Municipal Board, Cawnpore v. Roop Chand Jain (3). It was observed in that case:—

"If for instance the charge is created by a registered document then the purchaser would be held to have constructive notice of that charge inasmuch as a prudent purchaser would in ordinary course search the registers before effecting the purchase. There is no register, so far as we know, of arrears of taxes or of charges in respect thereof. It has not been shown that the Municipality of Cawnpore intimated to the public in the "Press' or by other publication a list of the properties which are charged in respect of arrears to taxes. There is nothing upon the record to justify the conclusion that the defendants could have demanded any information from the Municipality in regard to charges on immovable property within the Municipal limits."

It has not been suggested in the present case that the respondent could not have ascertained by enquiry from the Municipal authorities whether there were or were not any arrears of taxes due in respect of the house. But even if any difficulty had been experienced by him or was likely to be experienced by him in obtaining such information directly from the Municipal authorities, that would not in our opinion be a valid defence. Rule 19 of the Municipal Account Code provides for the affixation to the assessment list of fly-leaves containing columns 5 to 13 of Form 3 appended to that Code. This form clearly shows what arrears are due. There are bye-laws of the Lucknow Municipality regulating inspections and the giving of copies of Municipal records and documents, and although permission has to be given by the Executive Officer, it may be presumed that where a house is being sold in execution of a Civil Court decree permission would be given. If on application being made permission was refused and the would-be purchaser could not otherwise obtain the necessary information, constructive notice could not of course be imputed to him.

It appears to us, however, that no difficulty would have been experienced by the respondent in ascertaining whether there were any arrears of taxes in respect of this house.

It was also observed in the case of Municipal Board, Cawnpore v. Roop Chand Jain (3) :—

"No intending purchaser is bound to presume that the taxes upon the property which he contemplates purchasing have not been paid in the ordinary course in the absence of any special intimation by the Municipality. If there has been negligence in the present instance it has been on the part of the corporation of Cawnpore. They should have taken steps long ago to recover the arrears of taxes from defendant No. 1 and they certainly should have taken steps to intimate and proclaim at the auction sale to intending purchasers that they held a charge over the property in respect of these arrears."

With the greatest respect we are unable to accept this view. In our opinion, the question is not whether an intending purchaser is bound to presume that the taxes have not been paid, but whether he is entitled to presume that they have been paid. We do not think that he is. We have given full consideration to the observation of the learned single Judge of this Court that in view of the wide powers given to Municipal Boards for the collection of taxes it should be very seldom that any taxes should fall in arrears. It is, we think, well known that despite these wide powers taxes do fall into arrears very often. We need only refer in this connection to the annual resolution of the Local Govt. on Municipal Administration and Finances, which shows how such collections fall below the demand.

It must be presumed that a person who buys house property situted in a Municipality is acquainted with the law by which a charge is imposed on that property for the payment of taxes. Whatever negligence the Corporation of Cawnpore may have been gilty of in the Allahabad case, we are unable to find that there was any negligence on the part of the Lucknow Corporation in the present case, apart from their failure to recover the arrears of taxes from the judgment-debtor to whom the house previously belonged. We doubt whether the duty should be placed on a corporation to ascertain what auction sales of the property situated in the Municipality are taking place, and then intimate at them to intending purchasers to what Municipal charges the property is subject. Unless and until some intimation is given to the corporation it cannot, we think, be expected to know what auction sales are in contemplation. In these circumstances, we consider that when a charge has been expressly imposed in the Municipalities Act, upon property for the payment of Municipal taxes, the Municipality is entitled to follow the property in the hands of a transferee who has not cared to make any enquiry as to whether payment of the taxes is in arrears.

We have considered the Calcutta case already referred to Akhoy Kumar Banerjee v. Corporation of Calcutta (1), and we do not think that there is sufficent reason for distinguishing that case from the case under consideration. Mr. Justice Zia-ul-Hasan observed that we do not know whether the Calcutta Municipalities Act, that was in force at the time the ruling was made was or was not similar in its provisions to the U. P. Municipalities Act, 1916. The Calcutta Municipal Act, then in force was, as appears from the judgment in that case, the Act of 1899. The judgment also shows that s. 228 made the consolidated rate a first charge on the premises and that it reads as follows :

"The consolidated rate, due in respect of any building or land, shall, subject to the prior payment of the land revenue, if any, due to the Govt. thereupon, be a first charge upon the said building or land and upon the movable property, if any, found within or upon such building or land and belonging to the person liable for such rate."

There is no substantial difference between the provisions of this section and the provisions of s. 177 of the U. P. Municipalities Act of 1916. The facts in the Calcutta case were somewhat different from those in the present case, but we see no reason why the same principle in regard to constructive notice should not be applied. It has been argued that there was not in the present case either a wilful abstention from an enquiry or search which ought to have been made, or gross negligence. But we have to consider the meaning of these expressions in the light of the first Explanation to s. 3 of the T. P. Act. This explanation shows that where no enquiry has been made in respect of any transaction relating to immovable property which is required by law to be and has been effected by a registered instrument, the person guilty of the omission is considered either to have wilfully abstained from making it or to have been grossly negligent in not making it, and we see no reason to differentiate between an enquiry into a transaction relating to immovable property in respect of which there has been or should have been registration, and an enquiry which it was equally his duty to make in the case of arrears of Municipal taxes.

For these reasons, we are unable to uphold the view taken by Mr. Justice Zia-ul-Hasan and we accordingly allow this appeal with costs, set aside the decree of the single Judge of this Court and restore the decrees of the Courts below.

Administration suit—Co-sharers—Partition—One heir mortgaging his undivided share in entire joint estate, during pendency of suit—Subsequent partition—Other heirs, if take their allotted share free from encumbrance—Lis pendens.

Where one of two or more co-sharers mortgages his undivided share in some of the properties held jointly, the mortgagee takes the security subject to the right of the other co-sharers to enforce a partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. Where, therefore, in the course of an administration suit for partition one of the heirs mortgages his undivided share in the whole of the joint estate, the other heirs take the allotted properties, in the absence of fraud, free from the mortgage, irrespective of the doctrine of lis pendens and the mortgagee can proceed only against the properties allotted to the mortgagor in substitution for his undivided share, Jogendra Chunder Ghose v. Fulkumari Dassi (1), Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhury (2), Chatterput Singh v. Maharaj Bahadoor (3), 108 Ind. L. P. A. from the decree of the High Court, in S. A. No. 192 of 1939 dated February 29, 1940.

Mr. P. K. Basu, for the Appellants,
Mr. K. C. Sanyal, for the Respondents,

Mosely, J.—This letters patent appeal must be allowed. The facts are briefly that in the course of an administration suit one of the parties, a co-owner (Maung Aung Pe) mortgaged his undivided share of the properties. The mortgage-deed specifies the various properties which comprised the estate. At that time Aung Pe presumably thought that he was entitled to a one-eighth share and mortgaged that. He was subsequently awarded a one-third share and again mortgaged the balance of that to the respondents. After this a final decree was passed on a compromise between Aung Pe and the only other co-heir, Ma Saw Kin, who was entitled to a share in the properties, for the third co-heir, U Tun Aung Gyaw, had admittedly by then taken out more than his share of the estate. At this partition the house and site now in question went to Ma Saw Kin with other properties while Aung Pe again received other properties still. After this Ma Saw Kin transferred the properties in suit, the house and site, to her children, who again transferred them to the present appellants, Daw Shin and Daw Tin. The respondents sued Aung Pe and obtained a mortgage-decree against him, and at the auction bought the property themselves. They then sued Daw Tin and Daw Shin in the suit now under appeal for possession of Aung Pe's one-third share in this house and site. The suit was dismissed in the trial Court and in appeal by the learned District Judge, it being held that the suit was not maintainable. In second appeal to this Court, however, it was said that Aung Pe had only mortgaged his one-third interest, and that that transaction did not affect Ma Saw Kin's interests. The registered mortgage by Aung Pe was constructive notice to Ma Saw Kin. The learned Judge held that what Ma Saw Kin received at partition was only a two-thirds share in this house and site, or that what she received was subject to the mortgage of Aung Pe's one-third share in it. It was said that the doctrine of lis pendens does not necessarily apply to administration suits, which are not suits for the recovery of specific immovable property, and that for the above-mentioned reasons it should not be applied here.

Authorities were not cited to the learned Judge in second appeal, which convincingly show that irrespective of the doctrine of lis pendens this suit was not maintainable. One of these authorities was cited in the trial Court, namely Jogendra Chunder Ghose v. Fulkumari Dasi (1), which itself followed one of the leading authorities cited to us, Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhury (2). It was laid down there that a mortgage of an undivided share in land may be enforced against lands which under a revenue partition have been allotted in lieu of such share, whether such lands be in the possession of the mortgagor or of one who has purchased his right, title and interest. But lands allotted in severalty by the revenue partition to the co-sharers of the mortgagor are not subject to the mortgage. Another decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council is Chutterput Singh v. Maharaj Bahadoor (3), at p. 16 where it was said that when the estate of a deceased person is under administration of the Court, a purchaser from an heir buys subject to any disposition which has been or may be made of the deceased's estate in due course of administration. In that case the transaction in question was one dealing with one specific property only. In Puran Chand v. Monmotho Nath (4), their Lordships dealt with a case similar to the present one. The head-note reads as follows:

"In a suit to ascertain and administer the trusts under a deed a decree was made declaring one of the parties entitled to a one-sixth share in the surplus income, and that the trustees should have their costs out of the trust property. The beneficiary thereupon mortgaged his share. Under a later order in the suit part of the property was sold to realize the trustees' costs. Held, that the mortgagee's rights were subject to the sale and the mortgage was consequently not an encumbrance upon the title of the purchasers."

Perhaps the authority most on all fours with the present case is another decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Mohamed Afzal Khan v. Abdul Rahman (5). The decision there was to the effect that where one of two or more co-sharers mortgages his undivided share in some of the properties held jointly, the mortgagee takes the security subject to the right of the other co-sharers to enforce a partition and thereby to convert what was an undivided share of the whole into a defined portion held in severalty. If the mortgage, therefore, is followed by a partition and the mortgaged properties are allotted to other co-sharers, they take the allotted properties, in the absence of fraud, free from the mortgage, and the mortgagee can proceed only against the properties allotted to the mortgagor in substitution for his undivided share. That was a case of mortgage of an undivided share of some only of the properties held jointly. This case, like Byjnath Lall v. Ramoodeen Chowdhury (2) and Puran Chand v. Monmotho Nath (4), was a mortgage of an undivided share in all the properties. But that distinction makes, I conceive, no difference. It is clear then that the respondents could not enforce their mortgage against this property, which had been transferred by partition by Aung Pe, and this appeal must be allowed. In the result, the suit will be dismissed with costs throughout costs of this appeal five gold mohurs.

Roberts, C. J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Application for leave to appeal to Privy Council—Time requisite for obtaining copy of decree and copy of judgment, if can be excluded in computing limitation.*

Section 12 (3), Lim. Act, is to be read as enabling an applicant for leave to appeal, to exclude in computing the period of limitation for his application, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded. A party who seeks leave to appeal to the Privy Council is entitled, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for such an application, to have the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree and a copy of the judgment on which it is founded excluded in computing for purposes of limitation the period which has elapsed from the date of the judgment. 90 Ind. Cas. 601 (6), 66 Ind. Cas 88 (7), 139 Ind. Cas. 236 (8) and 80 Ind. Cas. 862 (9), approved 92 Ind. Cas. 897 (2), 157 Ind. Cas. 170 (3), 179 Ind. Cas. 912 (4) and 78 Ind. Cas. 953 (5), not approved.

P. C. Ap. application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. R. B. Lal, for the Appellant Applicant.

Mr. I. A. Abbasi, for Respondents Opposite Party Nos. 1 to 4.

Order.—These are five applications arising out of the judgment of a Bench of this Court, of which one of us was a member, reported as Matinuzzaman Khan, Khan Bahadur Moinul Mulk v. H. Hunter, Liquidator, Bank of Upper India Ltd. (1939 O. W. N. 420) (1). That was a judgment in eight appeals arising out of two Suits Nos. 2 and 3 of 1935 filed on the original side of this Court but transferred to and decided by a Civil Judge specially deputed to hear them. One of these was a suit by trustees to recover possession of a trust estate and the other was an administration suit. Of the present applications No. 3 is an application by Mr. H. Hunter defendant in the trust suit. That suit was dismissed by the trial Court but the appeal was successful and the suit was decreed by this Court. The valuation is much in excess of Rs. 10,000 and, therefore, the applicant of this application No. 3 is entitled to the grant of the certificate asked for.

Applications Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 12 are applications by parties to the administration suit. The administration suit was decreed in part by the trial Court which gave directions to the trustees how to administer the trust and adjudicated upon the rights of the various creditors who were defendants to the suit. By our decree in appeal we varied the decree of the lower Court so as to include the applicant of application No. 3, Mr. H. Hunter, among the creditors in respect of whom the Court below will pass a final decree showing the claims and liabilities of the various beneficiaries. It is not in dispute that the valuation of all these appeals is in excess of Rs. 10,000, and it follows that as we have varied the decree of the lower Court by our decree in appeal, the applicants are all subject to any other objections, entitled to the grant of the certificate prayed for.

In the case of the applicants of applications Nos. 6, 7 and 8 no objection has been raised. In the case of the application of Chaudhri Sharafuzzaman No. 12, it is contended that the application is barred by limitation, on the ground that the application was filed after the period of 90 days allowed under Art. 179, of the Indian Lim. Act.

In calculating the period of limitation the office has allowed the period occupied in the obtaining of copies of the decree and the judgment.

It is pointed out that O. XLV, r. 3 does not require that a copy of the judgment be filed along with an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, and it is contended that s. 12 of the Lim. Act does not permit this time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree and the judgment to be excluded.

Had it even been shown that this was a correct view of the law we should, we think, have been bound to take into consideration the admitted practice of the office of the Court in making allowance for the time occupied in obtaining these copies, and to have applied s. 5 of the Lim. Act. On a careful consideration, however of the terms of s. 12 of the Lim. Act and the cases quoted at the bar with reference to this section, we are of opinion that the practice of the office of this Court is founded on a correct view of the law and that a party who seeks leave to appeal to the Privy Council is entitled, in computing the period of limitation prescribed for such an application, to have the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree and a copy of the judgment on which it is founded excluded in computing for purposes of limitation the period which has elapsed from the date of the judgment.

On behalf of the opposite-party reliance has been placed particularly on two Allahabad cases and a Lahore case. In Walayati Begum v. Firm Jhandu Mal Mithu Lal (A. I. R. 1926 All. 286) (2), it was held that,

"sub-s. (3) of s. 12 does not apply to a case of an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and so such an applicant is not entitled to exclude the time for obtaining a copy of the judgment of the High Court."

This decision was based on the view that the language of sub-s. (3) when contrasted with that of sub-s. (2) clearly contemplated the exclusion from the scope of sub-s. (3) of the case of an application for leave to appeal. Further the learned Judges took note of the tact that the rules of the Allahabad High Court did not make it necessary that the applicant should, at the time of filing his application for leave, file also a copy of the judgment on which the decree was founded.

The same view was taken by another Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Gaekwar Baroda State Railway v. Muhammad Habib-Ullah, (I. L. R. 57 All. 751) (3).

In Lahore, in the case of Punjab Co-operative Bank Ltd., Amritsar v. Punjab National Bank Ltd., Amritsar, (A. I. R. 1939 Lahore, 43) (4), a Division Bench held that

"in computing the period of limitation for an application for leave to appeal, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment cannot be excluded."

The view taken in this judgment also was that "the wording of sub-ss. (2) and (3) of s. 12 of the Lim. Act is so unambiguous that it is not necessary to refer to any authorities at all."

It was considered that sub-s. (3) had no reference to applications for leave to appeal but referred only to actual appeals or applications for review of judgment.

The same view was taken by the Sind Judicial Commissioner's Court in Nur Mahomed v. Hassomal, (78 Ind. Cas. 953) (5).

On behalf of the applicants it is pointed out that the decisions quoted appear to have lost sight of the fact that the wording with which sub-s. (3) begins repeats exactly the words with which sub-s. (2) closes. Sub-sections (2) and (3) run as follows :—

"(2) In computing the period of limitation prescribed for an appeal, an application for leave to appeal and an application for a review of judgment, the day on which the judgment complained of was pronounced, and the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order appealed from or sought to be reviewed, shall be excluded.

(3) Where a decree is appealed from or sought to be reviewed, the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded shall also be excluded."

It is to be noted that although sub-s. (2) relates to the computation of the period of limitation prescribed for (1) an appeal, (2) an application for leave to appeal and (3) an application for a review of judgment, the time which is to be excluded is stated to be the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, sentence or order, (1) appealed or (2) sought to be reviewed. There is no mention in these closing words of the decree, sentence or order "sought to be appealed from" or "from which leave to appeal is sought" that is to say that the enactment under the words "appealed from" has lumped together cases of (1) an appeal and (2) an application for leave to appeal. The argument proceeds as we think, logically that the words "appealed from" or sought to be reviewed" in sub-s. (3) of this section must properly be interpreted as carrying the same meaning which they carried in sub-s. (2), and it will follow that the words "appealed from" are sufficient to cover not only an appeal but also an application for leave to appeal. We are of opinion that there is much force in this argument.

The view suggested is the view which is apparently held in at least four of the High Courts in India. In the Secretary of State for India. In re, (I. L. R. 48 Mad., 939) (6) it was held that "in the case of an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment appealed against, can, under s. 12 (3) of the Lim. Act, be excluded in calculating limitation."

Their Lordships pointed out that in any case this was a very reasonable position, because a proper application for leave to appeal could not be drawn up, unless the party or his Pleader had before him a copy of the judgment. The reasoning upon which the interpretation of the section was based is the same reasoning which has been put before us.

The same view was taken by the Patna High Court in Mahabir Prasad Tewari v. Jamuna Singh, (A. I. R. 1922, Pat., 255) (7) and the case of Commissioner of Income-tax, Bengal v. M. Shaw Wallace & Co., (I. L. R. 59, Cal., 251) (8) also supports the applicant's contention. In that case a learned Judge of the Calcutta High Court in delivering judgment on an application for leave to appeal remarked,

"I also think that, under s. 12, a party in a case, such as this is entitled to the time required to obtain a copy of the judgment."

That the same is the practice in Bombay is shown by the case of Nagindas Motilal v. Nilaji Moroba Naik, (I. L. R. 48 Bom., 442) (9). In the judgment of one of the Judges at p. 446* we find the remark,

"deducting the time requisite for obtaining the copy of the judgment it would appear that according to the period of limitation prescribed by Act XXVI of 1920 for such an application, the application should have been filed by July 2, 1921."

It is clear from this remark which is confirmed by a remark in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice at p. 443* where he says: "allowing for the time required for obtaining the copy of the judgment, the three months expired on July 3, 1921," that in the Bombay High Court the practice is that s. 12 (3) is read as enabling an applicant for leave to appeal to exclude in computing the period of limitation for his application the time requisit for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which it is founded.

In our opinion, the view taken by the High Courts at Madras, Bombay, Calcutta and Patna is preferable to that which has been taken by Allahabad, Lahore and Sind, and it is moreover in accordance with the practice current in this Court. We have no hesitation in holding that application No. 12 is not barred by limitation.

We order accordingly, that the necessary certificates as required by O. XLV of the Civil P. C., be granted to the applicants of these five applications.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Illatom adoption—Incidents to be determined by evidence in each case—Held, that plaintiff was illatom son-in-law and agreement must be inferred from facts, on basis of which affiliation was carried out—Second appeal—Finding of fact—Illatom adoption.

An illatom affiliation is a creature of agreement. But this does not mean that in every case of an illatom affiliation there must be a detailed contract embodying all the incidents of the arrangement in the particular case. The incidents of illatom affiliation have not been completely established by judicial decisions and these incidents should ordinarily be settled by evidence in the particular case. 128 Ind. Cas. 561 (1), relied on.

One K when he had no children took the plaintiff into his family with the idea of a regular adoption. Subsequently when sons and a daughter were born to him he formed the idea that, in due course, he would marry his daughter to the plaintiff and take the plaintiff as an illatom son-in-law. On this understanding the plaintiff continued to live in the family. On his death-bed K instructed his wife to complete the illatom affiliation by marrying the daughter to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was duly married to K's daughter and lived in the family and was treated as the illaton son-in-law;

Held, that the plaintiff was an illatom son-in-law. The plaintiff performed his part by marrying the daughter and was thereafter treated as an illatom son-in-law. From these facts it must be inferred that there was an agreement on the basis of which the illatom affiliation was carried out.

It is not open in second appeal to attack the findings of fact on the essential questions of the authorization by the prospective father-in-law to his wife to complete the affiliation after his death and of the subsequent marriage and the status recognized in favour of the adoptee as an illatom son-in-law.

S. A. against the decree of the Sub-Judge, Salem, dated February 1, 1935.

Messrs. M. S. Ramachandra Rao and D. R. Krishna Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswamy Ayyar and A. Balasubramania Iyer, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed properties on the basis of an alleged illatom affiliation. The plaintiff married the daughter of one Konda Reddi who died about the year 1909. The facts found are that Konda Reddi at a time when he had no children took the plaintiff into his family apparently with the idea of a regular adoption. Subsequently, there were born to Konda Reddi first a son, then a daughter and then another son. After the birth of the son it is found that Konda Reddi, no longer being able to adopt the plaintiff, formed the idea that, in due course, he would marry his daughter to the plaintiff and take the plaintiff as an illatom son-in-law. On this understanding the plaintiff continued to live in the family. But an epidemic of plague intervened, the eldest son being the first victim, followed by Konda Reddi himself about a week later. It is found as a fact that on his death-bed Konda Reddi instructed his wife to complete the illatom affiliation by marrying the daughter to the plaintiff. It would appear that the plaintiff was a major at the time of Konda Reddi's death. After his death the marriage of the plaintiff to Konda Reddi's daughter was duly carried out by the widow and it is found as a fact by the Courts below that thereafter the plaintiff was treated as the illatom son-in-law of the deceased Konda Reddi, that he lived in the family and managed the properties for his mother-in-law. It is not open in second appeal to attack the findings of fact on the essential questions of the authorization by Konda Reddi to his wife to complete the affiliation and of the subsequent marriage and the status recognized in favour of the plaintiff as an illatom son-in-law. It is however, contended that there is no finding nor proof of such an agreement as is necessary to form the basis of an illatom adoption.

The case has certain peculiarities. In the first place it comes from the Salem District which is not one of the Districts in which the illatom custom is widely recognized. Another peculiarity is that, according to the Subordinate Judge, the parties belong to the Kammala caste. But I am constrained to conclude that this must be a mistake due to the unfamiliarity of the learned Judge with the Telgu caste name, for the learned Judge, after stating that the parties are Kammala Reddis, states that this is one of the castes in respect of which Mayne's Hindu Law recognises that the illatom practice prevails. Actually the learned author recognizes the existence of the custom in the Kamma and Reddi castes not in the Kammala caste which is quite a different community and one in which, so far as I am aware, it has never been suggested that this practice peculiar to the various castes which call themselves Reddis can apply. The Kammala caste is essentially a Tamil caste of artisans not to be confused with the Telugu Kamma caste, which not infrequently adopts the title of Reddi and has strong affinities with the numerous Kapu castes, the members of which are normally known as Reddis. But I am unable to find any basis in the record for the Subordinate Judge's description of this community as Kammala Reddi The witnesses describe themselves as Reddis simply. Presumably, they must be Kamma Reddis wrongly described by the Subordinate Judge as Kammala Reddis.

It was not disputed in the Courts below that the community to which the parties belonged was one which recognizes the custom of illatom affiliation. I do not think that the Subordinate Judge is quite right in saying that the validity of the particular affiliation alleged was not denied; for it is in fact put in issue. The incidents of the very widespread practice of illatom affiliation have not been completely established by judicial decisions and it was recognized by a Bench of this Court in Subbaro v. Mahalakshmamma (1) that these incidents should ordinarily be settled by evidence in the particular case. There are however certain incidents of the custom which have been established by decisions. It is well recognised that an illatom affiliation is a creature of agreement. Narayadu v. Venkamma (2). But I do not think that this means that in every case of an illatom affiliation there must be a detailed contract embodying all the incidents of the arrangement in the particular case. Normally, there would be an agreement between the father of the boy, if he was a minor and the prospective father-in-law or, if the prospective son-in-law was a major, between the son-in-law himself and the prospective father-in-law, that the proposed illatom son-in-law should be taken into the family by his prospective father-in-law with a view to his marriage with a daughter of the house and the conferment upon him of the illatom status, with its customary incidents. These customary incidents being well known would not ordinarily be the subject of specific agreement.

It is settled by the Privy Council's decision reported in Krishnamma v. Venkatasubbayya (3) that the practice of illatom affiliation is frequently followed even when the family into which the son-in-law had been taken has a natural born son living. There is also authority in Venkayalapathi v. Negandla (4) for the proposition that, when a boy has been taken into a family on the understanding that he would be married to a daughter and given the status of an illatom son-in-law, the arrangement may be completed by the solemnization of the marriage even after the death of the prospective father-in-law. So far as I am aware, it has never been held that a mere arrangement to take a boy as an illatom son-in-law, followed by living in the prospective father-in-law's household but not followed by marriage to the proposed bride will complete an illatom affiliaton. In the present case it has been found that the plaintiff was taken into the household of Konda Reddi originally with a view to a regular adoption but, after the birth of a son to Konda Reddi he coutinued there under a proposal that he should be married to the daughter and treated as an illatom son-in-law. It has been found that on his death-bed Konda Reddi asked his wife to complete this arrangement by marrying the daughter to the plaintiff giving him a share in the property as an illatom son-in-law. It has also been found that the arrangement was completed and the marriage performed and that the plaintiff did live in his mother-in law's household as an illatom son-in-law. These findings of fact are in my opinion sufficient to warrant a legal inference that the plaintiff was an illatom son-in-law. It is true there is no specific evidence of any actual agreement for an illatom affiliation but the whole of the evidence postulates the assumption that, at the time when the plaintiff was a major, Konda Reddi authorized the completion of an arrangement for illatom affiliation by the marriage of the plaintiff to his daughter. The plaintiff performed his part by marrying the daugher and was thereafter treated as an illatom son-in-law. From these facts it must, I think be inferred that there was an agreement on the basis of which the illatom affiliation was carried out. In this view, therefore, I dismiss the appeal with costs. Leave refused.

Court-fee—Appeal—Appeal arising out of suit under s. 33, U. P. Agriculturists' Relief Act (XXVII of 1934)—Ad valorem court-fee is payable on amount involved therein.

An ad valorem fee should be charged on an appeal in a suit under s. 33, U. P. Agri. Relief Act, on the amount involved therein. 191 Ind. Cas 337 (1), 172 Ind. Cas. 653 (2) and 177 Ind. Cas. 76 (3), referred to.

Where, therefore, in an appeal arising out of a suit brought under s 33, Agri. Relief Act the appellant challenges the amount awarded against him by the trial Court and further claims that he should himself have been awarded a certain amount, he is liable to pay a court-fee on an ad valorem basis on the total amount, that is, the amount decreed against him and the amount claimed by him.

C. Ref. made by the Chief Inspector of Stamps, U. P. Allahabad, dated November 25, 1940.

Messrs. M. M. Lal and R. N. Shukla, for the Applicant.

Mr. H. K. Ghose, for the Crown.

Order. — This is an application under sub-s. (1) of s. 6-B of the Courts Fees Act by the Chief Inspector of Stamps, United Provinces. It arises out of a suit brought under s. 33 of the Agri. Relief Act. In appeal to the Civil Judge of Hardoi the appellants challenged the amount of Rs. 123-1 decreed by the trial Court against them and further claimed that they should themselves have been awarded a sum of Rs. 739-12. They valued their appeal at Rs. 200 plus Rs. 123-1 and paid a total court-fee of Rs. 19-12. The Inspector of Stamps reported that they were liable to pay a court fee of Rs. 86-4 on an ad valorem basis on the total amount of Rs. 862-13, that is Rs. 123-1 decreed against the appellants and Rs. 739-12 claimed by them.

The Civil Judge did not agree with the Inspector and in his order holding that the court-fee paid was sufficient, he referred to the amendment introduced in s. 33 of the Agri. Relief Act by Act IX of 1937. Sub-s. (3) of this section now provides that court-fee payable on a plaint in a suit under sub-s. (1) shall be that prescribed by Sch. VI. The Civil Judge appears to have considered that this provision applied also to appeals, though he did not expressly say so.

The Chief Inspector of Stamps in his application referred to a recent case of the Allahabad High Court, Harendra Shankar v. Khaiali Ram (1940 O W N 1130) (1), in which it was held that a suit under s. 33 of the Agri. Relief Act is a suit for accounts and an appeal against a decree passed in such a suit is governed by s. 7 (iv) (b) of the Court Fees Act. It had previously been held by the same High Court in Anis Begam v. Shyam Sunder Lal (1937 A L J R 1194) (2), that such a suit was not a suit for a declaration, but a suit for an account of money and should be so valued; and in Pahlad Singh v. Niadar Singh (1938 A L J R 708) (3), that an ad valorem fee should be charged on an appeal in a suit under s. 33 on the amount involved therein.

The question for consideration is whether the amendment in s. 33 affects the amount of court-fee payable on appeals against decrees passed under that section.

It is contended that the words 'plaint in a suit' should be liberally construed so as to include a memorandum of appeal. There is, however, no authority which would support this contention, and on the other hand it has been held that in appeals in redemption suits brought under the Agri. Relief Act ad valorem court-fee must be paid and not the fee payable on an application under that section. It has also been held that in s. 296 of the U. P. Ten. Act of 1939 the word 'suit' does not include appeals.

I am of opinion therefore that the application of the Chief Inspector of Stamps must be allowed and that the appellants must be required to pay ad valorem fee on the total amount challenged by them.

I accordingly grant a declaration that the proper court-fee has not been paid in this case and that the deficiency amounts to Rs. 86-4 less the sum of Rs. 19-12 paid, that is Rs. 66-8.

SAW JAMES—RESPONDENT

Divorce Act (Burma) (IV of 1869), ss. 10, 14—Petition must state distinctly facts upon which claim to have marriage dissolved, is founded — Exercise of discretion to excuse delay.

Evidence in divorce proceedings to prove the case of the petitioner must be confined to the pleas set out in the petition. Consequently it is essential, as laid down in s. 10, Burma Divorce Act, to insist that the petition for divorce shall state distinctly, as the nature of the case permits, the facts upon which the claim to have the marriage dissolved is founded.

Before a Court can exercise the discretion to excuse the delay there should be some evidence explaining it, to make clear that there was no connivance or indifference to the adultery.

C. Ref. made by the District Judge, Bassein, in C. R. S. No. 1 of 1940.

Mya Bu, J.—The petitioner filed a petition, under the Burma Divorce Act on February 14, 1940, seeking a dissolution of her marriage with the respondent, upon the ground of adultery coupled with cruelty and desertion without reasonable excuse for over four years. The parties are Karen Christians who are domiciled in Burma. They were married on March 19, 1929 at Kanyinmyaung village, according to Christian rites, by the Baptist Pastor Thra Kya Aung who held a license to perform marriages. They lived in Bassein district for about seven years, after which the respondent left for Rangoon. In the petition it was stated that the respondent committed adultery with one Ma Sein Yin in January 1936, and had two children by her. Ma Sein Yin is now dead. The allegation was taken to mean that the alleged adultery commenced in January 1936 and continued until Ma Sein Yin's death. The evidence given was to the effect that the respondent and Ma Sein Yin lived together as husband and wife until about one year or two years ago when Ma Sein Yin died. The two children of the union are said to be alive. Evidence in divorce proceedings to prove the case of the petition must be confined to the pleas set out in the petition. Consequently, it is essential, as laid down in s. 10, Burma Divorce Act, to insist that the petition for divorce shall state distinctly, as the nature of the case permits, the facts upon which the claim to have the marriage dissolved is founded.

Cruelty is alleged, with no particulars at all, by the mere statement that the respondent cruelly treated the petitioner. It was as well that the charge of cruelty was practically dropped. The only evidence of cruelty was the petitioner's statement that the respondent used to beat her when they were living together in her parent's house The decree granted to the petitioner by the District Court was based upon adultery coupled with desertion without reasonable excuse for a period of two years and upwards. Although the adultery proved went beyond what was strictly necessary acording to the petition, there was evidence which was sufficient to prove that the respondent committed adultery in January 1936 with Ma Sein Yin, taking the letter Ex. A in conjunction with the other evidence. There was also evidence to prove desertion without reasonable excuse for a period of over two years. The Court under s. 14 of the Act, had amongst other things to consider the delay in presenting the petition. That was done, but in coming to the conclusion that there had been unreasonable delay the learned District Judge stated that the petitioner was only an ignorant village woman and she was perhaps hoping that her husband might eventually return to her, especially after his mistress had died. It may have been apparent to the learned Judge that the petitioner was ignorant, but there is no evidence of that or that she was hoping for the return of her husband to her. The petitioner was not questioned to explain the delay in the presentation of her petition.

Before a Court can exercise the discretion to excuse the delay there should be some evidence explaining it, to make clear that there was no connivance or indifference to the adultery. There seems nothing in the evidence given in the case to indicate that the petitioner was hoping for her husband eventually to return to her. If Ma Sein Yin died about two years ago, as stated by the Pastor Thra Kya Aung, there was inordinate delay. But the petitioner mentioned that Ma Sein Yin died "last year" when she gave evidence on May 13, 1940. This matter requires clearing up. In the circumstances, the case must be remanded for additional evidence to be taken, under s. 17, Burma Divorce Act, on the question relating to the delay in the presentation of the petition. The case is remanded accordingly.

D. Case remanded.

BARTLEY AND SEN, JJ.

EMPEROR—
MUJJAFFAR SHEIKH AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED—APPELLANTS

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 297—Charge to jury—Case depending on circumstantial evidence—Duty of Judge pointed out—Charge, held defective—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 34, 149, 302—Common intention—Necessity for—Proof of—Constructive liability under s. 34—S. 149, applicability — Murder — Circumstantial evidence—Practice—Precedents—Text books—Notes in, on a case—Reliability.

In a case in which the guilt of the accused is sought to be established by circumstantial evidence, A theoretical discourse of what is circumstantial evidence couched in language which is unintelligible to a muffasil jury is quite worthless. The Judge should tell the jury that if the circumstances were capable of a reasonable interpretation consistent with the innocence of the accused, then the accused are entitled to be acquitted even if the circumstances raised a strong suspicion against them. He should summarize the circumstances alleged against the accused and ask the jury to decide whether from these circumstances the only reasonable inference to be drawn is the guilt of the accused and should tell them that if that was not the only reasonable inference, they should acquit the accused. [p. 304, col 1.]

The Sessions Judge while concluding the charge said: you should, therefore, consider whether you are prepared to accept the same as showing the guilt of the accused persons:

Held, that these directions in a case depending on circumstantial evidence were quite inadequate. [p. 304, col. 2.]

The Judge summarizes the evidence against each of the accused persons and at the end of each summary he made the following observation: "This is the evidence against the accused. Do you think that he has been falsely implicated?" He used these very words three times at the end of each summary.

Held, that this was wrong method of approach in a criminal case. The issue before the jury was not whether the accused were being falsely implicated but whether the prosecution had proved beyond reasonable doubt that the accused were guilty. A question like this repeated at intervals at the end of the summary of the evidence against each of the accused was very likely to misguide the jury into thinking that unless they were satisfied that the case was false, they should find the accused guilty and amounted to misdirection. [ibid.]

Where in placing the evidence before the jury the Judge does not point out, the inherent improbabilities, inconsistencies and important contradictions in the evidence the charge is defective. [p. 305, col 2.]

It is quite wrong to say that if several persons have a common purpose, each person will be liable for every act done by the other in furtherance of that common purpose. In order to make a person constructively liable with the aid of s 34, I. P. C., for an offence not actually committed by him, it must always be shown that the person so sought to be made liable had the intention requisite for the constitution of that particular offence. Thus to make him constructively liable under s. 34, I. P. C., for murder, it must be proved that he had the intention of committing murder in common with the person or persons who actually committed the murder and who were his companions in the joint criminal act or enterprise. Unless this intention is proved, he cannot be made liable under the aforesaid section even though the murder be committed in order to accomplish some other object or purpose shared in common. [p. 305, col. 1.]

Section 149, I. P. C., cannot come into operation unless there is an unlawful assembly and an unlawful assembly requires the participation of five persons. [p. 305, col. 2.]

The case against two accused rested on circumstantial evidence which was not such as to leave one no alternative but to hold that they were guilty. There was no evidence to show that both of them killed the deceased or that both had the intention to kill him.

Held, that neither could he found guilty of murder. [ibid.]

It is sometimes dangerous to accept as accurate the notes appearing in text-books, It is always safer to refer to the decision itself on which the note is based. [p. 305, col. 1.]

Mr. Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Crown.

Messrs. J. P. Mitter and Bireswar Chatterjee, for the Appellants.

Sen, J.—Panchkari Sheikh and his two sons Mujjaffar Sheikh and Saifer Sheikh were tried for the murder of one Abdul Rashid by the Sessions Judge of Birbhum and a special jury. By a unanimous verdict the jury found Panchkari not guilty and by a majority of five to four, they found Mujjaffar Sheikh and Saifer Sheikh guilty of committing murder. The learned Judge accepting the verdict of the jury, acquitted Panchkari and sentenced Mujjaffar and Saifer to death; he has referred the case to us for confirmation of the sentence. Mujjaffar and Saifer have appealed. The case for the prosecution, briefly is as follows: Panchkari and his two sons Mujjaffar and Saifer were on bad terms with the deceased Abdul Rashid who is the son of Panchkari's sister. About six months before the murder, the three accused were sent up on a charge of theft and Abdul Rashid helped the Police against them. This led to further ill-feeling between the parties. On November 2, 1939, Rashid lodged an information at the thana complaining that the three accused persons and one Nabuat had been threatening him with bodily harm. On January 16, 1940 in the morning there was a salis regarding a dispute between Panchkari and his brother Ekrar, over a wall. At this salis Rashid and his brother attended and there Panchkari said that both the brothers should not be allowed to take part in the salis and threatened them saying that they should be "removed from this world."

On the same day Rashid left the Co-operative Bank at Rampurhat where he works, at about 5-15 P. M. with one Mir Najim Ali. They were returning home after their work. They first went to a cloth shop where Rashid purchased some cloth and thereafter departed—Rashid going home-ward to his village of Binodepur on a bicycle. He was seen by some persons riding towards the village. Now, to go to his village from Rampurhat one must pass a culvert called Hiranbandi culvert. Rashid was last seen at about 5-40 P. M. by one Roshan Ali, P. W. No. 10 riding on his bicycle about a mile from the culvert. On that day at about 6 P. M. certain persons saw a bicycle lying on the embankment near the culvert about 80 cubits away. They also saw the appellants and another man who looked like Panchkari near about this place. Nothing further was seen of Rashid or of his bicycle on that day. On the next morning at about 7 A. M. certain persons walking along the road saw a corpse in a ditch near the culvert and this corpse was that of Rashid. Nearby there was a bicycle and near the bicycle was the blade of a clasp knife. Later on in the ditch the brass handle of this knife was found. The Police were informed, they came on the scene and took charge of the corpse and after investigation sent up the appellants and Panchkari for trial on a charge of murder. The medical evidence shows that death was due to a punctured wound $3\frac{1}{2}'' \times 1''$ on the neck. The wound penetrated deep down to the thyroid cartilage and the carotod artery was cut. There were other injuries on the face, forearm and finger. The case against the appellants rests entirely upon circumstantial evidence. I propose to set forth the main incriminating facts upon which the prosecution depends. They may be stated thus:

(a) There was ill-feeling between the parties and on January 16, 1940, there was a threat by Pachkari that the deceased should be "removed from this world." This threat is spoken to by the brother of the deceased Adul Hamid, P. W. No. 13. Abdul Kader, P. W. No. 18 also speaks to the fact that Panchkari or Saifer spoke in a treatening manner but his evidence does not corroborate that of Abdul Hamid regarding the actual words used. (b) The presence of Mujjaffar and Saifer and a person who looked like Panchkari near about the culvert on January 16, 1940, about 6-15 P. M. This fact is spoken to by Kumarish Let, P. W. No. 2, Gopal Bannerjee, P. W. No. 20, Upendra Muchi, P. W. No. 25 Mokram Hossain, P. W. No. 26 and Kasim Sheikh, P. W. No. 27. The evidence is that Mujjaffar was loitering about near the culvert and the other two persons seemed to be pressing something down in the ditch. One of the witnesses also says that he saw Saifer running away. This is Mokram Hossain, P. W. No. 26. (c) On that day Mujjaffar was late in attending the dispensary where he worked and when he got there he opened an almirah and took out some iodine without the permission of the person in charge. He applied the iodine to some injuries on his person without showing them to anybody there. The medical evidence shows that there were two slight injuries on Mujjaffar: one was a scratch on the right cheek and the other, an abrasion on his right hand. (d) The conduct of Mujjaffar on the day following the murder. On January 17, 1940, certain persons saw the corpse of Rashid in the ditch. Mujjaffar was accompanying some of these persons. They saw the handle of a knife lying near the bicycle. Mujjaffar picked up this handle and threw it into the ditch. When the witnesses asked Mujjaffar why he was doing this, Mujjaffar merely said: "It does not matter." (e) When Abdul Hamid, the brother of the deceased, after hearing that his brother's corpse had been found, was going towards the culvert, Mujjaffar came up to him and tried to dissuade him from going there saying: "I passed by the place. It is all false to say that there has been a murder." (f) The knife found at the place is said to belong to Saifer. This is spoken to by two witnesses, namely Ali Akbar, P. W. No. 17, and Osman, P. W. No. 32. (g) Saifer was seen on the morning after the murder wearing a dhoti with blood-stains in front. This was seen by two persons, namely Kalu, P. W. No. 23, and Abdul Sattar, P. W. No. 24. They say that when Saifer's attention was drawn to this blood-stain he hurriedly went to his house, changed the dhoti and reappeared in a sari. These are the main facts upon which the prosecution depends.

The defence of the accused is that Rashid was carrying on an intrigue with the daughter of a muchi and that someone had killed him in that connection. It was suggested that the witnesses were implicating them because of previous enmity. I shall now deal with the Judge's charge to the jury. In my opinion, the charge is unsatisfactory in several respects. The learned Judge has not given adequate directions to the jury as to how they should deal with a case in which the guilt of the accused is sought to be established by circumstantial evidence. This is what the learned Judge says:

"Circumstantial evidence means the evidence afforded not by the direct testimony of an eye-witness to the fact to be proved, but by the bearing upon that fact of other facts which are relied upon as inconsistent with any result other than truth of the principal fact."

A theoretical discourse like this of what is circumstanctial evidence couched in language which must have been unintelligible to a muffasil jury is in my opinion quite worthless. The learned Judge should have told the jury that if the circumstances were capable of a reasonable interpretation consistent with the innocence of the accused, then the accused were entitled to be acquitted even if the circumstances raised a strong suspicion against them. He should have summarized the circumstances alleged against the accused and asked the jury to decide whether from these circumstances the only reasonable inference to be drawn was the guilt of the accused and should have told them that if that was not the only reasonable inference, they should acquit the accused. Nothing of this kind was done. After giving this definition of circumstantial evidence and after telling the jury that they had to arrive at a decision on circumstantial evidence the learned Judge concludes thus:

"You should therefore consider whether you are prepared to accept the same as showing the guilt of the accused persons"

These directions in a case depending on circumstantial evidence are in my opinion quite inadequate. The next defect in the charge is this: The learned Judge summarizes the evidence against each of the accused persons and at the end of each summary he makes the following observation: "This is the evidence against the accused. Do you think that he has been falsely implicated?"

He uses these very words three times at the end of each summary. This is wrong method of approach in a criminal case. The issue before the jury was not whether the accused were being falsely implicated but whether the prosecution had proved beyond reasonable doubt that the accused were guilty. A question like this repeated at intervals at the end of the summary of the evidence against each of the accused is very likely to misguide the jury into thinking that unless they were satisfied that the case was false, they should find the accused guilty. The wholesome principle that where jury is in doubt as to whether the case is false or true, they should give the accused the benefit of that doubt, seems to have been lost sight of by the learned Judge when he put this wrong issue before the jury. Again the learned Judge was wrong in his treatment of the application of s. 34, I. P. C., to this case. This is what he says:

"I shall explain to you what s. 34, I. P. C., means. Under this section where parties go with a common purpose to execute a common object, each and every one becomes responsible for the acts of each and every other in execution and furtherance of their common purpose. As the purpose is common so must be the responsibility."

Now this is not a proper explanation of the provisions of s. 34, I. P. C. This passage in the learned Judge's charge is a verbatim reproduction of a passage to be found in the notes under s 34. I. P. C., in Ratanlal's Law of Crimes, Edn., 11, p. 61. The author in making this comment refers to the case in Ganesh Singh v. Ram Rajah (1) at p. 45. I have consulted the case and I find that the learned author has quoted a passage from the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council at pp. 45 and 46*. Now this case has nothing whatsoever to do with s. 34, I. P. C. It was not a criminal case at all. Their Lordships were dealing with a suit for damages instituted against several persons who were alleged to have plundered the property of the plaintiff at the time of the mutiny. They said that each of the plunderers was liable to pay damages and that damages should not be apportioned, inasmuch as each of the plunderers had the common purpose of plunder.

(1) 3 Beng. L R 44 (45); 12 W R 38 (P C).

Their Lordships went on to say that the position would be different if it were a criminal case. It is sometimes dangerous to accept as accurate notes appearing in text-books. It is always safer to refer to the decision itself on which the note is based. The note relied upon by the learned Judge and incorporated by him in his charge is entirely misleading and inaccurate and I have no doubt that the jury were misled by this direction of the learned Judge. In my opinion, it is quite wrong to say that if several persons have a common purpose, each person will be liable for every act done by the other in furtherance of that common purpose. For instance, three persons may have the common purpose of robbing a bank; one of these persons, unknown to the others, arms himself with a pistol and shoots one of the bank's assistants who resisted him. The others will certainly not be liable for murder unless it is proved that all of them had the common intention that anyone who resisted them would be shot. In the present case s. 34, I. P. C., would not apply, unless it could be established that Mujjaffar and Saifer had the common intention of murdering Rashid. The learned Judge should have made this clear to the jury. In fact he should have told the jury that unless it could be proved beyond all reasonable doubt that Mujjaffar and Saifer both had the common intention of killing Rashid, neither could be found guilty of murder, as there is no evidence to show who actually struck the deceased. This is the fundamental weakness in the case for the prosecution and the learned Judge seems to have overlooked it.

In order to make a person constructively liable with the aid of s. 34, I. P. C., for an offence not actually committed by him, it must always be shown that the person so sought to be made liable had the intention requisite for the constitution of that particular offence. Thus to make him constructively liable under s. 34, I. P. C., for murder, it must be proved that he had the intention of committing murder in common with the person or persons who actually committed the murder and who were his companions in the joint criminal act or enterprise. Unless this intention is proved, he cannot be made liable under the aforesaid section even though the murder be committed in order to accomplish some other object or purpose shared in common. Under s. 149 I. P. C., the position would be different. That section runs thus:

"If an offence is committed by any member of an unlawful assembly in prosecution of the common object of that assembly, or such as the members of that assembly knew to be likely to be committed in prosecution of that object, every person who, at the time of the committing of that offence, is a member of the same assembly, is guilty of that offence."

Section 34, I. P. C., deals with quite another set of circumstances. That section runs thus:

"When a criminal act is done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

The provisions of s. 149 of the Code, cannot be availed of in this case, inasmuch as the number of the persons involved was less than five. Section 149 cannot come into opertion unless there is an unlawful assembly and an unlawful assembly requires the participation of five persons. Another defect in the learned Judge's charge to the jury is that in placing the evidence before them he does not point out, as he should have done, the inherent improbabilities, inconsistencies and important contradictions in the evidence. (After discussing evidence regarding the threats used by the accused against the deceased, his Lordship concluded that the circumstantial evidence in the case was not such as to leave one no alternative but to hold that the appellants are guilty and proceeded). Again the circumstances do not establish which person struck the blow. As I have pointed out before, there is great difficulty in the way of the prosecution invoking the aid of s. 34, I. P. C., in this case, as it has not been established either by direct or circumstantial evidence that both the appellants intended to kill Rashid. Even if one were to take a view unduly favourable to the prosecution in this case, the most that one could say was that one or other of the accused must have killed Rashid. There is no evidence to show that both of them killed him or that both had the intention to kill him. That being so, obviously neither can be found guilty of the murder. We therefore set aside the order of conviction and sentence. In the circumstances of this case we do not think any useful purpose will be served in ordering a retrial. We accordingly acquit the appellants and direct that they be set at liberty forthwith. The appeal is allowed and the reference is rejected.

Bartley, J.—I agree.

NAGPUR HIGH COURT

First Appeal No. 99-B of 1935
July 16, 1940
STONE, C. J. AND BOSE, J.
UMAR HAJI KARIM—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT No. 15
BADRIDAS RAMRAI AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 49—Unregistered sale deed—If can be used to explain nature of possession taken under it — Adverse possession — Mortgage —Property burdened with simple mortgage—Stranger entering into adverse possession — His adverse possession against mortgagee, when commences —Stranger entering subsequent to mortgage — Foreclosure suit without joining trespasser as party—Rights of trespasser and mortgagee — Procedure to be followed—Suit on mortgage—Lessee and trespasser, if necessary parties.

Though an unregistered deed of sale is ineffective to pass title, it can be used to explain the nature of the possession taken under it. It may operate as starting point for adverse possession of vendee, if he has set up independent title in himself. 53 Ind. Cas. 901 (1), relied on. [p. 308, col. 1.]

If a stranger enters into adverse possession of property burdened with a simple mortgage, then he only prescribes for the interest of the person entitled to immediate possession, that is to say, of the mortgagor. All that the mortgagor has is the right to redeem. Therefore all that the stranger gets is the right to redeem. He does not get a full title to the property, and as for the mortgagee, his right to possession does not accrue until he has obtained his decree for foreclosure, or in the case of sale, until he has purchased (if he happens to be the purchaser); therefore, adverse possession as against him does not commence until that date. 31 Ind. Cas. 412 (2), 24 Ind. Cas. 997 (3), 37 Ind. Cas. 277 (4) and Pugh v. Heath (5), relied on. [ibid.]

The mortgagee is not affected by anything done behind his back after his mortgage; therefore he is entitled to foreclose his mortgagor, (or bring the property to sale), without joining subsequent purchasers of the right to redeem, (or those in a lesser position such as trespassers whose title had not yet ripened), and by so doing he acquires substantial rights. On the other hand the purchaser of the mortgagor's rights, or the trespasser who has, or is on the way to ousting him and acquiring his rights, is also not without rights: and he is clearly not affected by a litigation to which he was not a party. The only way to do justice between these two conflicting rights is to adjust the equities They are best adjusted by affording the purchaser, or the trespasser, (as the case may be), an opportunity to redeem that portion of the property in which he is interested on paying a proportionate part of the mortgage money. 170 Ind. Cas. 856 (7), relied on. [p 309, col. 2.]

Though the lessee, or the trespasser, (or even the transferee), may be proper parties if their interests accrue subsequent to the mortgage, they are not necessary parties to a suit on mortgage. [p 310, col. 2.]

F. A. from the decree of the Court of the Sub-Judge, First Class, Akola, dated November 9, 1935.

Mr. A. V. Khare with Mr. W. B. Pendharkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Ahmad, for Respondents Nos. 3, 5 and 7.

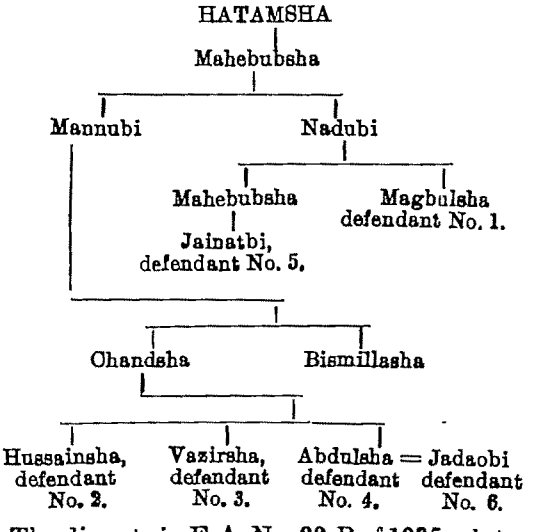
Judgment.—This judgment will govern F. A. No. 99-B of 1935 as well as F. A. No. 8 of 1936. They both arise out of the same judgment. We will deal with F. A. No. 99-B of 1935 first.

The facts were placed before us in a somewhat confused state but once they are disentangled the questions which remain are not difficult.

The property in dispute consists of a number of different plots which have been shown in a map prepared by the Commissioner appointed for that purpose in the lower Court. It originally belonged to one Hatamsha and from him descended to the defendants, (except the fifth and sixth), as shown in the following tree. The first defendant got an undivided 8 annas and defendants Nos. 2, 3 and 6 an undivided 2 annas 8 pies each. There has been no partition by metes and bounds but the parties being Mubammadans succeeded to separate and distinct shares.



The dispute in F. A. No. 99-B of 1935 relates to plots Nos. 2 and 3. We take the numbers from the Commissioner's map. We will recite the facts relating to plot No. 3 first.

On July 2, 1913, the first defendant leased his undivided interest in plot No. 3 to the 15th defendant (who is the appellant in this appeal) by a document Ex. 15. D-1. Exhibit P-10 is a copy of the same document. It will be convenient however to refer throughout to Ex. 15. D-1.

But though an undivided half interest was leased the 15th defendant was placed in possession of the whole plot and it appears that he had been allowed to construct a substantial structure on this plot at some time anterior to the lease. Who had allowed him to do this has not been disclosed, but the lease deed refers to this fact and acknowledges that the superstructure on the plot belongs to the 15th defendant, and further states that even after the termination of the lease the lessee is not to be deprived of possession, unless the superstructure is paid for by the lessor.

The recitals so far as they are relevant are as follows :

" Hussainsha Fakir and myself own a land measuring 30 × 30 feet" (this is plot No. 3) "I am entitled to half of the aforesaid land as owner. I have given to you on rent my own half share in the aforesaid land for a period of six yeers...The land is bounded as under...Half the land of the land within the aforesaid boundary limits has as stated above been given to you on rent for six years...

P. S.—The superstructure constructed on the aforesaid land does not belong to us. It is constructed by you.It is owned by you. If after the expiry of the aforesaid period of 6 years I went to take back my land I will pay you the price that the Panchas may fix of your superstructure on the land and then will take possession of the land. I will recover from you Rs. 16 by way of the rent of the land per year until I pay you the amount fixed by the Panchas on account of the superstructure."

It is to be observed that though the deed speaks of "half the land within the aforesaid boundaries" it means an undivided half and not a demarcated half. As a matter of fact we understand that the superstructure covers the whole of this plot.

It is also to be observed that though the deed speaks of the lessor having a half share in this plot that is not strictly accurate. What he had was an undivided half share in the whole of the property which consists of a number of plots and only an expectation of having this plot, or a half of it, assigned to his share at a partition. It will be necessary to take this into consideration when the property is divided at the partition.

Two years after this lease, namely on November 3, 1915, the first defendant mortgaged his undivided 8 annas interest in the whole estate to the plaintiff. Then after this, on May 30, 1917, he sold his undivided half interest in plot No. 3 to the 15th defendant by an unregistered deed of sale, Ex. 15.D-2(A).

Several years later the third defendant mortgaged his undivided 2 annas 8 pies share in the whole estate to the plaintiff by two mortgage deeds, Ex. P.31 dated October 2, 1923 and Ex. P. 32, dated March 11, 1926.

In the year 1927 the plaintiff sued on his mortgages, obtained final decrees for foreclosure and eventually obtained joint possession, (the property was still undivided), on December 21, 1930, in the one case, and on September 1, 1930 in the other. The first and third defendants thus lost their respective intertsts in the estate and the plaintiff stepped into their shoes and became a co-owner to the extent of an undivided 10 annas 8 pies along with the second and sixth defendants. The 15th defendant was not joined in the mortgage suits and consequently, is not bound by them. His interests are not affected by the decrees in any way.

After this, on May 1, 1931, the 6th defendant sold her undivided 2 annas 8 pies interest in plot No. 3 to the 15th defendant by a registered sale deed, Ex. 15. D-2. The recitals state.

"I have this day sold to you the undermentioned immovable property "(plot No. 3)" acquired by me under a deed of Mehar executed and registered in my favour by my husband on September 20, 1928... The entire land of the half joint share in the land within the aforesaid boundary limits...is sold. The entire land within the aforesaid boundary limits is in your possession as a tenant for the last many years. On that entire land there is a pucca superstructure of tin roofing belonging to you I having no concern with the said superstructure only owned the land of the half share. My husband had, as owner, given you on rent the aforesaid land and had delivered possession thereof to you In the meanwhile the ownership of the said land was transferred to me under the deed of Meher... '

It is necessary at this stage to explain the positions of the 4th and 5th defendants.

The 5th defendant is a daughter of Mahebubsha, the brother of the 1st defendant. Mahebubsha died before the succession opened out and so the first defendant obtained the entire 8 annas which fell to the share of that branch of the family. The 5th defendant got nothing.

So far as the 4th defendant is concerned. He inherited a 2 annas 8 pies share, but out of this he transferred an undivided 2 annas 8 pies interest in plot No. 3 to his wife, the 6th defendant, in lieu of Meher on September 20, 1923, as Ex. 15. D-2 recites. Thus she became the owner of that share in plot No. 3 to the exclusion of her husband.

The present suit is equal to the plaintiff's mortgage suits. Having obtained an undivided 10 annas 8 pies interest in the whole estate, and having been placed in joint possession thereof, the plaintiff now sues for partition and asks to be placed in undivided possession of such property as may be assigned to his share.

But before this can be done it is necessary to decide the dispute which arises in connection with this plot (No. 3), because it will be necessary to direct the partitioning officer to assign this plot, so far as that is possible and convenient, to the shares of the first and fourth defendants. It will also be necessary to decide, as between the plaintiff and 15th defendant, what the plaintiff is entitled to receive.

The first problem in the case arises out of the unregistered sale deed dated May 30, 1917. As a deed of sale it was ineffective to pass title. But the 15th defendant pleaded that it was good enough to operate as a starting point for adverse possession. Their Lordships of the Privy Council decided in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (1), that though an unregisiered deed of this kind is ineffective to pass title, it can be used to explain the nature of the possession taken under it. It is quite clear from the document that from the date of its execution the 15th defendant set up an independent title in himself and thus held adversely to the 1st defendant from that day. He has continued to hold in that character down to the present day which is more than 12 years from that date. Therefore as against the 1st defendant the 15th defendant forfeited his title on May 30, 1929.

But this does not affect the plaintiff martgagee. It is well-settled that if a stranger enters into adverse possession of property burdened with a simple mortgage, then he only prescribes for the interest of the person entitled to immediate possession, that is to say, of the mortgagor. All that the mortgagor has is the right to redeem. Therefore all that the stranger gets is the right to redeem. He does not get a full title to the property, and as for the mortgagee, his right to possession does not accrue until he has obtained his decree for foreclosure, or in the case of a sale, until he has purchased, (if he happens to be the purchaser); therefore, adverse possession as against him does not commence until that date. This was decided in Vyapuri v. Sonamma Boi Ammani (2), Raj Nath v. Narain das (3) and Priya Sakhi Debi v. Manbodh Bibi (4). It is also the English Law. See Pugh v. Heath (5).

(5) (1882) 7 A C 235; 51 L J Q B 367; 46 L T 321; 30 W R 553.

But this does not solve the whole problem. All the cases cited above, except the Madras Full Bench, (including the House of Lords case from England) were cases in which the trespasser was joined as a party to the suit on the mortgage, and the question of his adverse possession was considered from that angle. In that class of case there is not much real difficulty.

The principle that the possession of a trespasser who enters into possession after the date of the mortgage is not adverse to the mortgagee, and that therefore the mortgagee's rights are not affected, can readily be accepted. Therefore, so long as the mortgagee sues upon his mortgage to enforce his rights as mortgagee within limitation, it is clear that he can enforce these rights. But if he does not join the trespasser to his mortgage suit and sues later for possession upon his title, the position is not as clear.

When there is a mortgage the original rights to the proyerty are split up between the mortgagor and the mortgagee, some residing in one and the rest in the other. When the mortgagee eventually forecloses, (or buys in a case of sale), the two rights coalesce. But if the mortgagor no longer has that portion of the rights which reside in him at the date of the mortgagee's suit it is by no means clear that the mortgagee can obtain them by foreclosing the mortgagor, (or bringing the mortgaged property to sale), and omitting from the action the person in whom these rights really reside. It is immaterial for this purpose whether the stranger has acquired the mortgagor's rights by purchase or by adverse possession.

We can quite see that the mortgagee could sue again upon his mortgage and foreclose (or sell) as against the stranger, but if he does not do this, or if at the date of his suit for possession such an action would be barred, then the position is by no means clear.

It is even more difficult when, as here, the trespasser's title to the mortgagor's rights happens to have been perfected during the pendency of the mortgagee's suit upon the mortgage against the mortgagor.

The division between the interests which the mortgagor and mortgagee respectively have in the property mortgaged is not the same in India and in England, but bearing those differences in mind, the observations of Lord Selbourne in Heath v. Pugh (6), (which was later confirmed by the House of Lords in Pugh v. Heath (5),) bring out the point we are now considering.

(6) (1881) 6 Q B D 345.

"This being the position of the title, as long as the mortgage is redeemable, the effect of an order for foreclosure absolute is to vest the ownership of, and the beneficial title to, the land for the first time in the person who previously was a mere incumbrance. The equitable estate of the mortgagor is then forfeited and transferred to the mortgagee. It is transferred as effectually as if it had been conveyed or released.....There can be no two things said Lord Manners in.....more distinct or opposite than the possession as mortgagor and the possession as owner of the estate."

If these observations reflect the true position then it is difficult to see how the position of the mortgagee after foreclosure of the mortgagor, (or purchase), is better or worse than that of a person who buys property outright from another. If the vendor has lost all right, title and interest at the date of the sale, the vendee gets nothing. If there is a trespasser on the land at the time the vendee gets the vendor's rights to eject him. But he must bring his action within 12 years of the dispossession, because the adverse possession which had commenced against the vendor will run against the vendee as well. That is one point of view.

The other way of looking at the matter is this. The trespasser only prescribes for the limited estate of the mortgagor when the property is burdened with a simple mortgage. Therefore even though a suit on the mortgage may be barred as a suit on the mortgage against the stranger, all that the trespasser has acquired is a right to redeem. It is therefore inequitable to allow him to set up a higher right, namely the right to retain the property unconditionally, against the person in whom the larger title resides.

This difficulty was not considered by the Madras Full Bench in Vyapuri v Sonamma Boi Ammani (2). The sequence of events given in the report of that case is as follows; 1878 mortgage. 1890 trespasser enters upon the land. 1900 suit on the mortgage; trespasser not joined. November 1900 decree for sale. October 1906 mortgagee's successor (his widow) purchases. 1910 suit for possession against the trespasser.

It will be seen that the position there was exactly the same as here. When the mortgagee sued on his mortgage the trespasser had not perfected his title, but he had had more than 12 years' adverse possession before the mortgagee obtained his decree for sale. Unfortunately the only question referred for the consideration of the Full Bench was this:

"Whether the possession of a trespasser who has dispossessed a mortgagor, the mortgage being simple, is advers to the simple mortgage."

The question was answered in the negative, and with that answer we fully agree. But what then? Was the mortgagee allowed to eject the trespasser? Or were the equities adjusted by giving the defendant an opportunity to redeem? And if so, to redeem what? The whole of the mortgaged property which might compromise, as here, many properties, or just the one item of property of which he had been in adverse possession by paying a proportionate part of the mortgage debt? None of these problems was discussed in that ruling nor does the report furnish us with the sequal.

We think the true position has been explained by Ramesam, J. in Sambasiva Ayyar v. Subramania Pillai (7): namely, that it is the kind of case in which the equities have to be worked out. The mortgagee is not affected by anything done behind his back after his mortgage; therefore, he is entitled to foreclose his mortgagor, (or bring the property to sale), without joining subsequent purchasers of the right to redeem, (or those in a lesser position such as trespassers whose title had not yet ripened). And by so doing he acquires substantial rights. This is also the view of Lord Selbourne, (whose judgment was later upheld by the House of Lords), in the English case which we have cited above, though there the subsequent purchaser was as a matter of fact joined to the action on the mortgage. But the learned Lord Chancellor enunciates the principle that the mortgagee is not affected by his mortgagor's actions, (or absence of action), subsequent to the mortgage.

On the other hand the purchaser of the mortgagor's rights, or the trespasser who has, or is on the way to ousting him and acquiring his rights, is also not without rights: and he is clearly not affected by a litigation to which he was not a party. The only way to do justice between these two conflicting rights is to adjust the equities We think that they are best adjusted by affording the purchaser, or the trespasser, (as the case may be), an opportunity to redeem that portion of the property in which he is interested on paying a proportionate part of the mortgage money.

(7) 59 M 312 (334); 170 Ind. Cas. 856; A I R 1936 Mad. 70; 44 L W 887; 10 R M 235.

Another question was also raised and was more fully argued in the other appeal (F. A. No 8 of 1936), but it will be convenient to to deal with it here. It was contended, that a mortgage is one and indivisible and consequently if a person interested in the equity of redemption is omitted from a suit on the mortgage the mortgagee obtains no title as against him and loses his cause of action on the mortgage for ever. It was argued that every person interested in the equity of redemption must be joined and that this includes subsequent purchasers of the mortgagor's rights, lessees, tenants, trespassers, and so forth. The following rulings relied on: Ramnath v. Hazari (8), Sheoram v. Jamnabai (9), Jagatchandra Deo v. Abdul Rashid (10), Umesh Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (11) and Niharmala Debee v. Sarojebandhu Bhuttacharjya (12).

We need not go into this question here because it is possible to decide this matter on another ground. All we say now is that if that is really the law, then it will raise many practical difficulties and will seriously disturb the existing practice in this Province. It will mean that whenever a mortgagee sues a malguzar, or other landlord of a village with tenants in it, then he will be obliged to join every tenant of the village, and every holder of every trumpery interest in it; and in large villages that may well run the defendants up to several hundreds.

We also observe that it is possible that there is a difference between the words "interest in .... the property mortgaged or the right to redeem" used in s. 91 of the T. P. Act, and the words "right to enjoy" which occur in s. 105. If the "right to enjoy" specified in s. 105 is different from the "interest" mentioned in s. 91, then the lessee who has only "a right to enjoy", and not an "interest", would not appear to be entitled to redeem. But the matter is debatable and we say no more about it.

The ground on which we proceed is this, namely that though the lessee, or the trespasser, (or even the transferee), may be proper parties if their interests accrue subsequent to the mortgage, they are not necessary parties. If the principle which we have enumerated above that the mortgagee cannot be affected by anything which is done behind his back and after his mortgage is correct, then he is entitled, if he so desires, to ignore these interests and proceed against his mortgagor on his contract. Having foreclosed his mortgagor, or purchased his interests at the auction in accordance with his contract, then he obtains all the interests which his mortgagor has in the estate at the date of the mortgage, subject however to subsequent equities. Those equities entitle him either to sue again upon his mortgage, if such a suit is still within time, or to sue upon his title, provided he affords the holder of the subsequent interest an opportunity to redeem such interest upon payment of a proportionate part of the mortgage amount.

We have now to determine the extent of the mortgaged property in which the 15th defendant is interested. In our opinion, it includes only the site of plot No. 3 and does not include the superstructure which stands on it. In this particular case we do not think that the superstructure can be said to form an accretion to the mortgaged estate.

The plot, or rather, the 1st defendant's half share it, was leased to the 15th defendant before the mortgage. The superstructure was then standing on it, and a condition of the lease was that the lessee was not to be evicted without the lessor paying for this building. The mortgagee was bound by these conditions when he later took his mortgage.

Of course the lease has now merged in the higher rights which the 15th defendant has acquired by his adverse possession. But we are not here dealing solely with legal rights. We are endeavouring to adjust the equities and in doing that we think that the fact that the superstructure was constructed by the 15th defendant under the conditions mentioned above is a relevant consideration.

As regards the other 2 annas 8 pies share in plot No. 3 which the 15th defendant claims, he obtained it by a registered sale deed from the 6th defendant. This defendant is not the plaintiff's mortgagor, and the plaintiff has not stepped into her shoes, or those of her husband the 4th defendant. The 15th defendant has consequently a clear title to an undivided 2 annas 8 pies share in this plot.

This leaves us with a complicated situation. We think that the fairest method of working out the equities will be to assign an undivided half share in the plot to the share of the plaintiff's mortgagor the 1st defendant (into whose shoes the plaintiff has now stepped), and an undivided 2 annas 8 pies share to the share of the 6th defendant (who stands in the shoes of her husband the 4th defendant). As regards the remaining 5 annas 4 pies share that will be turned into cash and the money will be thrown into hotchpot.

The 15th defendant will be allowed to reedem within 6 months an undivided 8 annas share in the plot (site only) on paying to the plaintiff a proportionate share of the mortgage amount, the proportion to be calculated on the basis of the site without its superstructure.

The 15th defendant will also buy out the remaining undivided 5 annas 4 pies share (site only) by paying into Court, within 6 months, its market value at the date of the suit. This money will be thrown into hotchpot and will be treated as a cash asset available for distribution at the partition.

On failure of the 15th defendant to redeem as above and to pay for the 5 annas 4 pies share, or either, the property, including the superstructure, will be put to auction, and the proceeds will be distributed over the site and the superstructure by the lower Court. Such sum as the lower Court apportions to the superstructure will be handed over to the 15th defendant, and such sum as represents the site will be thrown into hotchpot.

We now turn to plot No. 2. There is no real dispute about this. The 15th defendant pleaded that he was a lessee of this plot under an oral lease granted before the mortgage by the first four defendants. His original statement dated July 26, 1933 is a little confused and the plaintiff appears to have read an assertion of adverse possession into it, and the issue has been framed accordingly. But we do not think that was meant. The allegation of adverse possession related to plot No. 3* and not to plot No. 2. In any case the matter was cleared up in the 15th defendant's statement of August 10, 1933 where he stated that he was prepared to pay the rent to the plaintiff if this field was allotted to the share of his mortgagors. The only contention the plaintiff raised in respect of this plot was that defendant was a lessee and not an owner. The parties are therefore not really at issue on this point. It is accepted that an oral lease would be good.

It is possible that disputes will arise hereafter when and if the plaintiff endeavours to determine the lease. But all that is premature now. Both sides agreed before us that these matters may be left open, that is to say, they accept the position that the 15th defendant is a lessee and that he will attorn to whoever gets this plot at the partition, and that he will be bound by the terms of the lease (what-ever they were) as also will his new landlord. It is however necessary to state that the 15th defendant claims the superstructure on this plot as his own. The lower Court finds that this is so and there has been no appeal by the plaintiff against that finding. It will therefore have to be accepted that the superstructure is the 15th defendant's but the other questions relating to this are left open. That is to say, we do not decide whether the 15th defendant will have to remove the superstructure on the determination of the lease or whether the plaintiff will have to pay him its price as a condition precedent to eviction.

The decree will accordingly contain a declaration to the effect that the 15th defendant is a lessee of plot No. 2 and that he will continue to hold on the old conditions, (conditions which are not determined in this suit), after partition, and that he will have to attorn to whichever person receives this plot at the partition.

This concludes F. A. No. 99-B of 1935. The success and failure in it are about equal. As regards plot No. 2, there was never any real dispute. As regards plot No. 3 each side claimed the plot as his own. In the result neither gets it without being compelled to recognise the rights of the other. We consider therefore that each side should bear his own costs vis-a-vis each other both here and in the lower Court.

We turn now to F. A. No. 8 of 1936. The 16th defendant is the appellant and he is interested in plot No. 1.

The position here is a curious one. The plaintiff impleaded this defendant on the ground that he was in possession of plot No. 1 as a lessee from the 1st and 2nd defendants, (para. 17 of the plaint), and that he (the plaintiff) did not want to be obstructed in his enjoyment of whatever property might be assigned to his share.

The 16th defendant thereupon set up a title in himself adverse to that of the plaintiff. He said that he had been sold this plot by the 1st defendant about 40 years before the suit, that is to say, long before the mortgages under which the plaintiff claims title. The sale is said to have been an oral one. It is admitted that in these days an oral sale was effective to pass title in Berar because the T. P. Act had not then been introduced there.

The plaintiff denied this sale, and the lower Court upheld his contention and found that the sale was not proved. That leaves us with the position that this defendant was, on the plaintiff's allegation, a lessee. As such he was not a necessary party to the suit and should have been discharged; in fact that is what he asked for at one stage. But since then he has taken up the attitude, and has maintained it before us, that the plaintiff could get no title whatever to the property as against him because he was not joined as a party to the plaintiff's mortgage suits. We have already dealt with this argument in the other appeal and do not think it is well-founded. We have no doubt that the plaintiff obtained a good title. All that has happened, or rather that will happen if this plot is assigned to the share of the plaintiff, is that there will be a change of landlords.

In view of the fact that the matter has been fought out up to this stage, we think that instead of discharging this defendant and thus allowing him to raise all these pleas over again it will be more satisfactory all round to embody a declaration about this plot in the decree as in the other case. The declaration will state that the 16th defendant is a lessee of plot No. 1 holding from the 1st and 2nd defendants on the old terms, (terms which are not decided in this suit), and that he will have to attorn to whichever party obtains plot No. 1 when the property is divided. This is virtually what the lower Court had done. This appeal therefore fails and is dismissed with costs.

RAMAN MAL—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT

Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act (VII of 1934), s. 35—House let out—Onus lies on judgment-debtor to prove length of occupation—Words 'for a period .....more'—Construction—Interpretation of Statutes—Punctuations.

The house of an agriculturist judgment-debtor is exempt under s. 35 unless it has been let out on rent for a period of a year or more. The mere negative form of s. 35 would not, shift the onus from the judgment-debtor. Even if it did do so, still once it is proved that the property had been let on rent, the period for which it had been rented being a matter specifically within the knowledge of the judgment-debtor, the onus would lie on him to show the length of the period.

The words "for a period of a year or more" in s. 35 only qualify the words "left vacant."

A statute must be interpreted without regard to punctuation.

L. P. A. from the judgment of Skemp, J., in Exn. S. A. No. 127 of 1939, dated April 14, 1939.

Mr. F. C. Mittal for Mr. Achhru Ram for the Appellant.

Mr. Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

Dalip Singh, J. — In this appeal one Raman Mal obtained a decree against Bhola Singh and in execution attached three properties, but we are only concerned in this case with one of them, namely, a double-storeyed house with a shop. The judgment-debtor pleaded that he was an agriculturist. The trial Court held that the judgment-debtor was an agriculturist, but that the shop had been let out to one Abdul Majid on rent and, therefore, under s. 35, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, the shop was not exempt from attachment in the decree of Raman Mal. It released the rest of the house. On appeal, the learned District Judge held that Abdul Majid was probably paying for the shop, but he had only occupied the shop for a very short period, largely, it appears, because Abdul Majid stated that he had left the shop about a month before the date on which he gave evidence in the lower Court. I do not see how the fact that Abdul Majid had left the shop on the date on which he gave evidence could throw any light on the length of his previous occupation of the shop. However, the learned District Judge considered that this brought the shop within the exemption of s. 60, Civil P. C., read with s. 35, Punjab Relief of Indebtedness Act, accepted the appeal of Bhola Singh and released the shop from attachment.

On appeal to this Court the learned Judge in Single Bench held, firstly, that the onus of proving the length of the occupation lay on the judgment debtor because the proviso to s. 60 created an exception to the general proposition that the property of a judgment-debtor was liable to satisfy decrees obtained against the judgment-debtor. He considered that it was false that Abdul Majid had only held the shop for a period of eight or nine days. He, therefore, considered that the judgment-debtor on whom the onus lay had failed to prove that the occupation of Abdul Majid as tenant was only for a short period. Further, he considered that the words "for a period of a year or more" qualified only the words "left vacant" and did not qualify the words let out on rent or lent to others." He referred to the commentary of Sir Chhotu Ram and pointed out that punctuation was no part of the statute, and should not be regarded in the interpretation of a statute. He referred to the commentary of Dr. Shuja-ud-Din in which the learned commentator appears to think that the words "for a period of a year or more" only qualify "left vacant." He further considered that on principle there was a reason why the words "for a period of a year or more" should qualify 'left vacant", as vacancy might arise owing to accident though the house was being used for agriculture, whereas if a house was let for rent or lent to others, the agriculturist by his own act has shown that the building or the house was not necessary for the purpose of agriculture and hence on principle was not exempt.

It appears to me that the learned Judge was right in both of his conclusions. It seems amply proved on the record that Abdul Majid did occupy the shop and paid rent for it. It is difficult to believe that he only took it for eight or nine days, and it appears to me, therefore, that the length of the occupation was not proved by the judgment-debtor and that the onus did lie on the judgment-debtor—and I see no reasons why the onus should not lie on the judgment-debtor—to prove the exemption which he claimed. The learned Counsel for the appellant contends that as the words read "not let out on rent" and this is a negative proposition, therefore, the onus lies on the decree-holder to prove that the property has been let out on rent for a year or more. I do not agree. As pointed out by the learned Judge in Single Bench, the matter is generally within the special knowledge of the judgment-debtor. The section originally stood "belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him." It is clear that the onus of showing occupation was on the agriculturist judgment-debtor. In Sir Chhotu Ram's own commentary, it is pointed out that the change was introduced in order to do away with the discussion that arose as to the nature of the occupation. It is now clear that whatever the nature of the occupation, the house is exempt unless it has been let out on rent for a period of a year or more. The mere negative form of the section would not, in my opinion, shift the onus from the judgment-debtor. Even if this negative form did do so, still once it was proved that the property had been let on rent, it would appear to me that the period for which it had been rented being a matter specifically within the knowledge of the judgment-debtor, the onus would lie on him to show the length of the period.

As regards the second question whether the words "for a period of a year or more" only qualify the words "left vacant" or qualify the words "not let out on rent or lent to others", with great deference to the learned commentator. Sir Chhotu Ram, it seems to me that in strict grammar if the words qualify all the three, there should have been a comma after "left vacant." The absence of a comma would rather suggest that the words "for a period of a year or more" only qualify the words "left vacant". We are, however, not called upon to decide on this question as it seems to me that it is clear law that a statute must be interpreted without regard to punctuation. Nothing has been stated by the learned Counsel for the appellant to repel the reasoning of the learned Judge in Single Bench on the principle of the matter, I, therefore, consider that the decision of the learned Judge in Single Bench was correct, and I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree.

ARASAPPAPPILLAIPATTI CO-OPERTIVE SOCIETY BY SECRETARY, A. MANGAYANA PILLAI —RESPONDENT

Trusts Act (II of 1882), ss. 88, 90, 94—Person applying for issue of pattah depositing amount for survey stones and trees and dying—His widow making fresh application and obtaining pattah—Land attached by husband's decree-holder—Ss. 88, 90 and 94, if apply—Ss. 88 and 90, how far exhaustive.

A person applied to the Govt for issuing a pattah and deposited certain amount for the value of survey stones and of the trees growing on the land but before the grant could be made he died. His widow made a fresh application for the same purpose and a pattah was issued to her The husband's decree-holder attached this land on the ground that it was liable to be sold in execution of his decree:

Held, that the widow could not be said to have acquired the property for the benefit of her husband's estate. The widow could not be said to be a person holding any fiduciary character and of such a nature as to be bound to protect the interests of the creditor of her deceased husband and s. 88, Trusts Act did not apply. Nor did s. 90 apply as a Hindu widow could neither be described to be a tenant for life nor qualified owner in the sense in which these expressions have been used in that section. Moreover the expression "persons interested" did not cover the creditors of the widow's deceased husband:

Held, further that since the widow could not be held to have owed any duty to the creditor of her husband or to be holding the property for his benefit, the provisions of s. 94 of the Act were not applicable [p 316, col 2.]

The terms of ss. 88 and 90, Trusts Act are not exhaustive only in the sense that if a person cannot be brought within these sections, and held liable as a trustee, he must be found to fall under the residuary section i. e., s. 94. In other words where no trust has been declared, a person would not be accountable as a trustee until obligations are found to have been created which are in the nature of a trust and under which he may be held to be, what is termed in English Law, as a constructive trustee. A. against the appellate order of the Sub-Judge, Dindigul, dated February 4, 1936.

Mr. K. S. Ramamurthi, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and R. Rangachari, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This appeal arises in consequence of an attachment of a property made at the instance of the respondent company on the ground that it was liable to be sold in a decree passed in its favour against one Karuppan Samban. His widow Nallangal objected to the attachment and claimed that the property belonged to her. This objection prevailed in the executing Court, but the order was reversed by the learned Subordinate Judge of Dindigul on appeal. Aggrieved by this order Nallangal has preferred the present appeal. The pattah in regard to the land attached by the decree-holder was issued by the Govt, in favour of the widow on March 25, 1933 (Ex. I). But it appears that a darkhast for this land was originally made by her husband Karuppan Samban on July 19, 1931 during his lifetime (Ex. A). Before passing any final orders on this application, the Tahsildar called upon Karuppan Samban first to deposit a sum of Rs. 37-9-5 for the value of survey stones and of the trees growng on the land. This money was paid on August 8, 1932, but before the grant could be made. Karuppan Samban died on January 19, 1933. The appellant then submitted a fresh application on January 21, 1933 in which after relating all then facts stated above she referred to her impecunious condition and prayed for the grant to be made in her favour for her and her daughter's subsistence. This application was accepted by the Govt. and the pattah was issued to the widow on March 25, 1933 (Exs. I and V).

The widow had alleged in the executing Court that the money which was deposited in pursuance of the Tahsildar's notice was hers, but there is a concurrent finding by both the lower Courts that the price of the trees was paid by Karuppan Samban himself and not by the widow. This is a finding of fact and cannot be questioned in this appeal. In view of this finding, it must be held that the survey stones and the trees on the land belonged to Karuppan Samban and would therefore be attachable by the decree-holder in execution of its decree. The next question is whether the pattah issued by the Govt, to the widow should be considered to have been issued for the benefit of her husband's estate or for the benefit of the widow and her daughter. It has been found by both the Courts that under the rules the application made by the husband for the grant of a pattah or the deposit of the value of the trees made by Karuppan Samban during his lifetime would not have made it obligatory on the Govt. to issue the pattah after his death to his heirs. The Govt. had a complete discretion in the matter and could very well have refused to make a grant in favour of the widow. It is however urged on behalf of the respondent that the widow should, in the circumstances, be held to have taken the property in trust for the estate of her deceased husband. The question is if it can be so regarded. It is obvious from what has been said that Karuppan Samban was not and could not be the owner of the property at the time of his death and the widow could not therefore have inherited it as her husband's heir. It has been however contended that in view of the application made by the husband for the grant during his lifetime and bearing the deposit made by him for the value of the survey stones and trees in mind, it must be presumed that the application was made by the widow in a representative capacity, and even if she may be assumed to be holding an absolute right against the Govt., this could not prevent the company from attaching the property in its decree against the husband. A constructive trust is thus alleged to have arisen under which the widow should be held to be holding the property on behalf of her deceased husband.

Having heard the learned Counsel for the parties, I am of opinion that the widow cannot be said to have acquired the property for the benefit of her husband's estate. It is hardly necessary in this case to refer to a large number of cases cited on behelf of the parties regarding the grant of service on personal inams. It may be that when a personal inam held by the husband is enfranchised in favour of the widow, the grant of the inam title deed will not constitute her to be an absolute owner. Karuppan Samban held no inam in this case from the Govt. and the grant made to the widow for the first time by the Govt. after her husband's death cannot by governed by the principle on which these cases were decided. It has been found by the lower Courts and the finding was not challenged before me that the property was at the disposal of the Govt. when Karuppan Samban died and alienable to whomsoever Govt. was pleased to grant. It was urged on behalf of the respondent that the widow should be held in the circumstances to have a fiduciary character and since she gained an advantage by availing herself of that character, she must hold the property for the benefit of the estate. In the alternative, it was suggested that the widow was a qualified owner and gained an advantage for herself in derogation of the rights of the other persons interested in the property and she must therefore hold the property for the benefit of the persons so interested. Both these contentions are based on ss. 88 and 90, Trusts Act.

A perusal of s. 88, would show that it is inapplicable to the present case. Under the provisions of the section, a person is to hold the benefit gained by him for another person only when he holds a fiduciary character, is bound in that character to protect the interests of the other person, and availing himself of that character gains any pecuniary advantage for himself. How can the widow in this case be said to be a person holding any fiduciary character and of such a nature as to be bound to protect the interests of the respondent company which was a creditor of her deceased husband? Could she be said to hold any fiduciary character towards her husband who was no more? Can it be seriously argued then that she was bound to apply to the Govt. for the grant in the interest of her husband's creditor and acquired it so as to enable the latter to sell it through Court in the execution of its decree? The answer to all these questions must be in the negative and the provisions of this section cannot, therefore, be held to apply.

Turning to s. 90 of the Act, I find that it applies in terms to a tenant for life, co-owner, mortgagee, or other qualified owner of any property. A Hindu widow can neither be described to be a tenant for life or qualified owner in the sense in which these expressions have been used in this section. Her position in regard to her husband's estate is that of an owner with limited rights. She can alienate the property inherited by her absolutely under certain circumstances which need not be stated here. In the absence of those circumstances, the property left by her husband may devolve on the reversioners. But she cannot be said to be a tenant for life only because she inherits a life estate and as a qualified owner her right of alienation is restricted and may be questioned by her husband's reversioners, if she exceeds it. Even if either of these expressions are assumed to cover a widow, which in my opinion, they cannot, she could not in any case be held responsible until she gained an advantage in derogation of the rights of the other "persons interested" in the property. The expression "persons interested" has been held by a Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court not to cover the reversioners: Sriram Jankiji Birjman Mandir v. Jagadamba Prasad (1). Much less can it be said to cover the creditors of a widow's deceased husband. So far as one can glean the facts from the evidence on the record, the only property which Karuppan Samban is shown to have left behind him was the amount held to have been paid by him for the value of the stones and trees. When she is proved to have paid nothing out of her husband's estate for obtaining the grant from the Govt., she cannot be held to have gained an advantage in derogation of the rights of the persons interested in the property left by her husband. The illustration to this section, to which my attention was drawn by the learned Counsel for the respondent does not help his contention.

It was contended that even if these two sections are not held to be in terms applicable they are not exhaustive and the principles underlying them and particularly under s. 90, would make the widow liable to surrender the property acquired by her for the discharge of her deceased husband's debts. In that connection reliance was placed on Babani Soiroo v. Dulba Gobind (2), the leading English case in Keech v. Sandford (3), commonly called the Ramford Market case, and Yem v. Edwards (4). But before these cases are considered, it might be observed that the terms of ss. 88 90 are not exhaustive only in the sense that if a person cannot be brought within these sections, and held liable as a trustee, he must be found to fall under the residuary section in this Chapter, i. e., s. 94. In other words where no trust has been declared a person would not be accountable as a trustee until obligations are found to have been created which are in the nature of a trust and under which he may be held to be, what is termed in English Law, as a constructive trustee. These obligations have been described in Chap. IX, Trusts Act. Having already held ss. 88 and 90 of the Act to be inapplicable to the facts of the present case, I must now ascertain if the appellant as required by s. 94 has no beneficial interest in the property granted to her by the Govt. If she is found to be holding the property for the use of others and not for herself, the doctrine of constructive trust would be held to apply to her and she would be assumed to be holding it for their benefit as provided by s. 94 of the Act. But can the appellant in the abovementioned circumstances be said to be holding the property for the benefit of the respondent company? The grant was made to her by the Govt. and she did not stand in any fiduciary position towards her husband who had died or towards a creditor of her husband, whom she was under no obligation to repay from out of the property acquired by her, without any help from or detriment to her husband's estate. It was held in In re Bliss (5), that a person cannot be held to be a constructive trustee unless his possession is such that he owed some duty to the other persons interested. Since the widow cannot be held to have owed any duty to the respondent company or to be holding the property for its benefit, the provisions of s. 94 of the Act cannot be held to apply.

Turning to the English cases cited on behalf of the respondent, I find that the facts in Keech v. Sandford (3) were that a lessee of the profits of a market had devised the lease to a trustee for an infant. The trustee applied for renewal on behalf of the infant, but his application was refused on the ground that the minor was incapable of entering into a contract and that there could be no distress of the profits of a market. The trustee then took the lease for himself. In a suit on behalf of the infant it was held that the trustee could not take advantage of his position and he was therefore ordered to assign it to the infant. This case was decided on the principle that the trustee was "the only person of all mankind," who could not have the lease for his benefit. This was simply because he was an express trustee for the infant while the appellant is neither an express nor a constructive trustee. The next English case relied upon on behalf of the respondent was that in Yem v. Edwards (4). There it was held that a grant having been obtained by a widow by virtue of a possession referable to her husband's will must be treated in equity as made for the benefit of the devisees, to whom the husband had bequeathed the remainder after giving merely a life interest to the widow. It was decided in those circumstances, and if I may say so with great respect, rightly, that the widow, who had got into possession of a property belonging to the Crown for her life under a will of her husband, cannot be held to have acquired any interest in that property if the Crown allowed persons, who had encroached on the properties, to take a conveyance on payment of a nominal consideration.

It will thus be seen that both the English cases do not help the contention raised on behalf of the respondent. In the first case, the trust in favour of the infant was an express one and the trustee was, on account of his fiduciary capacity, held to have acted for the infant's benefit alone. In the second case, the widow was found to have purchased the land encroached upon on very easy terms as she was put into possession of the land for her life under her husband's will and was held to have no beneficial interest in the land. Once it is found that the widow in this case was not a trustee on behalf of her deceased husband or that of the creditor company and the acquisition under the Govt. grant on a darkhast made by her was not an unfair gain or benefit obtained by her in a fiduciary or semi-fiduciary capacity, the doctrine of 'graft' embodied in s. 90, Trusts Act, must be held to be inapplicable. I would therefore find that the property acquired by the widow from the Govt. on her darkhast is her own property and not liable to be attached in the execution of a decree obtained by the respondent company. The same however cannot be said of the survey stones and the trees which were paid for by Karuppan Samban during his life. The appeal is therefore accepted to that extent with costs of both this and the lower Appellate Courts. If the trees or the stones have been removed by the appellant, she will have to account for the same in appropriate proceedings.

Criminal Revision Petition No. 604 of 1939

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 195-A, 215—Notice under s. 195-A signed on behalf of executive officer by person authorized to do so, is valid—Presumption in such cases—Notice, if should specify in detail how sanctioned plans had been contravened—Expression "delivered to" if means "served upon"

Where notice under s. 195-A, Punjab Municipal Act has not been signed by the executive officer but by another person who has been specially authorised by the executive officer to sign such notices, the notice is valid.

The legal maxim omnia praesumuntur rite esse actæ has been embodied in an illustration to s. 114, Evi. Act, and if a person receives a notice purporting to be signed by somebody on behalf of the executive officer, the presumption is that it is signed by a person who has been authorized to sign it, and if the person receiving that notice presumes otherwise and disobeys the notice, he is taking a risk. The burden lies on him to rebut the presumption of regularity.

There is nothing in the language of s. 195-A of the Act, as it now stands, which requires the notice to state any more than that the sanction has been contravened. The notice is invalid if it does not specify in detail how the sanctioned plans had been contravened.

The words "service" or "served" are technical terms implying a definite process of the law; and where those terms are used, that process has to be carried out. The words "delivered to" do not appear to me to mean or to be intended to mean the same as "served upon." They are words of much wider meaning.

C. R. P. from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Amritsar, dated January 11, 1939.

Mr. Amar Nath Chona, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Muhammad Monir, Assistant to the Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Order.—These are three petitions by one Surain Singh for revision of the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Amritsar, upholding his conviction under s. 195-A, Municipal Act, III of 1911 and a fine of Rs. 100 in each case with a sentence of four months' simple imprisonment in default. The petitions are identical and each proceeds on the same grounds. The first ground is that the notices in each case were invalid as they had not been signed by the executive officer. It appears that they were signed by one Lala Bihari Lal for the executive officer. Lala Bihari Lal is the legal adviser of the Municipality and has, it appears, been specially authorized by the executive officer to sign such notices. Under s. 215, Municipal Act, as now amended, the executive officer can authorize another person to sign such notices on his behalf. This ground therefore has no force in it. It has been contended by Counsel for the petitioner that he could not know who Lala Bihari Lal was; but as the notice was signed "for" the executive officer, he had to presume that it was signed by a person authorised to sign it. The legal maxim omnia præsumuntur rite esse actæ has been embodied in an illustration to s. 114, Evi. Act, and if a person receives a notice purporting to be signed by somebody on behalf of the executive officer, the persumption is that it is signed by a person who has been authorized to sign it. and if the person receiving that notice presumes otherwise and disobeys the notice, he is taking a risk. The burden lies on him to rebut the presumption of regularity. In this case the petitioner has not rebutted it.

The second ground is that the notices were invalid as they did not specify in detail how the sanctioned plans had been contravened. Counsel for the petitioner has relied upon a judgment reported in Mohammad Yasin v. Municipal Committee, 9 Ind. Cas. 889 (1) for his contention that such a notice must clearly specify the contravention. That ruling does not appear to me to have any application to the facts of the present case as it refers to an entirely different set of circumstances. That case was under s. 95 of the old Act, which is now embodied in ss. 172 and 175 of new Act. I can see nothing in the language of s. 195-A of the Act, as it now stands, which requires the notice to state any more than that the sanction has been contravened. This may or may not be a lacuna in the law but it is not for me to legislate in the matter. I have to interpret the law as I find it. I cannot, therefore, find that there is any defect in the notice on this ground. The third objection is that the notice was not properly served upon the petitioner himself. It appears that copies of the notices were delivered in the first instance to one Ismail, a contractor of the petitioner. As the learned Additional Sessions Judge has pointed out, there is definite evidence that the petitioner had received these notices as he came to the building Muharrir to ask for his advise as to what he should do with regard to them. Counsel for the petitioner suggests that this evidence is false but he has given no reason whatever why I should consider it false; and it has been accepted and acted upon by both the Courts below.

Counsel appears to think that s. 195-A requires that notice should be "served" on the owner of the building. Actually the section, as framed in the new Act, says that the notice should be "delivered" to the owner. The words "service" or "served" are technical terms implying a definite process of the law; and where those terms are used, that process has to be carried out. The words "delivered to" do not appear to me to mean or to be intended to mean the same as "served upon." They are words of much wider meaning. If the Legislature had intended that the legal process of serving the summons should be carried out in this case, there was no difficulty in using those words in this section and the fact that different words, namely "delivered to," have been used, shows that this was not the intention of the Legislature. What actually happened in this case was that the notices were handed over to Ismail who delivered them to the petitioner. It is clear that they were duly delivered and there is, therefore, no force in this ground also. There is also a prayer by Counsel for the petitioner that the sentence should be reduced. No real reasons have been given for this prayer and I see no reason why I should interfere. The petitions are accordingly dismissed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Applicability to execution applications — Limitation — Execution — Decree transferred to another Court — Question whether execution is time-barred can be determined by either transferee Court or decree Court—It depends on convenience — Res judicata — Question of limitation not raised in transferee Court — If barred in decree Court — Burma Courts Act (XI of 1922), s. 7 (c)—"Original proceedings"—Meaning of—Amendment of Act in 1932 — Creation of Assistant District Court — Whether deprives District Court, which passed decree, of its jurisdiction to execute its decree not exceeding pecuniary limits of Assistant District Court's jurisdiction — Proper Court, which is.

Section 5, Lim. Act, does not apply to applications in execution at all. [p. 319, col. 2.]

Where the decree has been sent to another Court for execution, both, the Courts to which the decree is sent and the Court which passed it have jurisdiction to determine the question whether the execution of the decree is time-barred or not. The question which of the two Courts is more suitable depends upon the question of convenience and priority.

Even if the plea that application for execution is time-barred is not raised in the Court to which the decree is transmitted for execution, the plea cannot be res judicata in the Court which passed the decree because the plea can be raised at any time in the transferee Court. Srihari Mundul v. Murari Chowdhury (5), relied on.

The words "original proceeding" in s. 7 (c), Burma Courts Act are not used in contradistinction to "proceeding in appeal", and can only mean proceedings which initiate something, such as, for example, pauper applications. These words at all events cannot refer to execution proceedings which are merely a continuation of the proceedings in the suit which gave rise to them. [p. 321 col. 1.]

Just because an inferior Court, (Assistant District Court) has been constituted under Burma Courts Amending Act, 1932, for the same local area after the passing of the decree, with jurisdiction to hear and determine suits or original proceedings of a certain value, the Court of a higher pecuniary jurisdiction (District Court) which passed the decree is not only not deprived of its jurisdiction to execute its decree which may not exceed the pecuniary limit of the new Court's (Assistant District Court) jurisdiction but is the proper Court which should execute the decree. [p. 322, col. 2.]

F. A. from an order of the District Court, Maubin, dated September 22, 1939.

Mr. E. Hay, for the Appellant.
Mr. P. K. Basu, for the Respondents.

Mosely, J.—This is an appeal from an order in execution passed by the District Judge of Maubin. The facts of the case are as follows: A decree was passed in favour of respondent No. 1, L. N. Chettyar Firm, in the District Court, Maubin, in Suit No. 2 of 1928 for some Rs. 8,000 odd against the appellant P. L. S. P. Subramaniam Chettiar and his partner, respondent No. 2 Karuppan Chettyar, who has not entered appearance in this appeal and is only a pro forma party. Execution of this decree was taken out in civil execution case No. 2 of 1929 and in civil execution case No. 18 of 1931 of the District Court of Maubin, which was closed on December 5, 1931, and again in a third execution proceedings No. 8 of 1934 of the Assistant District Court of Maubin. Assistant District Courts were not constituted by the Burma Courts Act, XI of 1922, but were only established under a further Act to amend that Act, Burma Act IV of 1932, which came into force in that year—1932 This execution proceeding was instituted on November 9, 1934, but was not proceeded with, and was closed on January 21, 1935. Then a fourth execution proceeding, the one with which the present appeal is concerned, execution case No. 5 of 1936, was instituted on August 5, 1936, for execution for a sum of Rs. 4,800 odd. This was an application that the decree be sent for execution to the subordinate Court of Sivaganga in the Madras Presidency. The decree was sent (as usual without notice to the judgment-debtors) with the necessary certificate on that date.

Execution was proceeded with in the Sivaganga Court, but nothing further was done in execution case No. 5 of 1936 of the District Court of Maubin until October 21, 1938, when the appellant applied that the decree be re called and the certificate of non-satisfaction corrected by the showing of a sum of some Rs. 2,000 as having already been satisfied by a payment in 1931. On October 31, this application was followed by a further application by the appellant pleading that execution of the decree was time-barred. Respondent No. 1, the decree-holder, then filed a written objection, and later, in April 1939, an application was made to condone the delay. The present order now under appeal was passed on this application and on the application by the judgment-debtors, to say that the appeal was time-barred. The learned District Judge found in the first place that execution case No. 8 of 1934 had not been transferred to the Assistant District Court nor had it been presented to the proper Court as defined in Art. 182 read with Expln. 2 to that article. In the explanation it is said "proper Court" means the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree or order. The learned Judge, however, went on to quote s. 5, Lim. Act, and to say that the Court had power to condone delay if it was satisfied that the decree-holder had sufficient cause for not making his application within the period of limitation. Section 5, however, does not apply to applications in execution at all. The learned Judge proceeded to hold that the mistake was a bona fide one and that the delay should and could be condoned under s. 14 (2), Lim. Act, forgetting that s. 14 (2) could only operate to exclude from limitation the actual time during which this application in execution to the Assistant District Court was pending. Admittedly that period would not be sufficient to make the present application within time.

This appeal is on the ground that ss. 5 and 14, Lim. Act, have no application and that the proceedings in execution in question are on the face of them time-barred. A preliminary objection is made by the respondent that any objection on the score of limitation should have been made to the Sivaganga Court in which proceedings in execution were being conducted and not to the Maubin Court. This question was discussed, but not decided, in an appeal to a Bench of this Court, Nachimai Achi v. S. N. Subramonian Chetty (1). This was a case where a decree of the Chief Court of Lower Burma was sent for execution to the District Court of Ramnad in Madras and was returned with a certificate of non-satisfaction for the purpose of enabling the decree-holder to bring the legal representatives of the deceased defendant on the record. This was done and it was then ordered that the decree be re-sent to the Ramnad Court. In appeal it was contended that the decree and the application to bring the legal representatives on the record were both time-barred. The learned Judge on the original side of the High Court had taken the view that both questions were questions which should ordinarily be decided by the Chief Court, but that in the circumstances of the case they ought to be decided by the District Court of Ramnad as the whole of the previous proceedings in execution had been taken in that Court and all necessary materials for a decision were, therefore, available there.

It was contended in appeal that the appellant was entitled to have those questions decided by this Court. Banku Behary Chatterji v. Naraindas Dutt (2), a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council was quoted, where it was expressly said that an order of transmission would be rightly made ex parte and as a ministerial act, and it followed by necessary implication that an order permitting execution against the legal representatives could also rightly be made ex parte. That case affirmed the decree of the Calcutta High Court in Narain Dass Dutt v. Banku Behari (3), where the other question had arisen as to which was the proper Court to decide an objection on the part of the judgment-debtor that execution was time-barred. In that case Richardson, J., had briefly said that under the scheme of the Code the Court transmitting a decree was not the Court to decide such an objection, and that such objection should be taken and determined by the Court to which the decree is transmitted. All that was said in Nachiamma Achi v. S. N. Subramonian Chetty (1), was that this Court could have rightly left both questions, in the circumstances of that case, to the Ramnad Court.

Another ruling quoted, Maharaja of Bobbili v. Narasaraju Peda (4), is to the effect that after a decree is sent for execution, the Court which passed the decree has no jurisdiction to entertain another application in execution unless concurrent execution had been ordered or the proceedings in the Court to which the decree was sent had been stayed. But the present application is not one to execute but that the decree be declared incapable of execution and, it may be remarked, execution has been stayed in the Sivaganga Court for the purpose of allowing this question of limitation to be decided by the District Court of Maubin. I myself can find nothing in the Act to show that it is intended that objections as to limitation which go to the root of execution can only be taken in the Court to which a decree is transmitted. No doubt that is often the most convenient course, and is usually the most convenient course when the executing Court lies in the same province as the Court which passed the decree and can easily obtain full materials and information. But the Court which passed the decree is the Court which has and retains control of the proceedings: vide O. XXI, r. 28, which says that > "any order of the Court by which the decree was passed...in relation to the execution of such decree shall be binding upon the Court to which the decree was sent for execution."

Of course applications that the decree has been wholly satisfied in Burma after its transmission to Madras would naturally and normally be made to the Court in Burma which passed the decree, and there is, in my opinion, nothing in the Act or in the scope or intention of the Act to prevent similar applications in regard to matters concerning limitation which go to the root of execution. It is merely the question of convenience or of priority of application which determines the Court which shall decide such questions. If this preliminary objection had been well-founded and the District Court had had no power to decide the question of limitation, the District Court would have had no power to transmit the decree to the Sivaganga Court. Another objection that this plea of limitation is res judicata because it was not raised in the Sivaganga Court may be dismissed on the short ground that it would be raised at any time in the Sivaganga Court and cannot therefore be res judicata here: see a case decided on these lines, Srihari Mundal v. Murari Choudury (5). As to the main grounds of appeal we must first refer to the Burma Courts Act of 1922 and to the amending Act of 1932 by which the Assistant District Court was constituted. By s. 6 of Act XI of 1922 it was enacted that the Local Govt. shall establish District Courts, Sub-Divisional Courts and Township Courts. Section 7 defined the original jurisdiction of those Courts, and sub-cl. (c) said that the District Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any suit or original proceeding without restriction as regards the value.

It appears to me that the words "original proceeding" are not used in contradistinction to "proceeding in appeal" and can only mean proceedings which initiate something, such as, for example, pauper applications, (the same words are used with reference to the jurisdiction of Sub-Divisional and Township Courts). These words at all events cannot refer to execution proceedings which are merely a continuation of the proceedings in the suit which gave rise to them. Section 24 is the first section of Chap. IV, which is headed "Provision for Pending and Past Proceedings," and s. 24, sub-s. (2) says that every proceeding pending in any other Civil Court in Burma (i. e., other than the High Court, mentioned in s. 24 (4)) at the commencement of this Act shall be deemed to be transferred to the Court exercising the jurisdiction under this Act, which corresponds to the jurisdiction of the Court in which the proceeding was instituted, and the Court to which any such proceeding is transferred shall proceed to try, hear and determine the matter as if it had been instituted in such Court. Section 26 refers to execution of past decrees and orders, and says that all decrees and orders passed by the Divisional Court shall be deemed to have been passed or made by the District Court which would have had jurisdiction if this Act had been in force at the time the decrees or orders were passed or made.

The Amending Act (Burma Act IV of 1932), by sub-s. 2 (1) established a new grade of Court in Burma in addition to the already established Courts, namely the Assistant District Court, and by sub-s. (4) of that Act it was laid down that the Assistant District Court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any suit or original proceeding of a value not exceeding Rs. 15,000. It would appear clear on a plain reading of this last provision, read with s. 24 (2) of the Act of 1922, that the Assistant District Court had only jurisdiction to try suits or original proceedings within its pecuniary jurisdiction which were instituted after Act IV of 1932 came into force, or, it may be added, which were transferred to it under s. 24 of the Code by the District Court. Section 26 of Act XI of 1922 was not amended so as to make it deemed that decrees of the District Court had been passed by the Assistant District Court. It connot be said that the Court which passed the decree (s. 38 of the Code) had ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute its decrees. If that were the case, of course, the Assistant District Court would be the Court to which applications in execution of the proceedings of the District Court within the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Assistant District Court would lie under the provisions of s. 37 (b) of the Code. But the District Court has not ceased to exist, and in practice District Courts have been executing decrees passed in suits of a value less than Rs. 15,000 passed prior to 1932 ever since then, and applications for execution of such decrees have not been filed in the Assistant District Courts. The proper procedure was pointed out by a circular of this Court in 1933. I do not see that s. 150 of the Code can help the respondents here. That section enacts:

"Save as otherwise provided, where the business of any Court is transferred to any other Court, (i. e., the business of any Court is, in whole or part, transferred to any other Court), the Court to which the business is so transferred shall have the same powers and shall perform the same duties as those respectively conferred and imposed by or under this Code upon the Court from which the business was so transferred."

I do not wish to allude to cases which have been quoted where a Court had ceased to exist or had ceased to exercise territorial jurisdiction. This argument presupposes that the District Court had ceased to exist or had ceased to exercise jurisdiction in respect of decrees to the value of under Rs. 15,000 passed by it. I will only refer to one case cited by the respondents, Aminuddin Mullick v. Atormoni Dasi (6). In that case a Munsif who was empowered to try suits up to Rs. 2,000 had passed a preliminary decree but was then transferred, and the final decree in the case was passed by the subordinate Judge. Application for execution of the decree was subsequently made to a successor of the Munsif, who was also empowered to try suits up to Rs. 2,000. It was said in the judgment in that case (p. 1103 ibid) that since the second Munsif's Court was vested with the powers to try suits up to Rs. 2,000 in value the business in the subordinate Judge's Court so far as it related to suits up to the value of Rs. 2,000 must be taken to have been transferred to the Munsif's Court, and that that Court therefore would have the same powers and would perform the same duties as those conferred and imposed by the Code upon the Court of the subordinate Judge from which the business was transferred. The decision purported to be one under the provisions of s. 150 of the Code, but I cannot see myself that that section had any application in that case. Section 150 starts "Save as otherwise provided," and it certainly could not have been said in that case, in the words of s. 37 that the Court of the subordinate Judge had ceased to exist. For these reasons I think that the trial Court was right in coming to its conclusion that execution case No. 8 of 1934 had not been instituted in the proper Court. This being so, it must be held that execution in the present case now under appeal is time-barred. This appeal will be successful and there will be a finding to this effect. Respondent No. 1 is to pay the costs of this appeal ad valorem. The proceedings in execution will be recalled from the Court of Sivaganga.

Mya Bu, J.—I agree with my learned brother. As regards the respondent's objection to the jurisdiction of the District Court of Maubin, the principle underlying the rule in O. XXI, r. 28, and the decision in Srihari Mundul v. Murari Chowdhury (5) make me incline to the view that the Court which passed the decree possesses jurisdiction to determine the question whether the execution of the decree is time-barred or not, although it has sent the decree to another Court for execution; but for the purpose of this case, I am content to adopt the view that the authorities relied on in support of the contention do not lay down that the Court which passed the decree is deprived of jurisdiction to determine the question after it has sent the decree to another Court for execution, and I am in entire agreement with my learned brother that both, the Court which passed the decree and that to which the decree is sent for execution, have jurisdiction to determine this question, and which is the more suitable of the two depends upon tthe question of convenience and priority.

Coming to the main question for determination, namely, whether the application for execution in civil execution No. 8 of 1934 of the Assistant District Court of Maubin was an application made to the proper Court, the arguments addressed in support of the affirmative view seem to have proceeded upon the supposition that by the creation of the Assistant District Court by the Burma Courts (Amendment) Act 1932, the jurisdiction of the District Court to execute its own decrees under s. 38, Civil P. C., was extinguished, where the amount does not exceed the pecuniary limit of the jurisdiction of the Assistant District Court. The authorities relied on by the learned Advocate for the respondents (other than the one already quoted by my learned brother) are cases where the Court which had jurisdiction to pass the decree had ceased to exist and another Court had come into being to exercise that jurisdiction. The fallacy of the argument can, however, be illustrated by simple illustrations, such as, for example, in a suit for Rs. 20,000 filed in the District Court in which the District Court passes a decree for Rs. 500 only, it is still the District Court which has jurisdiction to execute the decree for Rs. 500, although the decretal amount happens to be within the jurisdiction of the township Court which, of course, will have jurisdiction to execute the decree only if it be transferred to it. This illustration, in my opinion, is sufficient to show that, just because an inferior Court has been constituted for the same local area after the passing of the decree with jurisdiction to hear and determine suits or original proceedings of a certain value, the Court of a higher pecuniary jurisdiction which passed the decree is not only not deprived of its jurisdiction to execute its decree which may not exceed the pecuniary limit of the new Court's jurisdiction but is the proper Court which should execute the decree. For these reasons I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

and accused Nos. 2 to 4 were not parties to the proceedings under the Legal Practitioners' Act. A complaint of the Court is not necessary for prosecuting these accused for an offence under s. 467 of the I. P. C. nor does any question of evading the provisions of s. 195 of the Criminal P. C. arise as in Appadurai Nainar In re (1). The Court was moved to make a complaint against them and the making of a complaint by the Court for an offence under s. 193 of the I. P. C. was considered unnecessary as accused Nos. 2 to 4 could be prosecuted for the graver offence under s. 467 of the I. P. C. without a complaint of the Court. There is, therefore, no ground for interference and the revision petition is dismissed.

Muhammadan Law—Waqf—Mutawalli—Nomination by, of successor during marz-ul-maut—Effect—Diarrhoea or general debility due to old age, if marz-ul-maut—De facto mutawalli whether can get declaration that he is proper mutawalli—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 2 (11), O. XXII, r. 3—Suit by plaintiff and mutawalli for declaration that certain property is waqf—Appeal from decree—Mutawalli dying—Plaintiff managing property of deceased and doing all his duties—Plaintiff held legal representative of deceased for purposes of appeal.

Under Muhammadan Law the nomination of his successor by the mutwalli for the time being is valid only if it is made while he was in death illness (marz-ul-maut). Neither diarrhoea nor "general debility due to old age" can be called mortal maladies and, therefore, nomination of successor during such illness is not valid.

Quære.—Whether a de facto mutawalli can get a declaration from the Civil Court that he is the properly constituted mutawalli.

A decree was passed in a suit by the plaintiff and a mutawalli of a mosque for a declaration that the mosque was waqf and while the appeal was pending the mutawalli died. Since then the plaintiff had been managing the mosque and the properties and performing the same duties as the deceased was alleged to have performed during his lifetime :

Held, that the plaintiff could be treated as the legal representative of the deceased for the purpose of the appeal.

L. P. A. from the judgment of Skemp, J., in S. A. No. 1173 of 1938, dated January 12, 1939.

Mr. Muhammad Alam, for the Appellants.

Malik Barkat Ali for Mr. Sardar Khan and Mr. Daulat Ram Kalia, for Respondent No. 2.

Tek Chand, J.—This is an appeal under cl. 10 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Skemp, J., affirming the appellate decree of the District Judge, whereby he had dismissed the plaintiffs-appellants' suit. The suit had been instituted by Mst. Kamon, Sardar Mohammad and others for declaration that a certain mosque in Ferozpore City, together with the properties attached to it and described in detail in the plaint, was waqf that the waqf had been created by the ancestors of the plaintiffs and that the plaintiffs were the present mutwallis. An injunction was also asked for restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' management of the waqf properties and requiring the defendants to demolish a wall which they had constructed on a part of the waqf property. The defendants admitted that the mosque and the other properties were waqf, but denied that the plaintiffs' ancestors had created the waqf or that the plaintiffs were the mutwallis. They admitted having constructed the wall but alleged that it had been built for the benefit of the waqf properties. They alleged that this mosque had no mutwalli at all and that it was managed by the mohalladars. The trial Judge found that the waqf had been created by Mst. Amiro, who was the ancestor of Mst. Kammon plaintiff. He also found that Sardar Mohammad plaintiff was the present mutwalli and the defendants had no right in the management. He, therefore, granted the plaintiffs a declaration in these terms and also issued a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interference Sardar Mohammad's managment of the mosque and the other properties in dispute and directing them to demolish the wall. The defendants appealed to the Additional District Judge who held that there was no proof that Mst. Amiro had dedicated the properties in dispute or that she was the ancestor of the plaintiffs. He further found that Sardar Mohammad plaintiff was not the properly appointed mutwalli of the mosque. As to the alternative claim put forward before him, the learned Judge found that the evidence was not sufficient to establish that Sardar Mohammad was the de facto mutwalli and that, even if he was so, he was not entitled to get a declaration from the Civil Court that he was a properly appointed mutwalli. On these findings he accepted the defendants' appeal and dismissed the suit.

On second appeal, the learned Judge in Single Bench affirmed the decision of the Additional District Judge. He however, granted a certificate for a Letters Patent appeal. After the institution of this appeal, Sardar Mohammad one of plaintiffs-appellants died on March 5, 1939. An application under O. XXII, r. 3, Civil P. C., was made by Mst. Kammon praying that she be allowed to prosecute the appeal as the legal representative of Sardar Mohammad deceased, as he by his will dated July 17, 1938, had appointed her as the next mutwalli. As the respondents did not admit the execution or validity of the will we, by our order of June 14, 1939, remitted an issue to the trial Court under O. XLI, r. 25, Civil P. C., for enquiry and report on this point. The learned Subordinate Judge after an exhaustive enquiry, has submitted his findings that the will produced by Mst. Kammon had been executed by Sardar Mohammad while he was in full possession of his senses but that it was not valid under Muhammadan Law as it had not been executed while the testator was in death illness (marz-ul-maut). He however held that since the death of Sardar Mohammad Mst. Kammon had been acting as the de facto mutwalli and therefore she was his "legal representative" within the meaning of s. 2 (11), Civil P. C.

Before us, the due execution of the will has not been disputed by either party, but the appellants maintain that it was executed while the testator was suffering from marz-ul-maut. The respondents on the other hand contend that the evidence does not establish that Mst. Kammon had in fact been acting as mutwalli since the death of Sardar Mohammad and that even if she did so she could not be regardad as his legal representative. After examining the evidence and hearing Counsel at length we have no hesitation in holding that it has not been established that Sardar Mohammad was suffering from marz-ul-maut at the time when he had nominated Mst. Kammon as his successor. As stated above, the will was executed on July 17, 1938, and all that is proved is that he was suffering from diarrhoea at the time. He died seven months later and in the death register the cause of his death is described as "general debility due to old age." Now, neither diarrhoea nor "general debility due to old age" can be called mortal maladies nor is there any evidence on the record to establish that at the time of the execution of the will the testator had "a preponderance of the apprehension that death was imminent." It cannot therefore be said that he was suffering from marz-ul-maut. It is conceded that under Muhammadan Law the nomination of his successor by the mutwalli for the time being is valid only if it is made while he was in death illness (marz-ul-maut). But as this had not been established in this case, the nomination of Mst. Kammon as mutwalli by Sardar Mohammad assuming that he had the power to do so cannot be held to be valid.

With regard to the alternative claim there is some evidence on the record that since the death of Sardar Mohammad, Mst. Kammon has been managing the mosque and the properties and performing the same duties as Sardar Mohammad is alleged to have performed in his life-time. Therefore for the purposes of prosecuting this appeal, we allowed her to be treated as his "legal representative". On the merits, however, this appeal is concluded by findings of fact. The Additional District Judge has found as a fact that Mst. Amiro had not been proved to be the ancestor of the plaintiffs nor has it been established that it was she who had founded the waqf. This finding has not been challenged by the appellants' learned Counsel before us. It follows, therefore, that Sardar Mohammad was not the de jure mutwalli of the mosque. It was contended however that he was the de facto mutwalli and had acted as such for more than six years. On this point also the learned Judge has recorded a clear finding. In his discussion of Issue No. 2, he has definitely found > "that the evidence in this case was not sufficient to show that the plaintiff (Sardar Mohammad) was the de facto mutwalli of the mosque."

The learned Judge has summarized the evidence bearing on the point and has found the oral evidence to be unworthy of credence and the documentary evidence insufficient to establish that he was the de facto mutwalli. Counsel has not been able to show that this finding is vitiated by any substantial error or procedure, which might justify interference in second appeal. He merely pointed out that the evidence of one of the witnesses produced by the plaintiff had not been considered by the learned Additional District Judge. We allowed him to read the statement of this witness to us but do not find anything in it which is helpful to the plaintiffs. The finding that Sardar Mohammad was not the de facto mutwalli being final and conclusive, it is not necessary to decide the further question whether a de facto mutwalli can get a declaration from the Civil Court that he is the properly constituted mutwalli. The appeal fails and is dismissed, but having regard to all the circumstances the parties are left to bear their own costs of this appeal.

Dalip Singh, J.—I agree.

Execution — Application necessitated by Court's striking off previous application, whether fresh application for execution or merely one for revival—Execution sale — No bidders on date of auction — Decree-holder if can, in same proceeding ask Court to put property for sale at later date—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 71, 87—Application for re-sale can be made at any time within three years—Delay of eleven months cannot justify Court in rejecting decree-holder's application for payment of deficit.

An application in execution which is necessitated by the action of the Court in striking off a previous application for execution, is not in law a fresh application, but must be taken to be an application to revive or continue the former application. [p. 327, col. 1]

[Case-law relied on.]

The fact that there are no bidders on occasion of the auction does not prevent the decree-holder from asking the Court in the same proceedings to put up the property for sale at a later date. [p. 325, col. 1; p. 326, col. 2.]

The Civil P. C., contains no provision stating when the application for a re-sale shall be made, and therefore the decree-holder is entitled to make the application at any time within three years as Art. 181, Lim. Act, applies. Delay of eleven months does not justify the Court in rejecting the application for an order directing the payment of the amount of the deficit. [p. 326, col. 1.]

L. P. A. against the judgment and order of Abdul Rahman, J., in C. M. S. A. No. 53 of 1936, dated November 14, 1938.

Mr. T. S. Anantharaman, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. Rajah Ayyar and V. Sankaran for the Respondents.

Leach, C. J.—The appellant obtained a money decree against respondent No. 2 in the Court of the District Munsif of Tirupur and in execution of that decree attached immovable property belonging to the judgment-debtor. The property was sold by the Court in execution proceedings on February 23, 1932, respondent No. 1 being the purchaser. Respondent No. 1 immediately deposited 25 per cent. of the purchase price, which was Rs. 715, as required by r. 84 of O. XXI, Civil P. C. The sale proclamation disclosed that there was a mortgage on the property, but it indicated that the mortgage was invalid. The mortgage was in fact a valid one and subsequently the mortgagee obtained a mortgage decree. Respondent No. 1 did not pay the balance of the purchase money within fifteen days, as required by r. 85 of O. XXI, but on February 29, he applied for an order setting the sale aside on the ground of material irregularity in the publication of the sale inasmuch as the mortgage had been described as being invalid. As the balance of the purchase money had not been paid into Court, the District Munsif held that there had in law been no sale and therefore there was no need for an order setting aside the sale. On this ground he dismissed respondent No. 1's application and by a subsequent order directed that his deposit of 25 per cent. of Rs. 715, namely Rs. 178-12-0, should be refunded to him.

On March 30, 1932 the District Munsif, for what has been described as "statistical reasons," struck off his list of pending cases the application of the appellant for the sale of respondent No. 2's property. The Court closed for the summer vacation on May 11, 1932 until June 28, 1932. On the re-opening day the appellant filed a fresh application for the sale of the same property. He was compelled to do so in consequence of the District Munsif's action on March 30, 1932, which action was illegal. As the result of the fresh application the property was advertised for sale by the Court on September 24, 1932. There were no bidders at the auction and the District Munsif dismissed the application. This again constituted unlawful action on his part. The fact that there were no bidders on this occasion did not prevent the appellant from asking the Court in the same proceedings to put up the property for sale at a later date. The September 25, 1932 was a Saturday and the Court was closed. When it re-opened on Monday, September 27, the appellant filed a further application for the sale of the property and on this application the Court directed the auction to take place on January 3, 1933. At this auction the property was sold to one Somasundara Naidu for Rs. 301 leaving a deficit of Rs. 414. On November 25, 1933 the appellant applied for an order against respondent No. 1 for the payment of this sum under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 71, which states that any deficiency of price which may happen on a re-sale, by reason of the purchaser's default, and all expenses attending such re-sale, shall at the instance of either the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor, be recoverable from the defaulting purchaser.

The District Munsif dismissed the application on three grounds, namely: (1) there had been material irregularity in the publication of the sale of February 23, 1932 (2) the property which was sold to Somasundara was not in law the same property as was sold to respondent No. 1, a mortgage decree having been passed in the meantime; and (3) even if the property was the same there had been undue delay in filing the application which had led to the second sale, namely the application of September 27, 1932. The appellant appealed to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore. The Subordinate Judge allowed the appeal. He found that the appellant had not been guilty of culpable delay and that the property which was sold to Somasundara was the same property which was sold to respondent No. 1. He also held that there was no material irregularity in the conduct of the first sale, but in any event it had caused no injury to the auction-purchaser. Respondent No. 1 then appealed to this Court and his appeal was heard by Abdur Rahman, J. who allowed it on the ground that the appellant was not entitled to recover because there had been a delay of about eleven months in filing the application which had resulted in the sale to Somasundara. The learned Judge recognized that the delay was not due to any fault of the appellant, but nevertheless he considered that the appellant was not entitled to payment of the balance because delay had taken place. He agreed with the Subordinate Judge that there had been no irregularity in the publication of the first sale and that respondent No. 1 had suffered no injury. He also agreed that the property sold on the second occasion was identical with the property which was sold on the first occasion.

Only three questions have been argued before us. They are these: (1) whether the learned Judge was right in holding that there had been delay and that as the result of that delay the appellant has lost his remedy; (2) whether in order to recover from respondent No. 1 the deficit the second sale must have taken place under the same application; and (3) whether the property sold on the second occasion is identical with the property sold on the first occasion. It is manifest that the appellant had been diligent throughout and there is no ground for holding that there had been delay in the filing of the application of September 27, 1932. The delay which took place in the second sale was due entirely to the improper action of the District Munsif in closing for "statistical reasons" the first application for sale and his improper action in dismissing the second application when there were no bids made at the auction which was fixed for September 24, 1932. But even if there had been a delay of eleven months this would not justify the Court in rejecting the appellant's application for an order directing the payment of the amount of the deficit. The learned Judge has in effect read into the Civil P. C. something which is not there and something which should not be there. When there has to be a re-sale as the result of the default of the auction-purchaser the decree-holder has to apply for a re-sale.

Order XXI, r. 87, as framed by this Court, says that every re-sale of immovable property in default of payment of the amount mentioned in r. 85 (the full amount of the purchase money plus the amount required for the general stamp for a certificate under r. 94) shall be made after the issue of a fresh proclamation. The Civil P. C. contains no provision stating when the application for a re-sale shall be made, and therefore the decree-holder is entitled to make the application at any time within three years as Art. 181, Lim. Act, applies It may be thought that this period is too long in such a case, but the Court is not concerned with that. Its duty is merely to apply the law. The learned Judge relied on the observations of Kumaraswami Sastriar, J. in Venkata- chalamayya v. Nilakanta Girjee (1) at p. 485, where he said that :

"the reasonable construction to place on r. 71 is that the re-sale should be within a reasonable time after the first sale."

Abdur Rahman, J. rightly observed that this statement can only be regarded as obiter, but he considered that the principles governing the assessment of damages in cases of breach of contract apply here, and that the defaulting auction-purchaser should not suffer for any fall in prices which may take place after his default. I am unable to agree. Order XXI, r. 71 says that the defaulting purchaser shall be responsible for the deficit and there is no qualification of this statement. But even if it were the case that an application for a re-sale is not governed by Art. 181, Lim. Act, and that it is incumbent upon the decree-holder to apply for a re-sale within a reasonable time, that condition has been fulfilled in the present case. The appellant took prompt steps for the securing of an order for re-sale and, as I have pointed out, the re-sale did not take place as early as it should have been done because of the erroneous orders passed by the District Munsif, not passed in a judicial capacity but in pursuance of an administrative practice which I trust has long been discontinued.

Mr. Rajah Iyer on behalf of respondent No. 1 has contended that the re-sale took place in execution proceedings different from those originally instituted, but this argument does not call for discussion. It has been decided over and over again that an application in execution which is necessitated by the action of the Court in striking off a previous application for execution is not in law a fresh application, but must be taken to be an application to revive or continue the former application. I need only mention Sasivarna Tevar v. Arulanandam Pillai (2), Suppa Reddiar v. Avudai Ammal (3), Chalavadai Kotiah v. Poloori Alamelammal (4), Tripura Sundaramma v. Abdul Khader (5) at p. 503 and Abdul Aziz Sahib v. Chokkan Chettiar (6) at p. 901. The application which the appellant was compelled to file on June 28, 1932 by reason of the order of March 30, 1932 and the application of September 27, 1932 which was necessitated by the order of September 24, 1932 are not fresh applications, but are applications to revive or continue the application which led to the sale of February 23, 1932, and therefore it must be held that the sale to Somasundara was a sale in the original proceedings. There is also no substance in the third contention raised on behalf of respondent No. 1. The property sold to Somasundara was in truth and in fact the same property which was sold to respondent No. 1. In the first case the property was bought subject to a mortgage; in the second case, the property was the same but the mortgage had been replaced by a mortgage decree, The property was the same property and what was sold was the right, title and interest of the judgment-debtor in it. For the reasons indicated the appeal succeeds and the appellant is entitled to his costs throughout.

HAKIM ALI—RESPONDENT

Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act (VIII of 1939), s. 4—Suit by wife for dissolution of marriage on ground of her conversion—Act coming into force during pendency of appeal—S 4 if applicable—Evidence—Duty of Court—Judge cannot in rejecting evidence of important witness rely on information gained from other cases—Interpretation of Statutes—Declaratory statute.

A wife instituted a suit for a declaration that her marriage had come to an end on account of her conversion to Christian faith. After the decision of the suit but during the pendency of the appeal Act VIII of 1939 came into force :

Held, that the right claimed by the wife had not vested in her under any statute and consequently she could not insist that that right was indefeasible. The law applicable to the question was as contained in s. 4 of Act VIII of 1939, by which no marriage was dissolved merely on account of change of faith.

A Judge cannot travel beyond the record of the case before him and rely for the rejection of the important witness in the case on information gained from other cases heard by him.

A declaratory statute has a retrospective effect.

S. A. from the decree of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated June 20, 1939.

Mr. Harbhajan Dass, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shahzada Sher Jan Khan, for the Respondent.

Judgment—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was instituted by Mst. Fazal Begam for a declaration that her marriage with Hakim Ali had come to an end on account of her conversion to Christian faith. The senior Subordinate Judge in a judgment which is improperly brief decreed the suit. On appeal, the District Judge reversed the judgment of the trial Court and dismissed the suit. Hence this appeal. Counsel for the appellant contends that the finding of fact arrived at by the District Judge on the basis of which the suit has been dismissed cannot be maintained in law, inasmuch as he has travelled beyond the record of the case before him and relied for the rejection of the only important witness in the case on information gained from other cases heard by him. The objection raised by Counsel is no doubt valid. The District Judge in rejecting the evidence of Pastor Abdul Karim on the grounds taken from some other cases disposed of by him has no doubt departed from the fundamental rules of evidence and has thus laid himself open to attack but his order dismissing the suit must be maintained on another ground. This suit was instituted on August 31, 1938 and was decided by the trial Court on November 28, 1938. An appeal against the order of the trial Court was instituted in due course and disposed of on June 20, 1939. In the meantime Act VIII of 1939 came into force on March 17, 1939. The preamble stated that it was:

"an Act to consolidate and clarify the provisions of Muslim Law relating to suits for dissolution of marriage by woman married under Muslim Law and to remove doubts as to the effect of the renunciation of Islam by a married Muslim woman on her marriage tie."

By s. 4 of the Act, it was provided that the renunciation of Islam by a married Muslim woman or her conversion to a faith other than Islam would not by itself operate to dissolve her marriage. An appeal is a continuation of the suit, and as soon as Act VIII of 1939 came into operation, it affected all questions relating to the dissolution of marriage on the ground of renunciation of faith. Consequently, when the appeal was pending, the law applicable to the question before the District Judge was as contained in s. 4 of Act VIII of 1939 by which no marriage was dissolved merely on account of change of faith Counsel for the appellant however contends that inasmuch as this statute came into existence after the appellant's renunciation had cancelled her marriage the statute should not be given a retrospective effect so as to deprive her of a vested right. In my view however there is no force in this contention. In the first place, no right vested in the appellant. The interpretation put by certain Courts on the Muhammadan Law in relation to the effect of apostasy on marriage no doubt favoured the appellant at the time when renunciation took place, but that interpretation was not the final word in the matter and the possibility of a contrary view being more in consonance with the Muhammadan Law was not altogether excluded. The right claimed by the appellant had not vested in her under any statute and consequently she cannot insist that that right was indefeasible. Secondly even if any right had vested in her under a statute or otherwise, she could be deprived of it, so long as the case was not decided, by the new statute, the object of which was merely to resolve doubts arising in the matter.

Therefore as soon as the enactment was passed, it amounted to a declaration that all the interpretations put by the Courts upon the Muhammadan Law in regard to the effect of apostasy on a subsisting marriage, that apostasy ipso facto cancelled the marriage, were wrong. A declaratory statute has a retrospective effect. References in this connexion may be made to Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, p. 192 and Craies on Statute Law, p. 341. As an instance, it is cited in both the treatises that in Attorney-General v. Theobald (1) s. 11 Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, as to the liability of voluntary settlements to stamp duty was held retrospective although the litigation in which its terms were involved had commenced before it was passed. "Acts of this kind" as remarked by Craies, "like judgments, decide like cases pending when the judgments are given, but do not reopen decided cases." Further, as observed by Craies at p. 342:

'if a statute is passed for the purpose of protecting the public against some evil or abuse, it will be allowed to operate retrospectively although by such operation it will deprive some person or persons of a vested right."

I am clear therefore that although when the suit was instituted by the appellant, she could urge that her marriage had been ipso facto cancelled on account of her change, of faith, the plea was not open to her when the appeal against her was being heard by the District Judge and that consequently her suit could not but be dismissed. I accordingly dismiss this appeal, but in the circumstances of the case make no order as to costs.

Provident Funds Rules, r. 17, Note 1—Hindu wife obtaining decree for separate maintenance from husband, whether judicially separated from husband—Depositor's death — Proceedings to recover provident fund — Parties, if should obtain succession certificate.

Main purpose of the Provident Fund Rules is to preserve for the members of the depositor's family the right to receive his provident fund, and the framers of the rules did not intend to exclude a Hindu wife who had obtained a decree for separate maintenance. The status of such a Hindu wife is not, in any real sense, equivalent to the status of a wife judicially separated under the Divorce Act, and there is no reason why a Hindu wife who has been placed in the unfortunate position of having to sue for separate maintenance owing to her husband's conduct should for any purpose be considered as outside the list of those who are entitled to benefit under the rules.

The parties to a proceeding to recover provident fund after depositor's death are under no liability to obtain any succession certificate; the amount vests in them upon the death of the depositor.

A. against the decree of the Additional Judge, City Civil Court, Madras, dated March 7, 1939.

Messrs. A. V. Viswanatha Sastry and S. Amudachari, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Subramaniam and C. Vedagirirama Sastry, for the Respondent.

King, J. — The subject-matter of this appeal is the sum standing to the credit of one D. G. Chetty in Provident Fund. D. G. Chetty was a Govt. servant who died in the year 1937. In 1928, the present plaintiff, who is D. G. Chetty's widow filed a suit against him for separate maintenance and in May 1929, was given a decree. In August 1929, D. G. Chetty made a fresh nomination under the rules of the Provident Fund by which he appointed defendant No. 1 his mistress, as the person entitled to receive the amount of the fund in case of his death. The question before us is whether the plaintiff or defendant No. 1 is entitled to this money, or to put it in other words, whether the nomination made by the subscriber in August 1929, is a valid nomination under the rules or not. The learned Additional City Civil Judge has held that the nomination is valid and comes within the scope of Note 1 to r. 17. Rule 17 deals with the disposition of a provident fund upon the death of a subscriber before retirement and mentions the various contingenies which will arise. Under Note, 1, it says that :

"A husband may make a written application for the exclusion of his wife from participation under cl. (b), if she has been judicially separated from him....."

The question before us can therefore once again be stated in this way. "Is a Hindu wife who has obtained a decree for separate maintenance judicially separated from her husband ?" If she is judicially separated from him, it is conceded that the nomination in this case is within the powers of the depositor under the rule. If she has not been, the effect of the Provident Fund Rules is to vest the whole of his fund in the plaintiff. The learned Additional City Civil Judge holds that the words 'judicially separated' in this note must be given an extended meaning. In para. 32 in setting out the argument of the learned Advocate for defendant No. 1, he says that "judicially separated" has to be interpreted as "meaning and including the judicial recognition or adjudication of the right of a person to live separately from her spouse." The learned City Civil Judge then goes on to point out various analogies between the position of a Hindu wife who has obtained a decree for separate maintenance and a Christian wife who has obtained a decree for judicial separation in the technical sense. We are emphatically of opinion that in arriving at the meaning of the words "judicially separated," we must take their technical meaning rather than a more popular and extended meaning unless there are very good reasons shown to the contrary from an analysis of the Provident Fund Rules themselves. The expression "judicial separation" and its cognate form "judicially separated" are not expressions to be found in the ordinary language. They are expressions of the law with a distinct and exact technical meaning. It is impossible in technical language to speak of a Hindu wife or husband as being judicially separated from one another. No doubt, if the words were construed apart from their legal context, it might be possible to say that when a Judge holds that a wife was justified in living apart from her husband, she had been separated from her husband, by judicial action. But, as we say, there must be cogent reasons to compel up to adopt any such extended meaning for these words.

When we examine the Provident Fund Rules as a whole, we are led to the irresistible conclusion that their main purpose is to preserve the rights of the family of the subscriber to receive his provident fund in the event of his untimely death. The word 'family' is defined in the rules and of course includes the depositor's wife. We think that there must be some strong reasons why a person who is still a member of the depositor's family should be excluded from the benefit of these rules. According to the interpretation which the learned Advocate for the respondent would have us adopt, the plaintiff, although she has herself suffered ill-treatment from her husband, has to be excluded from the benefit of these rules. We can see no reason why if the general purpose of the Provident Fund Rules is to ensure that a depositor's fund shall go in the absence of other members of his "family" to his wife, the fact that a wife has been driven by her husband's conduct to live apart from him and to sue for the maintenance to which she is entitled as a wife, should prevent her from receiving the amount of his provident fund after his death. The provisions of the law with regard to judicial separation are contained in ss. 22 to 25, Divorce Act (IV of 1869). According to s. 22 a decree for judicial separation is to replace a decree which had theretofore been in force for a divorce a mensa et toro. According to s. 24 :

"In every case of a judicial separation under this Act, the wife shall, from the date of the separation and whilst the separation continues, be considered as unmarried with respect to property of every description which she may acquire, or which may come to or devolve upon her."

According to s. 25 ;

'In every case of a judicial separation under this Act, the wife shall whilst so separated, be considered as an unmarried woman for the purposes of contract, and wrongs and injuries, and suing and being sued in any civil proceeding; and her husband shall not be liable in respect of any contract, act or costs entered into or done, omitted or incurred by her during the separation."

Under s. 23, a decree for judicial separation may be granted on the application of either the husband or the wife. As already mentioned, the learned City Civil Judge has drawn several analogies between the position of a Hindu wife who obtains a decree for separate maintenance and a Christian wife who obtains a decree for judicial separation under the Divorce Act. But this analysis of the sections of the Divorce Act shows that judicial separation is a separation far wider than the relationship existing between a Hindu husband and wife in the situation of the depositor and the plaintiff in this case. We think that the first note to r. 17 of the rules was inserted not in order to give the depositor wider lattitude in the disposition of his own property, but in order to exclude for the purposes of the rules a wife who has been in the strict sense of that term "judicially separated" because such a wife although not completely divorced from him and therefore not completely excluded from his family, is yet, partly excluded from his family, to the considerable extent shown by the various sections to which we have referred. A Christian wife judically separated from her husband is therefore very near in status to a stranger, and we think the intention of the framers of the rules of the provident fund must have been to allow the depositor to ignore her as if she had been completely divorced from him.

When we look at the rules from this point of view, that their main purpose is to preserve for the members of the depositor's family the right to receive his provident fund, we can see no reason to think that the framers of the rules would have intended to exclude a Hindu wife who had obtained a decree for separate maintenance. The status of such a Hindu wife is not, in any real sense, equivalent to the status of a wife judicially separated under the Divorce Act, and we can see no reason why a Hindu wife who has been placed in the unfortunate position of having to sue for separate maintenance owing to her husband's conduct should for any purpose be considered as outside the list of those who are entitled to benefit under the rules. We accordingly are of opinion that the decision of the learned Additional City Civil Judge is wrong, and that this appeal must be allowed and that the plaintiffs' suit with respect to the provident fund must be decreed with costs throughout. The learned Additional City Civil Judge has appended a note to para. 43 of his judgment to say that "the decree in this suit shall not be treated as exonerating either the plaintiff or defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 2 from obtaining the necessary certificate under the Succession Act or the Administrator General's Act."

It was, in our opinion, quite unnecessary for this note to have been added to the judgment. The parties to a proceeding of this kind are under no liability to obtain any succession certificate; the amount vests in them upon the death of the depositor.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4—Death of defendant during pendency of suit —Person brought on record not real legal representative of deceased defendant—Decree passed against such person—Whether binding on real legal representative—Conditions necessary for making such representation effective against true representative stated.

When a person who is impleaded in a suit as a legal representative of another, which he is not, sufficiently represents the estate the result is that a decree passed against him in an assumed representative character is binding on the true representative though the latter was no party to the same. The conditions necessary for making such representation effective against the true representative are that the plaintiff must have acted bona fide, the decree obtained must be free from fraud or collusion, and the person wrongly impleaded must have been impleaded in a representative capacity and the decree must have been passed against him as representing the estate of the deceased; the plaintiff must have been ignorant of facts which operate to displace the title of the supposed legal representative and the person having the real title must not have intervened during the pendency of the suit. 120 Ind. Cas. 65 (1) and Malkarjun v. Narhari (2), relied on, 3 Ind. Cas. 737 (3), distinguished.

Where in a suit for ejectment, on the death of the defendant, the plaintiff instead of bringing on record the deceased's daughter who was the real legal representative of the defendant, has brought on record the daughter's son without attempting to give any explanation of his act in not impleading the daughter of the deceased defendant, he cannot claim to have acted bona fide in this matter and the decree passed in his favour is not binding upon the daughter of the deceased defendant who is found in possession of the property in question and cannot be executed against her.

A. from a decision of the Subordinate Judge of 3rd Court, Patna, dated June 9, 1939.

Mr. S. Barmeshwar Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Sarjoo Prasad and K. Deyal, for the Respondent.

Judgment.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit by the plaintiff for a declaration that a decree obtained by the appellants is not binding on her and for an injunction restraining the appellants from executing that decree. The appellants, case is that one Jhalia was a tenant at will of a certain house belonging to the appellants. On her death the appellants settled it with Jhalia's sister Phulia and Ramkishun, the son of Mst. Gunjari, daughter of Phulia as joint tenants. According to the appellants this was a tenancy at will. A suit was instituted to eject these tenants on the ground that they were not rendering service as potters to the appellants as they had agreed to do. While this suit was pending Phulia died. An application was made stating that Ramkishun was her legal representative and should be substituted in her place. The suit resulted in a decree for ejectment being passed in favour of the appellants. The present suit is by Gunjari, the daughter of Phulia, for a declaration that the decree is not binding on her and for an injunction to restrain the decree-holders from disturbing her possession by executing the decree.

The first Court negatived the plaintiff's claim that the tenancy of Phulia and Ramkishun was a permanant one and found that they were mere tenants at will. In that view of the matter the Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The Appellate Court has held that it is not necessary in the circumstances of the case to decide whether the tenancy was a permanent one as claimed by the plaintiff or a mere tenancy at will as alleged by the appellants. The Court has taken the view that the plaintiff was a legal representative of her mother Phulia and that as there is no decree passed against her she is not bound by the decree and as she is in possession she is entitled to an injunction restraining the decree-holders from disturbing that possession in execution of their decree.

On behalf of the defendants-appellants it has been contended that in the circumstances Phulia was sufficiently represented by Ramkishun in the suit and that that representation has the effect of binding the plaintiff in the present suit who is the true representative of Phulia. Reliance was placed on the decision in Sanna Govappa v. Rodda Sanna Govappa (1) in which the circumstances in which a person may be held to be bound by a decree to which he is not a party are discussed. It was there observed that when a person who is impleaded as a legal representative of another, which he is not, in a suit sufficiently represents the estate, the result is that a decree passed against him in an assumed representative character is binding on the true representative though the latter was no party to the same. The conditions necessary for making such representation effective against the true representative are that the plaintiff must have acted bona fide, the decree obtained must be free from fraud or collusion, and the person wrongly impleaded must have been impleaded in a representative capacity and the decree must have been passed against him as representing the estate of the deceased, the plaintiff must have been ignorant of facts which operate to displace the title of the supposed legal representative and the person having the real title must not have intervened during the pendency of the suit. That decision is in accord with the principle of the decision in Malkarjun v. Narhari (2). In such cases the first requisite is that the plaintiff must have acted bona fide. In the case of Kaliappan Servaikaran v. Varadarajulu (3), referred to in the case relied upon by the learned Advocate for the appellants, on the death of the defendant, his divided brother's son was brought on the record as his legal representative ignoring his daughter who was the true legal representative. No attempt was made to justify the plaintiff in ignoring the true legal representative of the deceased defendant. It was held that in the absence of any satisfactory explanation plaintiff could not be held to have acted bona fide and accordingly the decree was not binding on the daughter of the deceased defendant. Here in the present litigation, the decree-holder made no attempt to give any explanation of his act in not impleading the daughter of the deceased defendant and, in my opinion, therefore, he cannot claim to have acted bona fide in this matter. As the plaintiff has been found to be in possession of the house in question she is entitled to protect that possession until there is in existence a decree which is binding on her.

The decision of the Court below is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

TRAVANCORE NATIONAL BANK, LTD. AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS

Surety—Discharge of—Composition between principal debtor and creditor — Surety is not absolved from liability when he has expressly contracted to remain liable even after principal's discharge — Banker and customer—Surety for customer for payments, made to latter under chit fund — Bank, if bound to disclose to surety its affairs regarding indebtedness of constituent.

Although a composition bond between the principal debtor and the creditor extinguishes the debt to the principal debtor; yet it does not absolve the liability of the surety under the surety bond where the surety had expressly contracted to remain liable, notwithstanding the discharge of the principal. In such a case it cannot be contended that the discharge of the principal is an implied discharge of the surety. Cowper v. Smith (1) and Union Bank of Manchaster Ltd. v. Beech (2), relied on.

Where a bank calls upon its customer to furnish surety with regard to the payment made under a chit fund, as such payment cannot be distinguished from any other obligation, it is for the surety to interrogate the debtor on the question of his indebtedness. Under such circumstances that the bank is not compelled to break the confidence of its constitutents and disclose its affairs to the surety in respect of the former's indebtedness. 128 Ind. A. against the decree of the City Civil Judge, Madras, dated March 22, 1938.

Mr. S. Athmanathan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. John and Row, for the Respondents.

Mockett, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants in a suit filed against them in the City Civil Court by the plaintiffs the Travancore National Bank, Ltd. The cause of action is very simple. It is on a surety bond Ex. I by which the defendants made themselves liable to pay to the plaintiffs the amount due from one K. E. Sodawalla. Under Ex. I it will be seen that Sodawalla had been declared the successful bidder at the auction chit on February 9, 1935, and that he was paid a sum of Rs. 3,145. The evidence on behalf of the Bank was as given by P. W No. 1 that they refused to pay that amount unless, as was their custom, sureties were furnished by the successful bidder of the chit fund. Two such sureties were forthcoming and they are now defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in this case. They signed a very formidable document Ex. I from which it will be seen that they made themselves liable in as comprehensive terms as possibly could proceed from the draftsman's pen. The term with which we are immediately concerned is contained in cl. 9 in which it is said :

"It is further agreed that any contract between the borrower and the lender by which the lender makes a composition with or promises to give time or not to sue the borrower will not discharge the surety or sureties."

In fact under Ex. II the creditors of Sodawalla including the Travancore National Bank the plaintiffs, in an Insolvency Petition No. 541 of 1935 (High Court, Madras) agreed to accept a sum of four annas in the rupee in full satisfaction of their claims : so that there was as envisaged by cl. 9 a composition. The suit was laid for the whole of the amount due under the bond but it was rightly held in the lower Court that a decree could only be given for the amount less the amount received by the Bank under the composition Ex. II. It has been argued before us that this composition bond extinguishes the debt to the principal debtor and therefore there is no debt for which the sureties can be made liable. These very arguments have been put before the Courts in cases where the document was as identical with the document before us as it is possible for it to be with regard to its terms. In Cowper v. Smith (1), a document such as this was considered and the same arguments, as will be seen from the report, were put before the Court. Lord Abinger, C. B. stated that the deed entered into by the debtor was a composition deed and was within the express terms of the guarantee. It authorized the plaintiffs to compound with their debtor. Accordingly, as the surety had expressly contracted to remain liable, notwithstanding the discharge of the principal, it cannot now be contended that the discharge of the principal is an implied discharge of the surety. And with that the other learned Judges concurred. In a further decision Union Bank of Manchester Ltd. v. Beech (2), where Cowper v. Smith (1), was considered Pollock, C. B. disposed of an argument which has also been put before us in this case. He holds that the only distinction between the case in Cowper v. Smith (1), and the case before the Bench was that in the case then under consideration there was an absolute release but that in Cowper v. Smith (1), although there was not in terms a release there was what substantially amounted to the same thing. The learned Judge continues :

"Under a composition, a part is taken in satisfaction of the whole. Money accepted as a part of a debt is not a composition, but a part payment. Where there is a release, the creditor in effect says to the debtor, 'I release you from your debt'; whereas, if there is a composition only, the creditor in effect says, 'I agree to accept a portion of your debt in satisfaction and discharge of the whole.' The difference, however, is merely technical, and in substance they are the same thing."

It will be seen therefore that the construction of Ex. I has virtually been dealt with by authority which we are content to follow.

The next point argued before us was that there was a duty on the Bank to disclose Sodawalla's overdraft liability at the time the surety was taken. This point was made under two headings, first on the general liability of the bank under such circumstances and secondly a special liability in this case because it was alleged by the witnesses for the defence that in answer to questions by the defence as to the financial position of Sodawalla, the bank representative, P. W. No. 1, Mr. Kuruvilla assured defendant No. 1 that Sodawalla's financial position was beyond reproach. It is said by D. W. No. 2 that Mr. Kuruvilla stated "His account is one of the best. You need not be anxious. Only the rules require two signatures." With regard to the first aspect the contention of the defendants is clearly negatived by the decision of a Bench of this High Court reported in Imperial Bank of Inaia v. Avanashi Chettiar (3), where it is laid down that there is no general legal obligation on the part of a Bank to volunteer to a surety particulars of one of its constituent's indebtedness, for, this is a matter on which the surty has to inform himself. Section 143, Contract Act, on which the defendants rely, is as follows :

"Any guarantee which the creditor has obtained by means of keeping silence as to material circumstances is invalid."

This section has been considered and the High Court of Bombay in a judgment delivered by Sargent, C. J. in Balkrishna V. N. Kirtikar v. Bank of Bengal (4), took the view that the expression "keeping silence" in that section clearly implied intentional concealment as distinguished from mere non-disclosure which no doubt was a fatal objection in insurance policies. We agree with that view. In this particular case the facts are very simple. The Bank called upon its customer to furnish surety with regard to the payment made under a chit fund. We see no reason to distinguish a payment under a chit fund from any other obligation and under these circumstances surely it will be for the surety to interrogate the debtor. We agree that there is nothing in the authorities to suggest under such circumstances that the bank is compelled to break the confidence of the constitutents and disclose its affairs to the surety. With regard to the second aspect the learned Judge has disbelieved the evidence of the defendant. He is not prepared to accept the story that by fraudulent misrepresentation they were induced to enter into the surety bond and we see no reason to differ from that view. The result of our conclusion is that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

GOPAL DAS AND ANOTHER—JUDGMENT-DEBTORS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48—Court dismissing execution application on ground that case was old one and with intention of removing it from its list—Second application for same relief—Whether in continuation of old one—Second appeal—Question of law or fact—Terms of document—Intention to be inferred from—Question is one of law.

Where an application for execution is dismissed by the Court not because of the decree-holder's default or negligence but on the ground that the case was an old one and the Court intended to remove it from its list, the second application made for similar relief must be regarded as continuation of the first one. 186 Ind. Cas. 860, reversed.

Whether the interpretation of a particular order is a question of fact, or a question of law, or a question of mixed fact and law, depends on the circumstances of each particular case. The general rule is quite clear. Where intention is to be inferred from the terms of a document, the question is one of law, or mixed question of fact and law; where the intention is to be inferred from the other facts and circumstances tending to show what was the real intention of the Judge in passing that particular order, then the question may be either a question of pure fact, or again, may be a question of mixed fact and law.

L. P. A. against the judgment of Bhide, J., Reported in 186 Ind. Cas. 860.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. L. Puri, for the Respondent (Gopal Das.)

Dalip Singh, J.—A money decree was passed on June 7, 1924, against Gopal Das and Hari Singh in favour of the Municipal Committee of Hafizabad. On March 21, 1925, the amount granted by the trial Court was reduced to Rs. 1,700 and costs by the appellate Court. Thereafter, various execution applications were taken out but we are concerned in this appeal with the seventh execution application which was filed on February 19, 1936, for the arrest of both the judgment-debtors. Objections were put in by the judgment-debtors and on April 5, 1937, an order was passed rejecting the objections and directing the issue of warrants. The case was fixed for April 27, 1937. In the meantime a new Subordinate Judge, Mr. Manohar Singh, had taken over from the previous Judge and on the date in question he wrote the following order:

"Lala Baij Nath, Secretary of the decree-holder, present. He took dasti warrants and has returned them back without execution. He did not even care to hand them over to the Naib Sheriff at Hafizabad. Had he given them to the Naib Sheriff, he would have deputed some bailiff to execute them. The case is an old one. The decree-holder has acted very negligently in the matter. I am not prepared to give another opportunity. I dismiss this application. Let the record be consigned to the record room."

On the same date another execution application was put in asking for the issue of a warrant of arrest against the judgment-debtors and asking for any other relief that the Court might think fit and on that date warrants were issued without notice to the judgment-debtors. On the following day the Ahlmad drew the attention of the Court to the fact that this eighth application was barred under s. 48, Civil P. C. On April 29, 1937, the Court passed an order withdrawing the warrants and giving notice to the decree-holder to show cause why the present application should not be dismissed as barred by limitation. This notice was served on the decree-holder on May 3, the date fixed being June 10 for hearing. On June 10, the case was adjourned to July 14, on the ground that there was some talk of a compromise. On July 14, issues were struck in the present application. On July 27, 1937, the decree-holder put in an application praying for a review of the order of April 27, 1937, and also pleading that the present application was only in continution of the old application and should be treated as such, even though in terms it did not purport to be a revival or continuation of the old application. Having framed the necessary issues the trial Court held that the present application was not a continuation of the old application because the old application had been dismissed by him on the ground of negligence. As regards the petition for review of the order of April 27, 1937, he held that the review was barred by limitation and that there were no circumstances to justify a review. On the other issues he gave various findings and finally came to the conclusion that the present application was barred by limitation.

On appeal the learned District Judge only decided one point which was raised before him, and that was that the present application was not a fresh application but was a continuation of the old application and that the order passed on April 27, 1937, by the learned Subordinate Judge, though purporting to be an order of dismissal on the ground of negligence was really an order passed on the ground that the case was an old one and, therefore, should be dismissed on "statistical and administrative" reasons as put by the learned District Judge. Presumably this means that the learned Subordinate Judge, though purporting to write an order of dismissal for negligence, only endeavoured to show disposal of a case so as to lighten his own list, the fresh application being treated as a new case. On this ground he accepted the appeal and remanded the case back to the trial Court holding that the application was not barred by time.

On second appeal, the learned Judge in Single Bench held that the questions whether the present application was a fresh application or a continuation of the old application was a mixed question of law and fact in the circumstances of the case and that there was nothing in the order to show that the reason for the so-called dismissal was not what it purported to be. Therefore, the learned District Judge was not correct in his interpretation of the order as one really of suspension and not of dismissal and he, therefore, accepted the appeal and dismissed the application as time-barred under s. 4[2], Civil P. C.

From this order the Municipal Committee has come in Letters Patent Appeal and the learned Counsel for the appellant contends that the finding of the learned District Judge was a finding of fact and, therefore, could not be interfered with in second appeal. I do not agree with this contention. Whether the interpretation of a particular order is a question of fact, or a question of law, or a question of mixed fact and law, depends on the circumstances of each particular case. The general rule is quite clear. Where intention is to be inferred from the terms of a document, in this case the order, the question is one of law, or mixed question of fact and law; where the intention is to be inferred from the other facts and circumstances tending to show what was the real intention of the learned Judge in passing that particular order, then the question may be either a question of pure fact or, again, may be a question of mixed fact and law. In the circumstances of this particular case, the question of the interpretation of the order of the learned Subordinate Judge, was considered by the learned Judge, a Single Bench to turn on the interpretation of the document only. Viewed from that aspect, the matter would be one of law and it was open to the learned Judge to differ from the finding of the learned District Judge.

The question, however, remains as the sole question in this appeal, whether having regard to all the circumstances of the case and the facts immediately preceding and following the order passed, the intention of the Subordinate Judge was to dismiss the application of execution for the reason of the decree-holder's negligence, or whether the case being an old one, he intended to remove it from his list, and bring it back in a new form "to start with a clean slate" as put by learned Counsel for the appellant. So far as the terms of the order are concerned, both interpretations are possible, for whereas the learned Judge begins by stating the facts which constitute the negligence of the decree-holder, he also states the fact that the case is an old one before proceeding to the order dismissing the application. There is, however, one circumstance, namely, the issue of a warrant of arrest without notice to the judgment-debtors on the fresh application that was filed on the same date, which tends to show that the learned Judge was getting rid of an old case rather than seriously intending to dismiss the case for the default of the decree-holder. The decree-holder has pointed out that though he took the summonses dasti, he took them at his own request and not because of any order of the Court and as the judgment debtors were not found by him, it was no use handing over the warrants to the bailiff or the Naib Sheriff at Hafizabad and hence all he could do was to return them to the Court at Gujranwala as unserved. Bearing in mind all these facts it seems to us that the intention of the learned Subordinate Judge was not to dismiss the application for negligence but the intention was to remove an old execution application from the list and deal with it afresh under the guise of a new application. I would point out to the learned Subordinate Judge that it is not condusive to the dignity of the Court, or even ethically justifiable to pass orders which purport to be in one form and are intended really to represent a totally different situation, that is if our reading of his intention is correct. However be that as it may, in all the circumstances of the case I would accept this appeal and hold that the present application was a continuation of the old application and was not time-barred under s. 48. The case would, therefore, be returned to the learned executing Court for disposal according to the law. As the Municipal Committee were also in default in not appealing from the order of April 27, 1937, though they received notice that the Judge intended to treat it as an order of dismissal on May 3, 1937, I would leave the parties to bear their own costs throughout.

Tek Chand, J.—I agree.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 133—Nali claimed as part of public way—Its long user by other party, if bona fide assertion of claim—Criminal Courts' jurisdiction under s. 133, whether ousted.

Long user by a person of what is claimed to be a part of the public way e. g., gairmazrua-am-nali, may be taken as a bona fide assertion of claim ousting the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court to pass a summary order under s. 133 against him. 108 Ind. Cas. 559 (1), followed.

Cr. Ref. made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Patna, dated September 7/10,1940.

Mr. Saileswar De, for the Reference.

Messrs. Syed Ali Khan and Ashique Hussain Akbari, against the Reference.

Judgment.—This reference must be accepted. Instead of attending to the provisions of s. 139-A of the Criminal P. C. the learned Magistrate who dealt with this case began by erroneously noting that no cause had been shown by the petitioners. They had shown cause and what is more, they had denied the existence of the public right alleged by the other side. The Record of Rights showed the land as gairmazrua-am-nali, but the claim of the other side was that this was a public passage. It does not appear on what materials the learned Magistrate came to the conclusion that it was a public passage. He has also failed to appreciate the case of the petitioners that the huts and nads put up by them were put up long ago when the nali was filled up, and that, as observed by Jwala Prasad, J. in Janki Ram v. Saukhi Panjara (1), long user by a person of what is claimed to be a part of the public way may be taken as a bona fide assertion of claim ousting the jurisdiction of the Criminal Court to pass a summary order under s. 133 against him. It is not necessary to refer to several recently reported decisions of this Court under s. 139-A, for the section itself is clear enough in its terms and is, at any rate, not so complicated that a Magistrate of any standing should have much difficulty in complying with its simple requirements. Where, however, as in the present case, the Magistrate is unable, for some unknown reason to read the petitions filed before him, miscarriages of justice are bound to occur even if the Magistrate had been careful enough to attend to the law. The order of the Magistrate is set aside.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 180, 182—Application for possession by decree-holder auction-purchaser—Article applicable.

An application for possession by an auction-purchaser, whether he is a decree-holder or a stranger, is governed by Art. 180, Sch. I, Lim. Act and not by Art. 182. There is nothing to indicate that the Legislature intended this article to apply to those auction-purchasers who were strangers. 159 Ind. Cas. 279 (1), followed, 150 Ind. Cas. 11 (2), relied on.

C. R. against an order and decree of the Additional Judge, Peshwar Division, Peshawar, dated May 6, 1938.

Lala Wazir Chand, for the Petitioner.
Lala Madan Lal, for the Respondent

Mir Ahmad, J.—On February 16, 1934, the petitioner obtained a decree for Rs. 500 against the respondent and also against a house belonging to the respondent The decree was not framed according to O. XXXIV, Civil P. C. In execution of this decree, the house was auctioned and purchased by the decree-holder himself. The sale was confirmed on July 2, 1934 and sale certificate was issued. On December 18, 1934, the decree-holder auction-purchaser applied for possession of the house bought by him. After some proceedings the application was filed on June 27, 1935. The final order is as follows :

"The decree-holder is absent. The judgment-debtor is also for the present absconding. The papers be filed."

On January 14, 1938, the decree holder auction-purchaser presented the application which is now before us. He asked for possession of the house to be delivered to him and referred to the previous petition which was filed on June 27, 1935. Objection was taken by the judgment-debtor that this second petition of the decree-holder auction-purchaser was barred under Art. 180. Lim. Act. The trial Judge rejected the plea and held that Art. 182, Lim. Act, applied. An appeal was preferred to the District Court at Peshawar. The Additional Judge accepted the plea of the judgment-debtor. He followed Abdul Aziz Sahib v. Chokkan Chettiar (1). The appeal therefore prevailed and the application for delivery of possession was rejected. The decree-holder auction-purchaser has come up on revision to this Court The matter was referred by a Judge of this Court to the Bench because an interesting question of law was involved. The question to decide is whether Art. 180 of Sch. I, Lim. Act, applies to the application dated January 14, 1938 or Art. 182. Article 180 runs thus :

180. By a purchaser of immovable property at a sale in execution of a decree for delivery of possession	Three years.	When the sale becomes absolute.

The relevant portion of Art. 182 is as follows :

For the execution of a decree or order of any Civil Court not provided for by Art. 183 or by s. 48 of the Civil P. C., 1908.	Three years; or where a certified copy of the decree or order has been registered, six years.	1. The date of the decree or order, or . . 5. (Where the application next hereinafter mentioned has been made) the date of the final order passed on an application made in accordance with law to the proper Court for execution, or to take some step-in-aid of execution of the decree or order, or . .

The learned Counsel for the petitioner has argued that a decree-holder is a party to the execution proceedings and when he becomes an auction-purchaser he continues to be such a party and consequently his application for taking possession should be treated as an application for execution under Art. 182, Lim. Act. He asked that in the circumstances the previous application given by his client on December 18, 1934 should be considered as a step-in-aid under Art. 182. He pointed out that if the date on which that application was disposed of i. e., June 27, 1935 is taken as the starting point for fresh limitation, then the present application was within time.

The learned Counsel for the respondent on the other hand argued that Art. 180, Lim. Act, was a specific article governing applications for delivery of possession presented by auction-purchasers. He contended that the execution was completed and fully satisfied when the sale certificate was issued and the decree-holder paid up, and consequently there were no execution proceedings in force to be governed by Art. 182. He therefore concluded that Art. 182 did not apply and Art. 180 applied which gives three years to the auction-purchaser from the date when the sale was made absolute and does not allow any fresh starting point of limitation in the shape of a step-in-aid. He maintained that the order of the lower Appellate Judge was correct on this view of the case.

The only authority directly bearing on the point is that of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court which is reported in Abdul Aziz Sahib v. Chokkan Chettiar (1). It is in favour of the respondent. There is also a remark in the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chandramani Saha v. Anarjan Bibi (2) which supports the view of the respondent. We would for convenience sake reproduce the relevant passages for reference. Their Lordships of the Madras High Court observed as follows :

"As Art. 180 applies to an application for possession by a decree-holder purchaser, the residuary Art. 181 does not apply. Nor can the application for delivery be regarded as an application for execution. So Art. 182 cannot apply ; Art. 180 being the more specified article must therefore apply."

The question involved in the case before their Lordships of the Privy Council was as to the terminus a quo for applications to which Art. 180 applies. The words used in the article are "when the sale becomes absolute." It was urged on one side that the sale became absolute when it was confirmed. On the other side, it was contended that it became absolute when all proceedings including appeals and revisions relating to the sale had been concluded. Their Lordships held that the sale became absolute on the date when the appeal against the order refusing to set aside the sale was disposed of. Their Lordships when discussing the case remarked as follows :

"There is no doubt that Art. 180, Lim. Act, 1908, is applicable to the matter now under consideration. It provides that a purchaser of immovable property at a sale in execution of a decree for delivery of possession, must make the application within three years from the time when the sale becomes absolute."

We are of the opinion that the view taken by their Lordships of the Madras High Court is correct and an application for possession by an auction-purchaser, whether he is a decree-holder or a stranger, is governed by Art. 180, Sch. I, Lim. Act. There is nothing to indicate that the Legislature intended this article to apply to those auction-purchasers who were strangers and we do not see any justification for reading into the article any such exception as that suggested by the petitioner's Counsel. We may note that there was no such provision in the previous Lim. Act and Art. 180 was specially introduced in the Lim. Act of 1908. The Legislature was, therefore, devising a special limitation, and distinction between a decree-holder auction-purchaser and a stranger auction-purchaser, if intended would have been clearly brought out when enacting the article. Moreover, the remark of their Lordships of the Privy Council also means that their Lordships were of the view that Art. 180 applies to an application by a decree-holder auction-purchaser for possession. In the case before their Lordships the auction-purchaser was a decree-holder as is indicated by the following sentence.

"The question for determination is whether the appellants who purchased with the leave of the Court at two auction sales certain mortgaged property in execution of two mortgage decrees in their favour are entitled to delivery of possession of the said property."

It was argued by the learned Counsel for the petitioner in the alternative that the second application should be considered a continuation of the first application, because nothing definite was done in connection with the first application. In support of this proposition he referred us to a passage in the head note of Abdul Aziz Sahib v. Chokkan Chettiar (1) which reads as follows :

"An application for possession of property was made by the purchaser within three years of the confirmation of sale. An order on this application was made by the Court, which order was not on merits of the case and did not amount to a refusal of any of the reliefs claimed by the applicant hence not compelling him to prefer an appeal against the order. Another application was then presented by the applicant within a year of the last application requesting for possession of the property purchased: Held, that the latter application was the continuation of the previous one and therefore was within time"

To understand this head note, which lays down more or less an abstract proposition, we would reproduce the portion of the judgment which deals with the facts relating to this aspect of the case :

"Within three years of the High Court's order i.e., September 1, 1930 the decree-holder by M. P. No. 561 of 1930 applied for delivery of possession of the properties purchased. The property purchased comprised a house and certain lands. The house was Item No. 2 of the application. When the Amin proceeded to deliver possession of the house, on Abdul Ghaffar Sahib claiming that his wife Amina

Bi has a share in the house bolted the outer door from inside and locked the same and prevented the Amin and the auction-puchaser from going inside. Afraid of a disturbance the Amin returned and sent his report on September 11, 1930. Nothing is stated by the Amin as to the delivery of possession of the lands. When the matter came up before the District Munsif, he passed the following order 'possession was not given on account of obstruction. Petition dismissed. This is dated September 26, 1930 i. e., four days before the end of the quarter.

It is our duty to point out that this order is a very improper order. In the first place nothing was done by the Amin as to the other item, viz., the lands. Even as to the house, the obstruction was by a person claiming a share in it. It is true that the house is probably not divided by metes and bounds and it is difficult to deliver physical possession of the remaining share as to which there was no obstruction. But in such a case the Court ought to deliver such possession as the intangible interest may be capable of. Instead of doing this the District Munsif simply says that the petition is dismissed. One thing is noticeable that throughout, i e., at the time of the attempted delivery and at the time of the order there was no obstruction or opposition on the part of the judgment-debtors. When there was no opposition by the judgment-debtors and the obstruction was only by a third person to a limited extent, there is no reason why the portion as to which there was no obstruction by the third person and no opposition by the judgment-debtors should not be delivered. And it is also clear that the District Munsif never meant to refuse such a relief. The order is passed in a mechanical way without adverting to the details of the matter before him, the desire obviously being to close the petition and to show that it was not pending at the end of the quarter. It has again and again been held that such a disposal is not a judicial disposal on the merits. It cannot be regarded that any relief claimed by the petitioner was refused to him so as to compel him to appeal to an Appellate Court."

We do not think that in this case any such question arises. The decree-holder absented himself and the Court had to dismiss his petition. He had therefore to thank himself for the consequences. Consequently, we hold that this argument does not apply to the present case. In the result, we agree with the lower Appellate Court that the application is not competent and we dismiss the petition for revision with costs. Pleader's fee Rs. 16.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Case No. 13 of Foruth Criminal Sessions of 1940

September 27, 1940

KRISHNASWAMI AYYANGAR, J.

In re K. KRISHNAN AND ANOTHER—ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 287, 209, 342—Purpose for which Court is entitled to put questions to accused under s. 342—Written statement by accused in lieu of answers to questions to be put by Court under s. 209, whether record of examination by or before committing Magistrate within meaning of s. 287—Admissibility in evidence.

The purpose for which the Court is entitled to put questions to the accused under s. 342, Criminal P. C., is identical with the purpose indicated in s. 209, namely to afford the accused an opportunity to explain such circumstances as appear in the evidence against him. The questions which are to be put are qustions to be put by the Court and the answers to be recorded are the answers to those questions. There is no warrant for the accused or his advisers taking advantage of the occasion to prepare a written statement beforehand and put it in, in lieu of the explanation which is to be elicited and only to be elicited by questions by the Court. Such a written statement does not come within s. 287, as it cannot be said to be a document containing the examination of the accused duly recorded by or before the committing Magistrate and therefore it cannot be tendered in evidence.

Messrs. E. A. Lobo and T. S. Venkataraman, for the Accused.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—It appears that in this case while the preliminary enquiry was being held by the committing Magistrate, the accused was put the following question after the evidence for the prosecution had been recorded: "Q.—You have heard the evidence of prosecution witnesses; what have you to say?" The accused gave the following answer: "A.—I am filing my written statement." That written statement appears to be a long document consisting of 24 pages of typed matter. The question now arises as to whether this long typed statement filed by accused No. 1 before the Magistrate comes within s. 287, Criminal P. C., and whether it is a document containing the examination of the accused duly recorded by or before the committing Magistrate. If the document contains the record of the examination by or before the committing Magistrate, it is the duty of the prosecutor to tender it and read it as evidence. But for reasons which will be mentioned, it does not appear to be such a document. The written statement was filed in place of the answers to be given by the accused, at the stage at which the Magistrate had to question him under s. 209, Criminal P. C. Section 209, Criminal P. C., defines the purpose for which the Magistrate is authorized to interrogate the accused, and the stage at which he is to do so. Section 209 (1) says:

"When the evidence referred to in s. 208, subss. (1) and (3), has been taken and he has (if necessary) examined the accused for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him such Magistrate shall, if he finds that there are not sufficient grounds for committing the accused person for trial, record his reasons and discharge him, unless it appears to the Magistrate, that such person should be tried before himself or some other Magistrate, in which case he shall proceed accordingly."

What the committing Magistrate is called upon to do by the terms of the section is to place before the accused the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him and afford him an opportunity, if he likes to take advantage of it, to explain those circumstances. Far from the section conferring any privilege on the accused to file a written statement, it merely casts a duty upon the Magistrate to question the accused and record his answers, if any, for the limited purpose specified in the section. There is another section relating to the matter under consideration in Chap. XXV containing the general provisions as to inquiries and trials, namely s. 342. Clause (1) of this section says :

"For the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, the Court may, at any stage of any inquiry or trial, without previously warning the accused, put such questions to him as the Court considers necessary, and shall, for the purpose aforesaid, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence."

Clause (2) says :

"The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, or by giving false answers to them ; but the Court and the jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just."

Clause (3) says :

"The answers given by the accused may be taken into consideration in such inquiry or trial, and put in evidence for or against him in any other inquiry into or trial for, any other offence which such answers may tend to show, he has committed."

On the face of it, this section indicates the general procedure to be followed in the matter of judicial interrogation of an accused person and the extent to which the answers elicited are to be made use of, for deciding upon the guilt or innocence of the accused. The purpose for which the Court is entitled to put questions to the accused under this section is identical with the purpose indicated in s. 209, namely to afford the accused an opportunity to explain such circumstances as appear in the evidence against him. The questions which are to be put are questions to be put by the Court and the answers to be recorded are the answers to these questions. There is no warrant for the accused or his advisers taking advantage of the occasion to prepare a written statement beforehand and put it in, in lieu of the explanation which is to be elicited and only to be elicited by quesions by the Court. I am aware of the practice that has been sometimes followed, of allowing the accused to file written statements in inquiries and trials. Written statements so prepared and filed are generally, as is well known, prepared with the assistance of the friends and legal advisers of the accused in order to present the case in as favourable a light as possible, with a view to exculpate the accused or minimize his guilt. The Code does not contemplate such a procedure. What it contemplates and what would be in fact really useful for the decision of the case is what the accused can himself say by way of explanation, and not what others can say for him. There is no warrant in the Code for the outcome of the labours of more capable and brainy persons being considered by the Court under s. 287. The practice has been time and again condemned but does not appear to have wholly disappeared. I now add my protest also in the hope that it will be laid to rest. The written statement of accused No. 1 in this case is an extreme type and I must exclude it from the records of the case. For the same reasons, the written statement of accused No. 2 though less objectionable in point of length must also be excluded.

N.-D Order accordingly.

Where, therefore, an accused who had three previous convictions for offences under the old Act of 1914, was convicted under s. 112 of Act of 1939, for breach of r. 79 (viii) of Motor Vehicles Rules of 1940, for carrying passengers in excess and was sentenced to a fine of Rs. 100 :

Held, that the fine of Rs. 100 was illegal and must be reduced to Rs. 20.

Held, further that the proper course for the Magistrate in such a case was to cancel the accused's licence for a period of at least six months, and if this accused was brought up again for an offence under the Motor Vehicles Act, the Magistrate would do well to cancel his licence either for a period of one year or six months.

Cr. Ref. made by the Sessions Judge of Unao, dated December 12, 1940.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Crown.

Mr. Iqbal Ali, for the Accused.

Judgment.—This is a reference under s. 438 of the Criminal P. C. by the learned Sessions Judge of Unao recommending that the fine of Rs. 100 imposed on the accused be reduced to Rs. 20.

Bishun Narain, motor driver of motor lorry No. 171 of Unao, was convicted under s. 112 of Act IV of 1939 (Motor Vehicles Act) for breach of r. 79 (viii) of Motor Vehicles Rules of 1940, for carrying passengers in excess. He was entitled to carry 31 passengers, but was caught carrying 46 passengers of whom four were children.

The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hasanganj who tried the case sentenced the accused to a fine of Rs. 100 in view of his three previous convictions, or in default to undergo simple imprisonment for three months.

The accused filed a revision against his conviction and sentence, and the learned Sessions Judge has referred the case to this Court as in his opinion, the fine of Rs. 100 under s. 112 of the Motor Vehicles Act of 1939, is illegal.

The section is as follows :

"Whoever contravenes any provision of this Act or of any rule made thereunder shall, if no other penalty is provided for the offence, be punishable with fine which may extend to twenty rupees, or, if having been previously convicted of any offence under this Act he is again convicted of an offence under this Act, with fine which may extend to one hundred rupees."

Section 134 of the said Act repeals the Indian Motor Vehicles Act of 1914 and there if no saving clause in Act IV of 1939.

The question for consideration is whether the three previous convictions of the accused under the Act of 1914 can be taken into account in this case. If so, the imposition of fine of Rs. 100 is correct. If not, the maximum amount under s. 112 is Rs. 20 only.

The learned Assistant Govt. Advocate has conceded that the previous convictions cannot be taken into consideration in view of the wordings of s. 112. The words are "if having been previously convicted of any offence under this Act, he is again convicted of an offence under this Act." The applicant had three previous convictions under the old Act. In my opinion, the words "this Act" do not include convictions under the old Act.

I, therefore, accept the reference and reduce the fine from Rs. 100 to Rs. 20.

I must point out for the benefit and future guidance of the learned Magistrate who tried this case, that the accused seems incorrigible and the fine which is imposed on him probably will be paid by the owner of the motor lorry. It is no punishment to the accused. The proper course for the Magistrate was to cancel the accused's licence for a period of at least six months, and if this accused is brought up again for an offence under the Motor Vehicles Act, the Magistrate will do well to cancel his licence either for a period of one year or six months.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 562—First offence—Short sentence, passing of—Effect—Offence punishable with imprisonment under Penal Code—Whipping in lieu of punishment for aforesaid offence—Age limit—Ss. 3 and 5 Whipping Act (IV of 1909), should be read together with provisions of Criminal Procedure Code, relating to whipping

The passing of a short sentence of imprisonment upon a first offender is very often an introduction to a life of crime. The young convict when he comes out of prison has the stigma of prison upon him and yet his imprisonment has not been sufficiently long for its disciplinary influence to have effect, while he has been brought into the company of hardened offenders who may further guide him to a life of crime: Therefore, it is wrong to pass upon the accused, whether he is 18 or 20 years of age, a short sentence for the first offence 184 Ind. Cas. 311 (1), followed.

Section 3, Whipping Act, permits whipping in lieu of any punishment for which the offender is liable under the Criminal P. C. to imprisonment, irrespective of age. Hence for whipping for an offence of theft there is no age limit Sections 3 and 5 should be read together along with s. 393, Criminal P. C. and other provisions contained in the aforesaid Code which relate to whipping.

Cr Ref, made by the District Magistrate, Nawabshah, dated March 26, 1940.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, J. C.—This is a reference by the learned District Magistrate of Nawabshah who recommends that a sentence of three months' rigorous imprisonment for theft passed by the Resident Magistrate of Nawabshah upon a young offender, in the opinion of the Superintendent of the Hyderabad Central Prison more likely to be 18 years of age than 20, should be reduced to that already suffered, as, in the learned District Magistrate's opinion, he cannot be whipped, nor is it worth while now taking action under s. 562, Criminal P. C.

We have constantly stressed the harm that short sentences for first offences can cause and have drawn the attention of Magistrates to this particular aspect of punishment, for it is now generally agreed that the passing of a short sentence of imprisonment upon a first offender is very often an introduction to a life of crime. The young convict when he comes out of prison has the stigma of prison upon him and yet his imprisonment has not been sufficiently long for its disciplinary influence to have effect, while he has been brought into the company of hardended offenders who may further guide him to a life of crime: see Emperor v. Nur Muhammad Kalu Khan (1) at p. 750. Therefore, we think the learned Magistrate was obviously wrong when he passed upon the accused, whether he was 18 or 20 years of age, a short sentence for this first offence.

The District Magistrate thinks that as the convict is over 16 years of age he could not be whipped, but if he would refer to s. 3, Whipping Act, he will notice that for whipping for an offence of theft there is no limit of age. The limit of age is prescribed generally by the Criminal P. C. under s. 393, which in the case of males is over 45 years of age, while in the Whipping Act itself s. 5 refers to juvenile offenders who, according to the explanation to that section, is an offender under 16 years of age. But s. 3, Whipping Act, permits whipping in lieu of any punishment for which the offender is liable under the Code to imprisonment, irrespective of age. Under s. 393, Criminal P. C., on the other hand, a female cannot be whipped. All these sections of the Whipping Act should be read together and these sections must be read with the sections of the Criminal P. C. which relate to whipping. But under the circumstances of this case we do not think it is necessary to order whipping. We agree with the District Magistrate that it is now not worth while taking action under s. 562, Criminal P. C. and we accept his recommendation that the sentence of this Achar should be reduced to that already suffered which is already nearly two months. The District Magistrate should invite the attention of the Subordinate Magistrate to the ruling of this Court referred to above Emperor v. Nur Muhammad Kalu Khan (1) at p. 750, in which the harmful effects of short sentences are pointed out.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Application in Case No. 6 of the Fourth Criminal Sessions, 1940

October 2, 1940

KRISHNASWAMI AIYANGAR, J.

In re B. K. NARAYANA REDDI—ACCUSED

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 286, 540—Prosecution is not confined to witnesses examined before committing Magistrate—But prosecution is not entitled to have fresh witnesses summoned for purpose of their evidence being taken and considered at trial—Discretion under first portion of s. 540, should be exercised judicially—Criminal trial—Evidence—Accomplice—Corroboration.

Under s 286, Criminal P. C., the prosecution is not confined to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate but may examine other witnesses as well in the Sessions Court. But the Crown is not entitled to have fresh witnesses summoned for the purpose of their evidence being taken and considered in the trial. If the prosecution have additional witnesses ready and available to them for giving evidence, their evidence can be taken, and there is no legal objection to this course.

The first portion of s. 540, Criminal P. C., leaves a discretion in the Court to summon any person as a witness, a discretion which should as a matter of course be exercised judicially.

Evidence of accomplices must be received with caution and not ordinarily to be accepted without corroboration in material particulars.

The Crown Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Messrs. B. T. Sundararajan, C. S. Rajappa and C. S. Soman, for the Accused.

Order.—The accused B. K. Narayana Reddi was tried along with two others, namely Devanai Ammal and Ethiraja Pillai on August 15, 16 and 19, last. The trial resulted in the conviction of Devanai Ammal and Ethiraja Pillai and they are now serving their respective terms of imprisonment. So far as Narayana Reddi is concerned, the jury brought in a verdict of not guilty by 5 against 4 with the result that I ordered the discharge of the jury. I decided that it was a fit case for Narayana Reddi to be tried again on the charge framed against him. At the request of his Counsel I ordered his retrial by myself during this sessions. The case comes on for trial tomorrow, October 3, 1940. To-day the Crown Prosecutor makes an application for production before Court of the two prisoners aforesaid, namely Devanai Ammal and Ethiraja Pillai so that they may be examined and their evidence taken. The first question that arises is whether it is permissible for the Crown to examine these two persons as witnesses for the prosecution. That they were not examined—as they could not have been examined—before the committing Magistrate during the preliminary enquiry is not by itself an objection to the Crown having their evidence taken. Under s. 286, as construed by a Full Bench of the Lahore High Court in Niamat v. Emperor (1) the prosecution is not confined to the witnesses examined before the committing Magistrate but may examine other witnesses as well in the Sessions Court. But I am not satisfied that the Crown is entitled to have fresh witnesses summoned for the purpose of their evidence being taken and considered in the trial. If the prosecution have additional witnesses ready and available to them for giving evidence, their evidence can be taken, and so far as I can see there is no legal objection to this course. In view, however, of the fact that without the intervention of the Court the evidence of these two witnesses cannot be made available to the prosecution, the learned Crown Prosecutor is thrown back on the provisions of s. 540, Criminal P. C., on which he relies for the purposes of persuading me to summon and examine the two witnesses named by him as Court witnesses. Section 540 runs as follows:

"Any Court may, at any stage of any inquiry, trial or other proceeding under this Code, summon any person as a witness, or examine any person in attendance, though not summoned as a witness or recall and re-examine any person already examined, and the Court shall summon and examine or recall and re-examine any such person if his evidence appears to it essential to the just decision of the case."

The first portion of the section leaves a discretion in the Court to summon any person as a witness, a discretion which should as a matter of course be exercised judicially. The second and the latter portion of the section lays a duty on the Court to summon and examine any such person if it appears to the Court that the evidence of such person is essential to the just decision of the case. I have therefore to put myself the qestion whether this is a fit case in which in the exercise of my discretion I should summon these two prisoners who are now undergoing terms of imprisonment or whether I am satisfied that their evidence is essential to the just decision of the case. The relevant facts which I must remember in this connexion are these: According to the case for the prosecution Ethiraja Pillai, one of the two witnesses now sought to be summoned, stole the two postal orders in respect of which the offences charged are alleged to have been committed and passed them on to Narayana Reddi and Narayana Reddi in his turn got the orders cashed through Devanai Ammal, the other witness whose prodcution is now sought. All the three, namely Devanai Ammal, Narayana Reddi and Ethiraja Pillai were tried together with the result I have already mentioned. In the course of the trial it appeared that Ethiraja Pillai had made a statement in the nature of a confession first to the investigating inspector Mr. Mahalinga Aiyar which statement he repeated in substance before Mr. Raghunath Rao, the Presidency Magistrate who recorded his confession under s. 164, Criminal P. C. In the statement before Mr. Mahalinga Ayyar he stated:

"The two orders shown to me were taken out from a cover. I secreted that cover and opened it in the dark behind the privy. I showed them to Narayana Reddi some two days after that and asked him if they will fetch any money. Narayana Reddi took them from me and said that he will get money for them. He did not pay me anything. I asked him and he replied that he threw them away."

In his statement before the Magistrate he said:

"Narayana Reddi would ask us to bring some letters in covers received by post so that if there were notes in any of them they can be extracted. About six months ago one day I gave two such letters from the inland mail to that Narayana Reddi. There were two shilling notes in one envelope. I saw the number "20" on each of the notes. I handed over that letter to him and I do not know what happened to it subsequently. I gave him the other letter also. I was not present when he opened that letter. I do not know what he did with those notes and I never questioned him about them."

I may also add that immediately after Ethiraja Pillai made his statement to Mr. Mahalinga Ayyar he was taken to Mr. Byrne, the Presidency Postmaster, and he again confirmed the statement he had earlier made to Mr. Mahalinga Ayyar. When the case was before the committing Magistrate he retracted from these confessional statements and asserted that those statements were the result of inducements offered to him by Mr. Mahalinga Ayyar and by the Police. The same attitude was taken up by him in this Court when he was being tried here. Devanai Ammal was also examined by Mr. Mahalinga Ayyar. She then stated that the two postal orders had been received by her from her brother Manicka Mudaliar and that she cashed them at the Vepary Post Office receiving Rs. 26-8-0 therefor. She said nothing to indicate that Narayana Reddi had anything to do with the postal orders. In fact her story was a contradiction of the case for the prosecution that it was Narayana Reddi who gave her the postal orders for their being cashed. That story she stuck to during the inquiry before the committing Magistrate though there was some difference with regard to the details of the transaction as spoken to by her.

It will be clear from what I have said that both these persons who are now sought to be produced before the Court for being examined as witnesses are, even according to the prosecution, accomplices whose evidence must be received with caution and not ordinarily to be accepted without corroboration in material particulars. So far as Ethiraja Pillai is concerned, he definitely went back upon the statements he made to Mr. Mahalinga Ayyar and to the Presidency Magistrate who recorded his confession. His statements made at the various stages leave no room for doubt that he is a person having litte regard for truth and who for his own ends would not hesitate to tell lies. As regards Devanai Ammal it is plain that her case is totally at variance with that of the prosecution. She dissociated herself entirely from Narayana Reddi, and far from admitting the receipt of the postal orders from Narayana Reddi, she made the assertion that she got them from a different person, namely her own brother. The difference regarding the details of the story she gave before the committing Magistrate and that given here struck me at the time as a serious infirmity tending to show that her exculpatory statements were pure inventions. Evidence coming from such an untruthful person cannot but be regarded as extremely unreliable.

I have therefore little hesitation in holding that I should not summon either of these two persons or examine them in the trial of the accused in the exercise of my discretion under s. 540. I am equally unable to come to the conclusion that the evidence of such untruthful and unscrupulous witnesses is essential to the just decision of the case. I cannot imagine that justice will be advanced by introducing into the trial the evidence of persons with the antecedents mentioned above; far from advancing justice their evidence might very likely tend in the opposite direction. I must decline to have these two persons, namely Ethiraja Pillai and Devanai Ammal, produced before the Court for their evidence being taken.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 137, 134—Surety—Discharge of—Claim against principle debtor allowed to be time-barred—Remedy against surety, if lost.

A creditor does not lose his remedy against the surety by reason of the fact that he did not prefer his claim within time against the principal debtor. 181 Ind. Cas. 1 (1), relied on.

S. C. A. against the order of the Civil Judge of Gonda, dated July 25, 1938.

Mr. S. N. Srivastava, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ali Zaheer and S. P. Avasthi, for Respondent No. 1.

Judgment.—This is a second appeal by the plaintiff, whose claim has been dismissed by both the lower Courts.

Chaudhri Mumtaz Husain, respondent No. 2 was employed by the plaintiff. The other respondent Tir Singh Bahadur Singh stood surety for Chaudhri Mumtaz Husain and executed a deed dated October 6, 1931, in favour of the plaintiff. Rs. 3,836 were embezzled by Chaudhri Mumtaz Husain and the plaintiff came to know of it in October 1932. This suit was instituted on May 17, 1937, against Chaudhri Mumtaz Husain and Tir Singh Bahadur Singh for the amount embezzled.

Both the Courts have dismissed the suit on the ground that since the plaintiff allowed his remedy against the principal debtor Chaudhri Mumtaz Husain to become barred by time, the surety, that is Tir Singh Bahadur Singh was discharged. There is a divergence of opinion between the Allahabad High Court on the one side and the Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Lahore High Courts on the other, as to the interpretation of ss. 134 and 137 of the Contract Act. Section 134, provides that the surety is discharged by any contract between the creditor and the principal debtor, by which the principal debtor is released, or by any act or omission of the creditor, the legal consequence of which is the discharge of the principal debtor. Section 137 of the Contract Act runs thus—

"Mere forbearance on the part of the creditor to sue the principal debtor or to enforce another remedy against him does not, in the absence of any provision in the guarantee to the contrary, discharge the surety."

The Allahabad view is that the surety is discharged where the creditor has allowed the claim against a principal debtor to become barred by time. The other High Courts are of the opinion that the surety was not discharged when the legal remedy becomes barred by time. This point has been discussed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahanth Singh v. U Ba Yi, (1939 O. W. N. 401) (1). Their Lordships referred to a case of the Allahabad High Court in Ranjit Singh v. Naubat, (I. L. R 24 All., 504) (2) and certain decisions of the Bombay, Calcutta, Madras and Lahore High Courts and observed that they preferred to follow the reasoning of the majority of the High Courts in India and that the law in England was also the same. The Allahabad view taken in I. L. R. 24 All.,504 (2), has been followed in subsequent cases by the same Court. The observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council show that the view taken by the other High Courts is correct. It is true as argued by the learned Counsel for the respondent that the point before their Lordships of the Privy Council was not exactly the same because in that case the plaintiff had withdrawn the suit against the principal debtors without liberty to bring a fresh suit and was thus precluded from bringing another suit against them but the observations of their Lordships are entitled to great weight and the view of the majority of the High Courts in India also is the same. There is no decision of this Court. I therefore prefer to follow the view of the Calcutta, Bombay, Madras and Lahore High Courts in preference to that of the Allahabad High Court. I accordingly hold that the plaintiff has not lost his remedy against the surety by reason of the fact that he did not prefer his claim within time against the principal.

I therefore allow the appeal and remand the case to the trial Court for decision on other issues according to law. Costs will abide the result.

Co-sharers — No partition of village among co-sharers by metes and bounds but co-sharers in possession of specific plots of bakasht land—Exchange of plots between plaintiffs and defendants — Under deed plaintiffs entitled to be in possession of house standing on part of land given by defendants—Defendants remaining in possession—Suit by plaintiff alleging that they rented out house to defendants, for arrears of rent, ejectment and mesne profits—Transaction held binding upon defendants — Mesne profits held could not be awarded, as according to plaintiffs, defendants were lawfully in possession.

There had been no partition of the village among the co-sharer landlords by metes and bounds, but the co-sharers were in possession of specific plots of bakasht lands. Out of the lands in possession of the plaintiffs they had given 14 decimals to the defendants for building a zanana house, and the defendants gave in exchange certain lands to them in lieu of the land which they had got. The deed of exchange clearly stated that the plaintiffs were entitled to be in possession of the house standing on 3½ decimals of land. The plaintiffs brought a suit alleging that they had after the exchange, let out the house standing on 3½ decimals of land to the defendants and that the defendants had not paid the rent for the house and asked for the following reliefs: (1) a decree for the arrears of rent, and (2) a decree for ejectment and mesne profits:

Held, that the transaction was nothing but a mutual arrangement between two landlords who were in possession of specific plots of bakasht land in the village. This arrangement might not be binding on the other co-sharer landlords who were not parties to it and might be disregarded when there would be a partition of the village by metes and bounds ; but so long as the village was not partitioned, it must bind the plaintiffs as well as the defendants.

Held further, that their suit was rightly dismissed in so far as their claim for the rent of the house was concerned as this story was found to be untrue.

Held also, that as the plaintiffs' case was that the defendants were lawfully in possession of the house as tenants, their claim for mesne profits must be disallowed.

L. P. A. against a judgment of Mr. Justice Wort, dated May 8, 1940.

Mr. B. N. Rai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha and P. Jha, for the Respondents.

Fazl Ali, J.—This is a Letters Patent Appeal from the decision of a learned Judge of this Court in a Second Appeal.

The plaintiffs and the defendants are co-sharer landlords in Mauza Ramcharanpore Gorakhi and are admittedly in possession of specific plots of bakasht lands. Some time ago the plaintiffs gave to the defendants 14 decimals of bakasht lands for building a zenana house, and on December 2, 1935, the defendants executed a deed of exchange by which they declared the plaintiffs' right to be in possession of 50½ decimals of land in exchange for the land which they had previously given to the defendants. From the recitals in the deed it appears that out of 50½ decimals of land there was a house on 3½ decimals, and it was also stated in the deed that "the claimant should enter into possession and occupation of the property given to him in exchange, bring it under his cultivation, take up his abode in the house and continue to enjoy the same for all time."

In 1937 the plaintiffs brought the suit which has given rise to this appeal, and in this suit they stated, among other things, that after the exchange (the transaction to which reference has already been made) the plaintiffs had let out the house standing on 3½ decimals of land to the defendants on a monthly rent of Rs. 10 per month, and as the defendants had not paid the rent for the house they were compelled to bring the suit. They accordingly asked for the following reliefs (1) a decree for the arrears of rent, and (2) a decree for ejectment and mesne profits.

The trial Court and the first Appellate Court concurrently held that the story of the plaintiffs that they had let out the house on rent to the defendants was not true. Both these Courts also held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief because the other co-sharer landlords of the village had not been impleaded in the suit. The plaintiffs' suit being dismissed, the plaintiffs preferred a second appeal to this Court; but the second appeal also was dismissed, hence this appeal under the Letters Patent.

Now, there is no doubt that there has been no partition of the village among the co-sharer landlords by metes and bounds, but it is perfectly clear on the findings of the Courts below that the co-sharers are in possession of specific plots of bakasht lands. As I have already stated, out of the lands in possession of the plaintiffs they have given 14 decimals to the defendants for building a zenana house, and it has been found by the first Appellate Court that the defendants gave in exchange certain lands to them in lieu of the land which they had got. The deed of exchange is on the record, and it is clear from it that there was a house on 3½ decimals of the land in possession of the defendants, and the defendants gave this house also to the plaintiffs. The question is whether this transaction is binding upon the defendants or not. In my opinion, it is. It was nothing but a mutual arrangement between two landlords who were in possession of specific plots of bakasht land in the village. This arrangement may not be binding on the other co-sharer landlords who were not parties to it and may be disregarded when there is a partition of the village by metes and bounds; but so long as the village is not partitioned. It must bind the plaintiffs as well as the defendants. As I have already stated, the deed of exchange clearly states that the plaintiffs are entitled to be in possession of the house standing on 3½ decimals of land. It is true that the plaintiffs' story that they had let it out to the defendants on rent has been found to be untrue, and, therefore, their suit has been rightly dismissed in so far as their claim for the rent of the house is concerned; but there seems to be no reason why they should not be awarded a decree for the possession of the house standing on 3½ decimals of land.

I would, therefore, allow this appeal, set aside the judgment of the learned Judge against which this appeal has been preferred and direct that a decree be passed in favour of the plaintiffs granting them possession in respect of 3½ decimals of land on plots Nos. 2959 and 2960. As the plaintiffs' case was that the defendants were lawfully in possession of the house as tenants, their claim for mesne profits must be disallowed, but they will be entitled to half the costs in all the Courts.

Harries, C. J.—I agree.

Criminal trial — Evidence — Dying declaration—Corroboration, necessity of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 27—Accused's statement to Police that he threw away knife on certain spot after killing deceased—Accused leading Police to the spot but knife not found—Police broadcasting that whoever has taken knife should return it or houses would be searched — A coming forward and stating that he found a knife on spot mentioned by accused but he has thrown it away — A producing knife from spot where he alleged it was thrown away by him—Statement by accused held admissible under s 27—Statement under s. 27—Mode of recording—Admissibility in part—Duty of Judge.

Dying declarations should be corroborated in material particulars and by independent testimony. [p. 349, col. 2.]

The accused stated that he would show the knife with which he had stabbed the deceased and which he had thrown away. The Sub-Inspector, the accused, and another witness who was requested to go with the Sub-Inspector, proceeded to the spot but no knife was found. The Sub-Inspector broadcast that whoever had taken the knife away should return it or search would be made of the houses. Then A came forward and stated in the presence of the accused that he had picked up the knife from that very spot. He took the party to some 40 or 50 yards to the west of his house and showed the knife, the blade sticking in the earth :

Held, that the statement of the accused to the Police was admissible under s. 27, Evi. Act, since it led to the discovery of (1) the fact that a knife had been seen to be thrown away and was later found by A at the spot indicated, and (2) the knife itself; the fact that the knife was not actually found at the spot mentioned by the accused was immaterial. 158 Ind. Cas. 764 (3), referred to. 54 Ind. Cas. 479 (2), not approved.

Statements under s. 27, Evi. Act, should be recorded in the first person, that is to say, as far as possible in the actual words of the accused ; they should not be paraphrased. The Judge should admit those parts which he considers admissible but leave some record for the consideration of the Appellate Court of any other words which the prosecution claimed should be received in evidence. The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mockett, J.—The accused has been convicted and sentenced to death for the murder of two women, Annapurna and Savitri. Savitri was his wife, and she was the daughter of Annapurna who had two sons P. Ws. Nos. 15 and 16. The learned trial Judge has described at some length the history of Annapurna, and it is not necessary for us to repeat it. She apparently was at one time the concubine of P. W. No. 17, and Savitri and P. W. No. 16 were children of that union. Annapurna left P. W. No. 17 fourteen years before her death and appears to have become a prostitute, as a result of which habit P. W. No. 15 and another child were born. P. W. No. 17 married P. W. No. 9. The accused who was employed in the Bengal Nagpur Railway Workshop at Vizagapatam, married Savitri, with the approval of P. W. No. 17 and Annapurna. That was about three years before Savitri's death. Annapurna was the tenant of a house at Vizianagaram, at the time of her death, of which P. W. No. 17 was the owner. There are many allegations against the character of Annapurna in the evidence it being alleged that she was attempting to lead Savitri into a life of prostitution. The learned Judge, as we have indicated, has dealt fully with this aspect of the case.

So far as the facts in this appeal, which are material are concerned, they may be shortly stated. A few weeks before October 18, 1938 Annapurna and P. W. No. 15 visited the accused at Vizagapatam. Annapurna was receiving treatment for her eyes from the King George Hospital at Vizagapatam. She returned to Vizianagaram taking Savitri with the consent of the accused. On Saturday October 15, the accused came to Annapurna's house and according to the evidence asked for Savitri to return with him but was put-off on the ground that her clothes were with the washerman, Annapurna saying that she would return on Tuesday the 18th. The accused, it is stated, left for Vizagapatam He is supported to this extent by D. W. No. 5, who says that he was there on Monday the 17th. An examination of the plan Ex. M shows that the deceased's house is next door to P. Ws. Nos. 17 and 9, but a little to the north is the house of P. Ws. Nos. 11 and 18. It leads to the house in the south of P. W. No. 19, and further to the south is the house of P. Ws. Nos. 7 and 13. At about 1 A. M. both these women were stabbed to death, Savitri dying almost instantaneously, Annapurna surviving until next day. Their wounds, the doctor says, could have been with the dagger, M. O. No. 1.

As to the actual event, the evidence is as follows: P. W. No. 15, who is ten years old, says that Annapurna and Savitri were sleeping on the same cot and he too was sleeping near by. He was awakened by hearing Annapurna cry out "ammo" and he says he saw the accused, his brother-in-law, running away. His mother told him, "Your brother-in-law has stabbed us and run away," to which he replied "I too saw him run away." In answer to a question from P. W. No. 16, Annapurna said he stabbed her with a dagger. P. W. No. 17 and other person came. We disregard as inadmissible evidence of this witness and elsewhere where it appears that Savitri had shown M. O. No. 1 to Annapurna stating that the accused was threatening to kill her with it. These we do not consider as within s. 32, Evi. Act, as they do not relate to the circumstances of the transaction which resulted in her death. P. W. No. 15 said that there was some moonlight which enabled him to identify the accused. It appears from the calendar that the moon was new then and just rising. It certainly was not "round shaped" as P. W. No. 15 said in cross-examination. P. W. No. 15 said that on the Saturday and Sunday before the murder the accused and Savitri were talking together "lovingly." P. W. No. 16 who was also sleeping near him gives much the same evidence but does not claim to identify the accused. He says there was slight moonlight the moon having arisen. To him Annapurna said that the accused stabbed both her and Savitri and ran away, and P. W. No. 15, said, "Yes, I too saw him run away." Standing by itself, we should be reluctant to act on this identification of P. W. No. 15. It may well be that having been told by his mother who had been stabbed he thought he recognized him. But that there was any deliberate attempt dishonestly to implicate the accused seems to be negatived by the fact that P. W. No. 16 does not pretend to have seen him, and his evidence with regard to the moonlight is no doubt true.

It has been stated in the evidence that a great hubbub arose and it can well be understood that that would be so. Other people came to the spot. Some of them have been called. P. W. No. 9 the wife of P. W. No. 17, describes how she was sleeping in her house her husband having gone to a bhajana in a dancing girl's house. She says that when the night was well advanced she heard a cry, saw a number of people near the cot where Annapurna and Savitri were, and that Annapurna told her, "my son-in-law came here, stabbed us and ran away." We see no reason to suppose that P. W. No. 9 had any animosity towards Annapurna. Her husband's relationship with Annapurna ceased long before. She says also that there was a little moonlight. It appears from the evidence that the corpse of the deceased was in the shade. P.W. No. 17 can tell us no more than that he came back between 1 and 2 and discovered what had happened and that Annapurna also told him that the accused stabbed them both and ran away.

It is convenient here to mention that both P. W. No. 15 and P. W. No. 9 say that the inmates of the deceased's house took their food together just before the lamps were lit, but P. W. No. 16 states that they took their evening meal at 9 o'clock. It must be remembered that P. W. No. 15 was a little body of ten years of age and was likely to have had his meal earlier and gone to bed before his elders. This differance in the evidence was made much of by the defence because it was suggested that if the food was last taken by the deceased Savitri at 7 o'clock the evidence of the doctor would go to show that she must have been killed at about 9 or 10 o'clock, when the accused was at Vizagapatam; in other words, that the murder did not take place after midnight at all. This argument may be dealt with at once. It is founded on a statement in text books that rice takes two to three hours to digest and P. W. No. 3 appears to accept that in cross-examination. But P. Ws. Nos. 4 and 5 who are doctors used to rice diet are not prepared from their experience to accept this limited time for digestion. There are much more potent reasons however for us being satisfied beyond any doubt that these women were stabbed at about 1 o'clock. The body was still warm at 2-30, says P. W. No. 3, and death had only occurred within half to one hour before. It must be remembered too, that all the witnesses who were upon the spot immediately after the occurrence are all unanimous that the time was after midnight. The moon did not rise till after 1 o'clock according to the calendar. P. W. No. 11 speaks to the event being after midnight; and so does P. W. No. 18. P. W. No. 3 describes how Annapurna and the dead body of Savitri were brought to him at 2-30 A. M. We have already given his view on examination then and there as to when death had occurred in the case of Savitri. P.W.No.19 describes how the bhajana finished at 1 A. M. He went to the house of Annapurna hearing a noise and found Annapurna wounded. To him also Annapurna told what she told the others. And it must be added that P. W. No. 13 also said that it was the accused whom he had seen running away. This aspect of the case presents no difficulty whatever. We are satisfied, and we agree with the learned Judge, that these murders took place at the time these witnesses say they took place, at about 1 A. M., on October 18. It must be remembered that among these people watches do not figure very frequently and midnight is a wide term. So it is established beyond any doubt that at 1 o'clock or there-abouts these women were stabbed by some one and that, immediately after the stabbing, to several people Annapurna stated that it was the accused who had stabbed her and Savitri. P. W. No 3, the doctor, took so serious a view of Annapurna's case that he thought it his duty, and we think rightly, to record a dying declaration, that is Ex. B. It clearly implicates the accused.

Before proceeding further with the history of this case, we will go back to the time of the occurrence and consider the evidence of two other witnesses, P. W. Nos. 13 and 20. Their house is indicated in the plan. According to P. W. No. 13, he and P. W. No. 20 were sitting at his house preparing Deepavali sparklers or crackers. He describes the time as midnight. P. W. No. 13 heard a cry and coming into the street he says he saw the accused running from west to east. He gave chase but after running ten yards stopped. Then he says the accused threw something backwards and the thing fell with a metallic sound. He did not see what it was then. He and P. W. No. 20 went to Annapurna's house and he confirms the evidence of the other witnesses that she said that her son-in-law stabbed her and Savitri. P. W. No. 13 says, he said, "I too saw him." Here again, if it were a matter of identification alone, while accepting generally the facts as given by P. W. No. 13 and as borne out by P. W. No. 20, we are unable to accept the identification of the accused by P. W. No. 13 because he subsequently told the Police that he could not identify the runner. We do not attach much importance to whether the accused threw the knife away or threw it at him, or whether he searched for the knife then and there. It must be remebered that he must have been in a state of excitement. We are, however, satisfied that he did chase somebody and, as will later appear, that somebody threw away what subsequently was shown to be a knife. P. W. No. 20's evidence seems to negative the argument put forward with force that the whole of this case is the result of a conspiracy against the accused. This contention so far as it concerns P. W. No. 20 may be rejected as groundless. P. W. 20 does not pretend to identify the runner. Next morning at 6 A. M. these two persons P. Ws. Nos. 13 and 20, got up and went out for purposes of nature, and P. W. No. 13, corroborated by P. W. 20, states that he took up M.O. No. 1, the knife, lying some six yards to the east of his house. His conduct thereafter, although much criticised, is not really so surprising when viewed with any experience of the manner in which this class of persons behave when a crime has been committed. He picked the knife up, but then thinking that it might lead to trouble for him threw it into a bush. He says then there was blood on the blade from the tip. He threw it away some 200 yards to the west of his house. The subsequent history of this knife and the part played by P. W. No. 13 will be dealt with later.

Annapurna was taken to the hospital after some little delay. She died the next day at Vizagapatam where she had been taken in an ambulance after an operation which failed to save her life. But, in the meanwhile, she had made a further dying declaration to P. W. No. 6, the Stationary Sub-Magistrate of Vizianagaram, Ex F. That too, implicates the accused very clearly. It will be noticed that both in Ex. F and in Ex. B, Annapurna states that the accused did not return to Vizagapatam at all but lurked at the station. In answer to a question "What sort of a knife was?" she says, "It is a curved knife admitting of easy handling." In fact that is a fair description of M. O. No. 1. So, in addition to the statements of those who gathered at her house after the stabbing, in two more formal declarations to P. W. No. 3 and P. W. No. 6 respectively, this woman declared that the murderer was the accused. It is a well accepted practice that dying declarations should be corroborated in material particulars and by independent testimony. We are therefore to see to what extent this woman's statement is corroborated. We have already dealt with the events earlier in the evening, and have indicated that from them alone we would be reluctant to hold that the statements have been corroborated. There were however events of great importance next day. An inquest was held on the body of Savitri by P. W. No. 21 the Sub-Inspector of Police. It is well to remember that at 3-30 on that morning he was aware of the nature of the declarations of Annapurna. The inquest report, Ex. H, dealing with the cause of death is a formal document entered on a form. It will be observed that the duration of the inquest is stated to be two hours commencing at 7 A. M. and closing at 9 A. M. According to P. W. No. 21, at 7-15, that is a quarter of an hour after the inquest started, the accused came and appeared anxious to come in. He was brought in. When he stated that his name was Ramamurthi and that he was the son-in-law of Annapurna and the husband of Savitri, P. W. No. 21 arrested him and searched him but found no bloodstained weapons on him or blood marks on his clothes. In this connection P. W. No. 3 stated that blood need not have spurted out when these woman were stabbed.

Then according to P. W. No. 21, the accused stated that he would show the knife with which he had stabbed Annapurna and Savitri which he had thrown away. The Sub-Inspector, the accused, and P. W. No. 12, who was requested to go with the Sub-Inspector, proceeded to a spot eight yards east of P. W. No. 13's house but no knife was found. The Sub-Inspector, one may say, broadcast that whoever had taken the knife away should return it or search would be made of the houses. Then P. W. No. 13 came forward and stated, the accused being present, be it remembered, that he had picked up the knife from that very spot. He took the party to the easing ground some 40 or 50 yards to the west of his house and showed the knife, the blade sticking in the earth. A panchayatnama Ex. J was made out and signed, one of the signatories being P. W. No. 12! P. W. No. 12 entirely bears out this story. Blood was not found on the knife, but as it was sticking in the ground and had been out all night this is not very strange. Here again the vagueness of these people about time is striking and has rightly been made much of by the defence. P. W. No. 12 said the knife was recovered between 10 and 11 A. M. In Ex. N. a list made out on the 20th, that is two days after, the time is put down as 10 and it is signed by the Sub-Inspector. But it must be remembered that the inquest report signed on the 18th by the Sub-Inspector says that the inquest closed at 9. P. W. No. 8 was one of the panchayatdars at the inquest. He says that the accused came at 7-15. It appears that a long statement was made by the accused to the Sub-Inspector, a greater part of which was rightly rejected by the learned Sessions Judge although there are parts of it which might well have been received under s. 27, Evi. Act, because we do not quite understand why the fact that he was arrested by the Sub-Inspector and that the accused told him and showed him the spot where he had thrown the knife with which he had murdered his wife and Annapurna could be receivable in evidence rightly, and yet the actual statement taken down should be rejected. It is obviously of importance to ascertain whether in fact the officer recorded the statement from the accused because it will be extremely dangerous to accept the fact when so important a statement was made if it was not recorded. We have therefore thought it right to exercise our powers in the interests of justice under s. 172, Criminal P. C., and look at the case diary. It is enough for us to say we are satisfied beyond any doubt that the learned Judge rightly believed the Sub-Inspector when he said that the accused told him that he would show the spot where he had thrown the knife with which he had stabbed Annapurna and Savitri. The portions of the case diary printed are of little assistance to us being only parts of the original.

It must be remembered the accused made a very long statement taking 20 minutes or more to record. We must observe that the learned Judge has overlooked the decision of a Full Bench of this High Court in Athappa Goundan v Emperor (1) where the learned Chief Justice emphasizes that these statements under s. 27, Evi. Act should be recorded in the first person, that is to say, as far as possible in the actual words of the accused; they should not be paraphrased. But that is what has been done in this case. The statements made by the accused are given in the third person; that is, it is recorded in the Sub-Inspector's evidence in this form: "He stated that he would show me the knife with which he had stabbed etc.," and then later on in cross-examination, "I went with the accused as he offered to show the spot where he threw the knife." We have no doubt what the effect of the accused's statement was namely that he said that he would show the Sub-Inspector the spot where he had thrown the knife with which he had stabbed these women. In this case there has been no cross-examination to suggest that the statement was in some other form. The defence is that no such statement was made at all. We feel no anxiety with regard to this part of the case. But in all these cases the exact words of the accused should be recorded in the first person and the learned Judge should admit those parts which he considers admissible but leave some record for the consideration of the appellate Court of any other words which the prosecution claimed should be received in evidence. It has however been contended by the defence that the statement is not admissible under s. 27, Evi. Act as no discovery was made in consequence of information received from the accused. We do not agree.

Section 27 refers to a fact being discovered and s 3 defines "fact" as meaning and including "anything, state of things, or relation of things capable of being perceived by the senses" It seems to us that these facts were discovered: (1) the fact that a knife had been seen to be thrown away and was later found by P. W. No. 13 at the spot indicated, and (2) the knife itself. It was the statement of the accused that led the party to the scene and we consider that the subsequent discoveries were directly in consequence of the information received from him. It would be strange if, for example, an accused person stated that the body of a person murdered by him would be found in a certain spot and on the Police going to that spot not finding it there but in a mortuary to which it had by then been removed by, e g., the village officers, it could be held that the ultimate finding of the body was not in consequence of the information received from the accused. A decision in Ramasami Boyan v. Emperor (2) has been brought to our notice. With all respect to the learned Judges, we find some little difficulty in following the reasoning therein and are unable to follow it. It does not appear that there was any sort of discussion as to the meaning of the word "fact." This High Court in Emperor v. Ramanuja Ayyangar (3) has stressed the comprehensive meaning of the word "fact." Thus far, we have considered the admissibility of the accused's statement under s. 27, Evi. Act. So far as a consideration of whether the accused's statement is corroborated is concerned, and Annapurna's statements, it is established that the accused having made a statement that at a certain spot he had thrown away a knife, that statement is shown to be true by the appearance of a man who saw him throw a knife away, because the accused's case is that it was he himself who threw it away. Moreover, a knife was picked up at the very spot indicated by the accused. On these facts the prosecution claim that they have established the guilt of the accused. It is necessary to consider his own statements. It appears that at his request a statement was recorded from him under s. 164, Criminal P. C. In that statement he admits that he was questioned at the inquest at 8-30 but states that he was arrested at 11 A. M. This is wholly incerdible. The Police, of course, would at once, and we are satisfied that they did, arrest a man of whom it had been stated on all sides that he had murdered two women. He then proceeds:

"On the morning of October 18, 1938, I came to Vizianagaram from Waltair by the 6 A. M. train to take my wife back. I heard about this murder at the clock tower. By the time I arrived at the Municipal Hospital my wife's corpse was lying at the gate. I saw this and asked the Police there to open the gate. They oponed it. I went inside. They asked me who I was I told them that I was the husband of the deceased. They said: 'All right. Sit down' I accordingly sat down."

Then questions followed obviously put on the supposition that the accused desired to make a confession, which he definitely negatived. Before us two main points have been argued. First that these women were in fact murdered at 9 o'clock on the Monday night. We have already dealt with this. We think there is no basis whatever for it. We entirely accept the prosecution story that these women were murdered at 1 o'clock. It is then argued, although it is a little difficult to follow, that because of the variance in the times with regard to the discovery of the knife and the closing of inquest, no statement at all was made by the accused and therefore no discovery was made. We wholly decline to accept this position. We find no room in this case for supporting any suggestion of what is commonly known as a foisted case. Several witnesses were well disposed towards the accused. We wholly decline to believe that the Police have been a party to an elaborate conspiracy to victimize an obscure worker on the railway. Our view is that this inquest started and ended at the time indicated in the inquest report and that thereafter no one was paying any great attention to actual times. We think that the Sub-Inspector's version is substantially true and that he signed Ex. G two days after carelessly. It is not the time of the end of this inquest so much as the beginning of it that is important. Obviously after it had started there was a long interval in which the statement was written down. The parties repaired to the spot where the knife was found and it seems possible that no particular record of actual times was made. The safest guide is the inquest report written at the time with the times recorded. Any argument based on the accused's statement in Ex. 4 that he was not arrested until 11 A. M., and that therefore he was not under arrest at the time of his statement to the Police, can be summarily rejected for the reasons we have already indicated namely, that he must have been arrested immediately the Police saw him.

In the Magistrate's Court the accused contented himself by saying that he was not guilty and would call witnesses at the Sessions. No application was made, says the learned trial Judge, for the summoning of any defence witnesses until the case was taken up for trial. Then D. Ws. Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were called for proving uniform alibis at Vizagapatam late on the evening of Monday and his presence there early on Tuesday morning. We observe that everybody at the original trial being conversant with such local conditions as the times of trains no formal proof of the relevant time table has been made. We have directed that a time table shall be attached to this record and received in evidence. The following times are however accepted by both prosecution and defence before us. The evening train leaves Waltair at 9 50 P. M., and reaches Vizianagaram at 11-21 P. M. and the morning train leaves Waltair at 6-5 A. M. reaching Vizianagaram at 7-55 A. M. It was therefore possible for the accused to have caught the morning train provided that he did in fact go back to Vizagapatam on Sunday, in which case he could have been on the spot in time at the time of the murder. If however he was in Vizagapatam at 5 A. M. catching the early morning train and reaching Vizianagaram at 7-55 he could not have been at the inquest much before 8-30, the station being about one and half miles from the hospital. Therefore, he could not have been at the inquest at 7-15 A. M. as alleged by the prosecution. His alibi therefore at Vizagapatam is of importance. We do not propose to discuss, although we have examined, the alibi in full. It is enough for us to say that we have considered and wholly agree with the estimate of its value given by the learned Sessions Judge. We agree with him in rejecting it and do not consider that it is necessary to repeat the criticisms which he has directed towards it. There is however one striking feature regarding this alibi and that is that the detailed story told by the witnesses is not so much as mentioned by the accused in any of his statements. It is true that he states at the Sessions and in Ex. 4 that he was at Vizagapatam, but there is no reference at all to any of the defence witnesses or any of the events spoken to by them.

The learned Sessions Judge has reviewed the evidence at great length. This is one of those cases where the evidence as a whole must be considered and weighed. There is ample material on the record to show that the accused might well have desired the death of his mother-in-law and wife. We have the fact that on this night Annapurna stated not once but many times that it was the accused who stabbed them. She is supported by P. Ws. Nos. 13 and 15, although standing alone we have indicated we should hesitate to accept their evidence as to the identity of the accused. We have the fact also that this man so far from being at Vizagapatam was at Vizianagaram (they are 34 miles apart) soon after 7 o'clock on the morning of the 18th. In the course of a statement to the Police he told them that the knife with which he had murdered these women was at a certain spot and he took the Police there. At that very spot immediately after the murder the night before, a man had been seen running and throwing away a knife. That knife was picked up from that spot by P. W. No. 13. Immediately these facts are known, we consider that by the accused's own conduct and words the statements of Annapurna and his own retracted statement are amply corroborated and the statements of P. Ws. Nos. 13 and 15 receive added strength; and it must be remembered with regard to P. W. No. 15 that he had repeatedly said to all the persons that had assembled the night before that he had seen his brother-in-law running. All these matters have received from the learned Judge the fullest consideration. Agreeing with him we are satisfied that the facts lead to one conclusion only, namely that it was the accused that committed this act. We therefore confirm his conviction. It was a deliberate murder of two defenceless women and the learned Judge did his duty in passing the sentence of death. We accordingly also confirm the sentence and dismiss the appeal.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Civil Miscellaneous Petition No. 2456 of 1939

BURRA VENKATA KOMARAJU AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 109, 110 —Leave to appeal for raising for first time question before Privy Council, not raised in any Courts in India cannot be granted.

Where leave to appeal to the Privy Council is asked for, for the purpose of raising for the first time before the Privy Council a question which was not raised at any time while the litigation was pending in India, that is either in the trial Court or in the High Court, such leave cannot be granted.

C. Misc. P. under ss. 109 and 110 and O. XLV, rr. 2, 3 and 8 Civil P. C. praying that the High Court will be pleased to grant leave to the petitioner herein to appeal to His Majesty in Council against the judgment and decree of the High Court in A. S. No. 330 of 1936 preferred to the High Court against the decree of the District Court of Vizagapatam in O. S. No. 13 of 1936.

Messrs. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer and P. Panunni Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

Pandrang Row, J.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the decree of this High Court made in appeal No. 330 of 1936 on February 14, 1939. That decree merely confirmed the decree of the trial Court, the finding of both the Courts being concurrent on the main question in the suit, namely, whether there was gross negligence on the part of the Court guardian appointed to defend the suit in which a decree had been passed against the minor, the present litigation being one to have that decree set aside as against the minor. The entire litigation proceeded in the trial Court as well as in this Court on the basis that gross negligence, if proved, would be sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to have the earlier decree set aside, and neither in the grounds of appeal in this Court nor during the arguments at the hearing of the appeal was it stated that gross negligence by itself would not be sufficient in the absence of fraud and collusion. But it is this point and this point alone that is sought to be raised in the present application for leave to appeal. The petitioner wants an opportunity of having this question settled by the highest Judicial tribunal and it would appear that they have been emboldened to do that by reason of a Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court reported in Krishna Das Padmanabh Rao v. Vithoba Annappa Shetti (1), which appears to have been reported only after the High Court's judgment was pronounced. That, however, is a detail which need not affect our decision in this matter. Even in that case it is pointed out that there is a preponderance of authority among the High Court Judges in India in favour of the view that a minor can challenge a decree passed against him on the ground of the gross negligence of his guardian ad litem. This majority view appears to have been dissented from by the Full Bench of Bombay High Court on the ground that the majority view was based mainly on the consideration that such an action would lie under the English Law, and the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court was of opinion that under the English Law itself no such action would lie. We find, however, that apart from the dictum in Gregory v. Molesworth (2), of Lord Hardwicks which is quoted in some of the reported cases in India, at least since 1874 when In re Hoghton (3), was decided by Vice-Chancellor Malins, it has been understood to be well settled law in England that such an action would lie. It is sufficient to refer in this connection to the passages quoted from Macpherson on Infants and Simpson on the Law of Infants in Brij Raj v. Ram Sarup (4), and also to the passage from Halsbury's Laws of England Vol. 17, p. 138 on the same page. We find also in the latter edition i. e. Hailsham edition of the Laws of England, the same proposition of law laid down, that is to say, that an infant is as much bound as an adult by a judgment unless there has been fraud or gross negligence on the part of his next friend. We feel, therefore, some hesitation in expressing the view that under the English Law an action would not lie in the case of gross negligence only of the guardian. We are unable to accept the position as being one in which any real doubt remains about the maintainability of a suit of this kind. We, however, do not base our final decision which is to dismiss the petition on this ground. It is enough for our purpose to say that leave to appeal could not be given in a matter like this for the simple reason that leave is asked for, for the purpose of raising for the first time a question which was not raised at any time while the litigation was pending in this country; that is to say either in the trial Court or in this Court. The resort to the provisions which permit a party to apply for leave to appeal for a purpose like this, namely, for raising a point for the first time after the whole case has been disposed of, would be in our opinion, an abuse which should not be encouraged. It might also be mentioned that if this new point had been raised earlier, the plaintiffs would have had an opportunity of meeting this point by alleging as an additional ground of claim actual fraud and collusion.

In the circumstances, we feel, that there is no other alternative than to refuse leave to appeal. The petition is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. I, Art. 1—Appeal against amended decree of Special Judge passed under s. 14, U. P. Encumbered Estates Act (XXV of 1934)—Court-fee payable—Ad valorem.

Where an appeal directed against an order of amendment, is to all intents and purposes against the amended decree passed by the Special Judge under s. 14, U. P. Encum. Estates Act, the court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal is ad valorem under Art. 1, Sch. I, Court Fees Act. 171 Ind. Cas. 78 (1), 172 Ind. Cas. 941 (2) and 173 Ind. Cas. 353 (3), relied on. 147 Ind. Cas. 633 (4) and 145 Ind. Cas. 823 (5), distinguished.

F. C. A. against the order of the Special Judge, First Grade of Unao, dated July 17, 1940.

Mr. Nasir Ullah Beg, for the Appellants.

Judgment.—This is an office report in First Civil Appeal No. 121 of 1940 to the effect that the appellants must pay ad valorem court-fee on Rs. 6,035, which is the amount of the amended decree after deducting Rs. 1,365 the amount of the original decree passed by the learned Special Judge under s. 14 of the Encum. Estates Act against the appellants. The office reports that the order appealed against is a decree and not an order incapable of execution and not having the force of a decree. The memorandum of appeal is directed against an order dated July 17, 1940, amending the decree in Encum. Estates Act suit No. 46 of 1936 passed by the Special Judge, First Class, Unao. The valuation of the appeal is stated to be Rs. 6,035 and the court-fee of only Rs. 3 has been paid. Ad valorem court-fee on Rs. 6,035 is Rs. 477-8. Consequently, there is a deficiency of Rs. 474-8 in court-fee.

The facts are that originally the learned Special Judge passed a decree for Rs. 1,365 with future interest and proportionate costs against the appellants on December 14, 1939. The creditors thereafter applied to the Court for the amendment of the decree in view of the explanation, which has been added to subs. (5) of s. 14 of the U. P. Encum. Estates Act. The learned Special Judge ordered as follows:—

"In the result the decree in case No. 3 relating to Ex. D-5 (mortgage) is amended and in place of the decree for Rs. 1,365 I decree the claim on basis of Ex. D-5 for Rs. 7,400 with pro: costs and future interest at 4½ per cent. per annum from date of application."

A decree was prepared in pursuance of the above judgment. The appellants' Counsel has filed the copy of the judgment as well as the copy of the amended decree along with the memorandum of appeal. In appeal the amended decree for Rs. 7,400 minus Rs. 1,365, the amount of the original decree, has been challenged. Upon these facts it appears to us that the appeal in substance is really directed against the amended decree passed by the learned Special Judge though the memorandum of appeal merely purports to appeal against the order amending the decree. We have no doubt whatever that the object of the appeal is to get rid of the amended decree which involves the setting aside of the decree for Rs. 6,035 passed by the learned Special Judge. The case, therefore, in our opinion clearly falls under Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act. It has been held in Lal Baijnath Singh v. Tulsi Ram, (1937 O. W. N. 890) (1), that where in an appeal against a simple money decree passed by a Special Judge under s. 14 (7), U. P. Encum. Estates Act, the appellants want a reduction in the amount of interest decreed by the lower Court, the appeal is governed by Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Court Fees Act and court-fee must be paid ad valorem on the amount of interest disputed by the appellants.

A similar view has been taken in Jagat Jit Singh v. Munnoo Bibi, (1938 O. W. N. 135) (2), where it was held that having regard to the definition of 'decree' contained in Civil P. C. and to the provisions of s. 14 (7), U. P. Encum. Estates Act the decision of the Special Judge is a decree though the amount that may be due to the opposite party yet remains to be fixed and hence ad valorem court-fee is payable in an appeal against such order.

A similar view has been taken in a Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Jagdish Pratap Bahadur Singh v. Raj Kumar Udai Pratap Bahadur Singh, (1938 O. W. N. 88) (3), where it was held that in an appeal against a decree passed by the Special Judge under s. 14 of the U. P. Encum. Estates Act, the memorandum of appeal cannot come under the descriptions in Arts. 11 or 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, and, therefore, it must come under the description in Art. 1 of Sch. I of the Act, the court-fee payable, consequently, being ad valorem.

Learned Counsel for the appellants concedes that the object of the appeal is no doubt to obtain a cancellation of the amended decree for Rs. 6,035 in an indirect way, but argues that his appeal is only directed against the order passed by the learned Special Judge and not against the decree and as such the court-fee paid is sufficient. In support of his contention he relies on, 1, Shujaatmand Khan v. Govind-Behari, (A. I. R. 1934 Allahabad 100) (4) and 2, W. H. Lawrence v. Dewan Singh, (A. I. R. 1933 Rangoon 264) (5). Neither of these two cases has any bearing upon the present case. In the former case an order had been passed by the lower Court under s. 152 of the Civil P. C. amending the plaint and the preliminary decree and correcting the misdescription of the property, which had crept in the plaint and in the decree. A revision was filed against the said order. A preliminary objection was raised on behalf of the respondents that an appeal lay against the amended decree no revision was entertainable. It was held that the revision was not directed against the amended decree but against the order. No question whatever about court-fee was involved in the case.

In the latter case it was held that a decision given under s. 152 of the Civil P. C. granting an application for amendment of a decree is an order and not a decree and hence an application to set aside such an order is governed by Art. 181 and not Art. 164 of the Indian Lim. Act. The question in that case arose in connection with the point of limitation and had no reference whatever to the question of court-fee. Apart from this, both the above cases are distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In the present case an amended decree has actually been passed and the result of allowing the appeal would be to set aside the amended decree. There is no doubt that the decree passed by the Special Judge is under the provisions of s. 14 of the U. P. Encum. Estates Act, wherein it is specifically stated that such a decree shall be deemed to be a decree of a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction.

Reference has also been made on behalf of the appellants to a decision of this Court in Rameshwar Bakhsh Singh v. Govind Prasad, (1940 O. W. N. 862) (6). That case in our opinion is inapplicable. That was a case of miscellaneous appeal under s. 45 of the U. P. Encum. Estates Act against the decision of two issues framed in the creditor's claim under s. 14 of the Act. Under s. 45 as it then stood an appeal could be brought against "any decision, decree or order" of a Special Judge. The word "decision" was, however, deleted and after the words "or order" the words "finally disposing of the case" were inserted by the U. P. Encum. Estates (Amendment) Act XI of 1939 in both sub-ss. (1) and (2) to s 45 of the Act. There was no decree in that case passed by the Special Judge and it was held that the appeal, being an appeal against a decision under s. 14, U. P. Encum. Estates Act, fell within the scope of Art. 11 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act and a court-fee of Rs. 3 was sufficient.

In the present case we hold that the appeal is to all intents and purposes against the amended decree passed by the Special Judge and consequently an ad valorem court-fee is payable. We accept the office report and direct that the appellant shall pay the deficiency of Rs. 474-8 within six weeks from to-day.

Conversion—Principal and agent—Relief on ground of conversion, when can be had—Agent advancing purchase money for goods purchased on account of principal—Principal has neither title to nor right to present possession of goods until he pays price—No question of conversion arises.

To entitle a person to claim relief on the ground of conversion or trover, he must show not only title to the property concerned but also a right to the present possession thereof.

Where the agent himself advanced the purchase money in respect of the goods purchased by him on account of the principal, the property in the goods cannot be said to have passed to the principal until the amount advanced by the agent for the purchase of the goods is paid to him. No question, therefore, can arise, of conversion by the agent in respect of property title to which remains vested in him. Moreover, the agent by reason of his having purchased the goods on his own responsibility, though on account of the principal is vis-a-vis the latter, in the position of an unpaid vendor with a right to retain the goods until payment of the balance of the purchase money. The principal is not, therefore, entitled to possession of the goods even if the agent notwithstanding the non-payment of the balance of the purchase money, had intended that the property in the goods should pass to the principal. Lord v. Price (1), relied on.

S. A. against the decrees of the Sub-Judge, Masulipatem, in A. S. Nos. 56 and 57 of 1935, respectively.

Mr. A. Lakshmayya, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. Somasundaram and P. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—These two connected second appeals arise out of a suit and a cross suit brought in the District Munsif's Court, Masulipatam. O. S. No. 17 of 1934 was a suit by the appellant for an account of dealings in groundnuts with the respondents, a firm of Commission Agents and O. S. No. 81 of 1934 was by the Commission Agents against the appellant for recovery of Rs. 856-7-0 said to be due to them on those dealings. The question for determination in both the suits being the same, they were heard and disposed of together by a common judgment in both the Courts below. Both the suits having been decided against the appellant in the lower Appellate Court, he has preferred these appeals. As respondent No. 1 has been the principal contesting party throughout, he is hereinafter referred to as the respondent. The facts of the case may be briefly stated. The appellant who is a groundnut merchant entered into an agreement in October 1932 with the respondent whereby he was to purchase groundnuts and sell the same as per instructions of the appellant, stocking them in the meanwhile in godowns which he rented for the purpose. The appellant advanced Rs. 1,000 as cover against any possible loss that might result from the transaction. The respondent was to purchase the groundnuts in the market advancing the purchase money himself or making himself personally responsible for the purchase money to the vendors. When the goods were sold, the respondent was to deduct the purchase money paid by him less the advance received with interest as well as godown rents and commission at the agreed rate and pay the balance of the proceeds, if any, to the appellant. Purchases were made in pursuance of this agreement in November and December 1932 and the goods were stocked in a godown. On March 1, 1933, however, owing to financial embarrassment, the respondent pledged these goods as well as other goods with the Andhra Bank Ltd., at Masulipatam and obtained a loan. This loan was repaid and the pledge redeemed some time in May 1933.

It is in evidence—and it was not disputed—that the market began to decline from January 1933. The appellant did not send any instructions to the respondent to sell the goods till September 1933 when the respondent wrote Ex. III to the appellant calling upon him to pay the accounts due to him and take the goods. As there was no reply, he wrote another letter (Ex. III-a) to the same effect on October 19, 1933. To this letter, the appellant sent a reply (Ex. X) dated October 20, 1933 in which he stated that on coming to know of the pledge of the goods by the respondent, he had raised objection and that the respondent, had then agreed to take the groundnuts himself and settle the account by paying the appellant Rs. 3-2-0 a bag. The appellant thus repudiated the claim made by the respondent in Ex. III and III-a and a turn, called upon him to pay the amount due to the appellant at Rs. 3-2-0 a bag in accordance with the settlement referred to above. The respondent treated this letter as a breach of the contract by the appellant and sold the goods and after giving credit to the sale proceeds and the original advance received claimed a sum of Rs. 856-7-0 as due to him in O. S. No. 81 of 1934 while the appellant claimed in his suit O. S. No. 17 of 1934 an account of the dealings on the basis of the agreement which he put forward in his letter (Ex. X). The lower Appellate Court found that the agreement put forward by the appellant was not true and as stated above, rejected his claim and decreed that of the respondent.

The appellant's learned Counsel did not contest—as indeed he could not in second appeal—the finding of the lower Appellate Court that there was no settlement between the parties in March 1933 as alleged by the appellant. But the learned Counsel argued as a matter of law that the respondent's pledge of the goods purchased by him on account of the appellant without the latter's authority amounted to a conversion of the goods and that the respondent was therefore liable to pay damages for coversion according to the rates prevailing in the market at the time of the pledge. This contention cannot be accepted for two reasons: first the respondent having himself advanced the purchase money in respect of the goods purchased by him on account of the appellant the property in the goods cannot be said to have passed to the appellant until the amount advanced by the respondent for the purchase of the goods is paid to him. The law is thus stated in Bowstead on Agency ;

"Where an agent, by contracting personally renders himself personally liable for the price of goods bought on behalf of his principal, the property in the goods, as between the principal and agent, vests in the agent, and does not pass to the principal until he pays for the goods, or the agent intends that it shall pass, and the agent has the same rights with regard to the disposal of the goods, and with regard to stopping them in transitu as he would have had if the relation between him and his principal had been that of seller and buyer (Art. 76)".

In this view, the correctness of which has not been disputed, the very foundation of the appellant's contention fails, as obviously, there could be no question of conversion by the respondent in respect of property, title to which still remained vested in him. Secondly, it is well-established that to entitle a person to claim relief on the ground of conversion or trover, he must show not only title to the property concerned but also a right to the present possession thereof. But one who has not paid the purchase money in respect of goods purchased by him has no right to claim possession of the goods before paying the whole of the purchase money due as the seller has a lien on the goods for the unpaid purchase money. It has thus been held in Lord v. Price (1) that a purchaser of goods which continued in the possession of the vendor subject to his lien for unpaid purchase money cannot sue a third person for a conversion of the goods. The plaintiff there purchased two lots of cotton at an auction sale but paid only the deposit required and so had to leave the cotton in the field where the auction had been held. One of the lots was removed by mistake by the defendant who had also brought some lots at the sale and the plaintiff brought the action for damages for conversion. The Court of Exchequer held that the plaintiff not having paid the residue of the purchase money had no right of present possession in respect of the goods purchased by him, such right being still in the vendor by virtue of his lien and that therefore the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain an action for the tortuous removal of the goods. Now according to the authority cited above, the respondent by reason of his having purchased the goods on his own responsibility, though on account of the appellant was vis-a-vis the latter, in the position of an unpaid vend r with a right to retain the goods until payment of the balance of the purchase money. The appellant was not therefore entitled to possession of the goods even if the respondent, notwithstanding the non-payment of the balance of the purchase money, had intended that the property in the goods should pass to the appellant of which however there is absolutely no evidence in the case.

The learned Counsel for the respondent also contended that the respondent must be deemed to be a tacit pledgee, having paid the purchase money for the goods out of his own pocket, and was therefore entitled to repledge the goods and relied upon Bar Dukan v. Gopal Singh (2), while the learned Counsel for the appellant challenged that position on the authority in Tejpal Jamna Das v. E. V. David (3). It is unnecessary however to consider this point as the appeals fail on the other grounds indicated above. Both the appeals are therefore dismissed. The appellant will pay the costs of respondent No. 1 in S. A. No. 602 of 1936. No order as to costs in S. A. No. 603 of 1936.

Leave refused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 197—Port trust estate, whether falls under "village, town or district" within the meaning of s. 21 (10), Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860)—Prosecution of chief store-keeper and assistant superintendent of machinery employed for port trust estate—Sanction of Central Government, if necessary.

The port trust estate does not fall within the term, "village, town or district" within the meaning of cl. (10) of s. 21, I P. C. The chief store-keeper and assistant superintendent of machinery for the port trust estate entrusted with the keeping and the expending of property by the port trustees of the port on their behalf upon their estate are not public servants. No sanction of the Central Govt. therefore, is necessary for their prosecution.

Cr. R. Apps. to revise the order of the Additional City Magistrate, Karachi, dated March 30, 1940.

Messrs. Dingomal Narainsingh and P. S. Shahani, for the Applicants (Naylor and Donde, respectively.)

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Davis, C. J.—We have before us two revision applications one by R. A. Donde, chief store-keeper, now under suspension, of the Karachi Port Trust, and the other, by S. E. Naylor, assistant superintendent of machinery at Keamari, now under suspension, and they are both being prosecuted for offences under s. 120-B read with s. 420 I. P. C. for offences alleged to have been committed by them in the discharge or purported discharge of their duties. The prosecution started many months ago and the plea that the sanction of the Central Govt. was necessary for the prosecution of the applicants under s. 197, Criminal P. C. has been raised at a very late stage in the proceedings. To bring themselves within the ambit of s. 197, Criminal P. C., the applicants must show that they are "public servants" within the meaning of s. 21 (10), I. P. C.

The Additional City Magistrate, against whose order these applications are made, held that the applicants were merely employees of the Karachi Port Trust employed by them to carry out the necessary repairs, maintenance and sanitation of the numerous properties which are vested in the port trust under the provisions of the Karachi Port Trust Act, Bom. Act, VI of 1886, and that they were not "public servants" within the meaning of s. 21 (10), I. P. C. There is in cl. (10) of s. 21, I. P. C. reference to "any village, town or district," but there is no reference to "port," and Mr. Dingomal and Mr. Shahani for the applicants have both argued that a "port" is a town or that, at least, there is included in the port trust properties a village called Keamari Indian village shown as such on all the maps; and that as Donde under the order of the chief engineer, supplied from stock or by purchase stores necessary for the repairs or maintenance of the houses and roads in this village, and Naylor as assistant superintendent of machinery was in charge of the fresh water supply and lighting and fire service of this village, so it was their duty to keep and expend property for the secular common purposes of the village within the meaning of cl. (10) of s. 21, I. P. C. Naylor also says that he received timber jointly with Donde for the purposes of the village. Clause (10) of s. 21, I. P. C., reads as follows:

"Every officer whose duty it is, as such officer, to take, receive, keep or expend any property, to make any survey or assessment, or to levy any rate or tax for any secular common purpose of any village, town or district, or to make, authenticate or keep any document for the ascertaining of the rights of the people of any village, town or district."

But we think cl. (10) has to be read with cl. (9), and while cl. (9) is intended to relate to Govt. servants, cl. (10) is intended to relate to local authorities responsible for the local administration of villages, towns or districts. It is not difficult to relate these terms to statutes relating to Municipalities and local boards, but there is no mention in cl. (10) of a "port," and were it the intention of the Legislature to include a "port" within cl. (10), we think there would be reference to a "port" such as there is reference to a "body of port commissioners" in s. 3 (28), General Clause Act, X of 1897. We have had cited to us definitions from the Oxford Dictionary and Murray's Dictionary to prove to us that a "port," while meaning many things, also means a town with a harbour, and it may be, of course, that a town with a harbour is a "port," but we think regarding s. 3, Karachi Port Trust Act, the definition in "Wharton's Law Lexicon," (Edn. 14), is more appropriate, that is "a place for the lading and unlading of ships," and this is borne out by the words of s. 3 themselves. Section 3, Karachi Port Trust Act, is as follows:

"Government may, by notification in the Bombay Govt. Gazette (a) define the limits of the port for the purpose of this Act, and (b) from time to time alter such limits.

Such limits may extend to any part of the navigable approaches to the port, and may include any wharves, tramways, warehouses, sheds and other works made on behalf of the public for convenience of traffic, for safety of vessel, or for the improvement, maintenance and good government of the port, whether within or without high water mark, and, subject to any rights of private property therein, any portion of the shore within fifty yards of high water mark."

From the evidence of the present chief store-keeper Rozario, it appears, the principal immovable properties owned by the port trust are wharves and cargo sheds; all else is incidental. It appears to us, therefore, that any property the port trust possesses is merely incidental for the fulfilment of its purpose as a port. The mere fact that groups of houses built on the port trust estate primarily for the accommodation of its employees is called a village is not enough to bring those who have charge of and supply stores for the maintenance and repairs and sanitation of these houses and the necessary roads, and who supervise and carry out repairs to the water supply and lighting of these houses and these roads, within that class of public servants who keep or expend property for the common secular purpose of a village within the meaning of cl. (10) of s. 21, I. P. C. As the Magistrate says, the port trustees are, so far as the houses and shops on their estate are concerned, in the position of landlords and the applicants are their employees for the purpose of the upkeep of their properties. It is difficult then to see how the terms "village, town or district" within the meaning of cl. (10) of s. 21, I. P. C., can be applied in the circumstances of this case.

The applicants were the chief store-keeper and assistant superintendent of machinery for the port trust estate as a whole; they were entrusted with the keeping, and it may be said, the expending of property by the port trustees of the port on their behalf upon their estate, and we do not think we can read into cl. (10) of s. 21, I. P. C., the word "port". After all the applicants claim that the ordinary Criminal Law shall be modified in their favour, and we think that they must prove this strictly. It is true that both the applicants come within the provisions of s. 24, Port Trust Act so that orders made by the Board, which affect them within the meaning of s. 23, require now the sanction of the Central Govt., but s. 23 does not relate to the prosecution of these special officers, and s. 71, Karachi Port Trust Act, makes provision for the punishment of officers who are not public servants within the meaning of s. 21, I. P. C., but this does not mean that cl. (10) of s. 21, I. P. C., has any necessary application to the applicants. Clauses (1) or (2) might apply, for instance, to the chairman, so that it cannot be said that if cl. (10) does not apply to the applicants s. 71, Port Trust Act, is meaningless. Our view then is that the port trust estate does not fall within the term, "village, town or district" within the meaning of cl. (10) of s. 21, I. P. C. and, therefore, no sanction of the Central Govt. is necessary for the prosecution of the offences alleged to have been committed by the applicants. These revision applications must be dismissed accordingly.

Civil Revision No. 189 of 1939

SECRETARY OF STATE—OPPOSITE PARTY

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (1) (i), (k) as amended in 1937, O. XXI, r. 48 — Exemption of deposits in Provident Funds is separate from exemption in respect of salaries — Disposing power under s. 60 (1), limits of — 'Salary', meaning of— Attachment of salary of employees of Post and Telegraph—Procedure.

The exemption of deposits in provident funds under cl. (k), s. 60 (1), Civil P. C., is separate from the exemption in respect of salaries given by cl. (i), and the result would be that the recurring contributions of the judgment-debtor to the provident fund must, in working out the amount attachable, fall on that moiety of the excess of the salary over the first hundred rupees which is not already reserved for the judgment-debtor by cl. (i). [p. 361, col. 2.]

The reference to disposing power under s. 60, (1), Civil P. C., must be limited to the context, which is indicated by the words that follow :—"whether the sum be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf" [p. 362, col. 1.]

There is nothing in cl. (i) of s. 60 (1), Civil P. C., to indicate that the salary mentioned there is the net salary. [ibid.]

In cases of attachment of salaries of employees of Post and Telegraph department, it would be better for the Court in the interests of all concerned, to obtain on the application of the decree-holder the relevant materials from the Postmaster-General in order to work out the figures itself and then issue an attachment for a definite, specified amount, so that the parties and the Postmaster-General may be under no misapprehension. [p. 362, col. 2.]

C. R. against an order of the Munsif, First Court Patna, dated March 21, 1939.

Messrs. B. N. Mitter and Ajit Kumar Mitter, for the Petitioner.

The Assistant Govt. Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

Order.—This is an application in revision against an order of the Munsif, First Court, Patna, disallowing an application made by the petitioner under O. XXI, r. 48 (3) for recovery of three monthly instalments of Rs. 45 each. In March 1938, the petitioner obtained a Small Cause Court decree at Howrah against A. W. Lawie, an employee in the telegraph department, and put it into execution in Patna, as the judgment-debtor was posted here. The execution case at first numbered 848 of 1938 of the Second Court of the Munsif, but by transfer became No. 1086 of 1938 of the First Court of the Munsif. In this latter Court there was another decree under execution—execution case No. 157 of the Second Court which in the First Court became No. 825 of 1938—and in this execution an attachment order had issued against the salary of the same judgment debtor. Under this attachment the Postmaster-General was deducting Rs. 40 a month, beginning on March 1, 1938, from the salary of the judgment-debtor and sending it to the Court after deducting the money-order commission of eight annas. Two such instalments had been sent to the Court, when the petitioner's execution case was received in this Court. He applied for rateable distribution, and his prayer was allowed.

There were only four instalments due under the attachment. The instalment that should have come in the beginning of May did not arrive, but, on May 28, the Postmaster-General made an enquiry about the date of the decree under execution on account of the amendment of s. 60 (1) (i), Civil P. C., by Act IX of 1937 which had recently been brought to his notice by the Director-General of Posts and Telegraphs. It was only on July 12, that the Munsif applied to this enquiry of the Postmaster-General. Meanwhile, the petitioner realised that the whole amount leviable under the attachment of the decree-holder would be realised by the attachments in May and June, and that after that there would be nothing for his application for rateable distribution to operate on. He, therefore, asked that the order for rateable distribution passed in his favour should be recalled and an attachment issued in his execution case to the extent of Rs. 50 a month from the salary of Lawie. This was allowed, and a writ of attachment sent to the Postmaster-General on June 12. On June 18, the Postmaster-General returned the writ on the ground that Lawie's salary was still under attachment in the other case: it appears that he had actually made the necessary deductions from Lawie's salary but had not yet heard from the Munsif and had therefore not sent on the sums withheld from the judgment debtor. The petitioner then complained that the Postmaster-General was not right to return this attachment or to withhold the sums of money that he had deducted from the salary payable to Lawie in May and June but had not sent to Court. Ultimately he made a claim against the Postmaster-General under O. XXI, r. 48, sub-r. (3) for the recovery of three instalments at Rs. 45 a month for the months of July, August and September.

There was before this a contempt proceeding against the Postmaster-General, which was discharged on the ground that this officer was not deliberately in contempt. The learned Munsif, from whose order of dismissal the present application arises, proceeded on the footing that though the decree of the other decree-holder would have been satisfied and the attachment at his instance come to an end at the time the petitioner took out his attachment, if the Postmaster-General had remitted to the Court the instalments due in the beginning of May and June, the result of the moneys being withheld by him, rightly or otherwise, was that that execution was not satisfied and the attachment was still subsisting at the time the petitioner's writ of attachment was issued by the Court or returned by the Postmaster-General on the ground of the other attachment. It is implied that as the previous attachment did in fact subsist and had not been withdrawn, the return of the petitioner's writ of attachment was in order.

Another point argued in the lower Court was that at any rate Rs. 5 per months was available for attachment at the instance of the petitioner as the judgment-debtor's pay was Rs. 190. The learned Munsif rejected this and accepted the Postmaster General's contention that only Rs. 35-10-6 was attachable, while Rs. 40 was being attached in the earlier execution case. It has been urged before me that the Postmaster-General is liable under O. XXI. r. 48, sub-r. (3), because the attachable proportion of Lawie's salary was not already being withheld and remitted to the Court in pursuance of a previous and unsatisfied order of attachment. This contention and the other contention that Rs. 5 at any rate was attachable under the writ of attachment unsuccessfully taken out by the petitioner make it necessary to look into the figures. The earlier decree was obtained in 1935; but the petitioner's decree was obtained in 1938, and as para. 1 of his petition to this Court shows, was based on three handnotes executed after June 1, 1937. Act IX of 1937 enlarges the exemption from attachment of judgment-debtor's salaries provided the proceedings relate to suits instituted on or after June 1, 1937. There is no dispute that the petitioner is hit by this amendment. His judgment-debtor's salary at the relevant time is taken by both the parties at Rs. 190.

The new cl. (i) of s. 60 (1), Civil P. C., exempts from attachment in execution of a decree the salary of any public officer to the extent of the first hundred rupees and one-half of the remainder of such salary. This provision by itself would operate to exempt Rs. 145 out of Lawie's salary of Rs. 190 from attachment. The petitioner claims to be entitled to attach the rest. But this claim overlooks cl. (k) of s. 60 (1), which also exempts all compulsory deposits in any fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1925, applies in so far as they are declared by that Act not to be liable to attachment. It appears that the judgment-debtor belongs to a recognized Provident Fund and that Rs. 12 a month is deducted from his salary on this account. The exemption of deposits in provident funds is separate from the exemption in respect of salaries given by cl. (i), and the result would appear to be that the recurring contributions of the judgment-debtor to the provident fund must, in working out the amount attachable, fall on that moiety of the excess of the salary over the first hundred rupees which is not already reserved for the judgment-debtor by cl. (i). In other words, a decree-holder such as the petitioner would only be entitled to look to the balance after deducting this provident fund contribution of Rs. 12 from the Rs. 45 that is left over after giving effect to the exemption granted by cl. (i). There is also a monthly income-tax deduction of Rs. 6-11-0 from the salary of Lawie. The note to r. 64 at p 19 of Vol. II of the Post and Telegraphs Manual says that subscriptions to funds recognized by Govt...and recoveries of income-tax, deductions for which appear in the pay bills, should be excluded from the aggregate pay for the purpose of attachment by a Civil Court. The meaning of this was apparently taken in the lower Court to be that these deductions are first to be made from the gross salary and that then the balance is to be dealt with under cl. (i). This method is distinctly favourable to the decree-holder if the deduction on account of contributions to the provident fund should exceed the income-tax payable, but it seems to assume that 'salary' means net salary.

Clause (i) does not say anything about the income-tax, but the learned Assistant Govt. Advocate, who appears for the Postmaster-General, has contended that the exemption created by cl. (i) must be read in the light of what s. 60 (1) says about property over which the judgment-debtor has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. It seems to me however that the reference to disposing power must be limited to the context, which is indicated by the words that follow :— "whether the sum be held in the name of the judgment-debtor or by another person in trust for him or on his behalf." Disbursing officers are now-a-days required by the Income Tax Act to deduct income-tax at the source, and therefore this portion of the salary may be said to be beyond the disposal of the salary holder. But there is nothing in cl. (i) to indicate that the salary mentioned there is the net salary. It may be that the duty cast by statute upon the disbursing officer to deduct the income-tax due operates, in relation to cl. (i) like a summary attachment and realization out of the attachable proportion of the salary. But it may also be that the Legislature did not intend to throw the income tax on the attachable proportion of the salary and leave the salary-holder a clear Rs. 100 a month plus one moiety of the excess. It is however not necessary to pronounce definitely on that point in the present case, for, as I have already shown, out, of a salary of Rs. 190 a decree-holder like the petitioner could not look to more than Rs. 33 per month for his writ of attachment to operate on, and as it happens, the amounts due under the previous attachment were both of them in excess of this figure. Clearly, therefore, there was nothing to attach under the writ taken out by the petitioner, provided the previous attachment was subsisting at the time it was to be given effect to.

This brings me to the other point raised. As the Postmaster-General had the moneys deducted in May and June in his own hands when he returned the writ of attachment issued at the instance of the petitioner, it is urged for the petitioner that he had no right to keep the moneys and prolong the attachment. But the Postmaster-General was making from the Munsif himself, enquires which cannot be characterised as improper; the same Munsif issued a writ of attachment for the petitioner without giving a reply, and the postmaster-General could not then assume that the previous attachment was at an end. He might perhaps have done well to inquire how he was to treate the former attachment. As things turned out, the earlier decree-holder afterwards asked the Court to return to the judgment-debtor the moneys withheld by the Postmaster-General in May and June. The prayer was allowed, the moneys returned to the judgment debtor in August and the attachment prolonged to July and August in consequence. The petitioner obtained his share out of the moneys realised by the prolonged attachment, which implies a definite recognition by him that the attachment was subsisting even in July and August. There could be no attachment through the Postmaster-General in September because Lawie applied in insolvency in August. Nothing could therefore have been attached for the petitioner in the turn that the matter actually took at the instance of the other decree-holder. As to the instalments of May and June, the attachment had not in fact been withdrawn by June 18, and the monies withheld by the Postmaster-General were disposed of in accordance with orders obtained from the Court not by the Postmaster-General but by the other decree holder in the interest of the judgment-debtor. There was undoubtedly much confusion in the case. The petitioner was not the only decree-holder that was making all sorts of applications to the Munsif, nor was the Court apparently looking in detail into the working of the section. I doubt if it is right for the Court to leave to the Postmaster General the interpretation of a section which may give rise to many controversies, or for the Postmaster-General to undertake this task. He has his Manual, but the Court must follow the Code. Sub-rule (2) of r. 48 of O. XXI, speaks of the attachable portion of the salary.

The Postmaster-General, not unnaturally, referred the Court in his correspondence to r. 63 of Vol. II, Post and Telegraphs Manual which, however, only speaks of a previous order of attachment, without saying anything about the attachable portion. It would, I venture to think, be better in such cases, for the Court, in the interests of all concerned, to obtain on the application of the decree-holder the relevant materials from the Postmaster-General in order to work out the figures itself and then issue an attachment for a definite, specified amount, so that the parties and the Postmaster-General may be under no misapprehension. Failing this, there are apt to be charges of collusion made unnecessarily, as happened in this case without any attempt whatsoever to establish it. Decree-holders, whom it is the duty of the Court to help in securing the fruits of their decrees, are liable to ask for what they are not entitled to if their rights are not made sufficiently clear ; and this means waste of time and money for all concerned. The Postmaster-General is also torn between his Manual and the Civil P. C., with which he cannot be very familiar, and between the demands of the decree-holder through the Court and those of the judgment-debtor. Instance of all this are to be found in the record of this case, which is none too well arranged and which I have scrutinized with such help as the bar was able to render. Some of the confusion below seems to have been due to the fact that two or three execution cases were pending in this Court after a transfer from the other Court, with the result that orders that one would expect to find in one case are only to be found in another. The petitioner is, of course, not particularly interested in the confusion or the misunderstanding of the Postmaster-General. The Court must without any hesitation allow his claim, if it is made out, as against the Postmaster-General under O. XXI, r. 48, sub-r. (3). But the position is that the attachable proportion of the salary of Lawie was withheld by him in May and June, and that if it was not remitted to the Court, this was because the matter was under correspondence between the Postmaster-General and the Court, and the Postmaster-General was in no way responsible for the order passed by the Court later on at the instance of the other decree-holder that the attachment for these two months should in effect be withdrawn and the moneys withheld from Lawie in these months returned to the judgment-debtor. What weakens the petitioner's position still further is the fact (already referred to) that when the attachment at the instance of the other decree-holder was, so to say, extended or renewed for the months of July and August, the petitioner took his share of the money. He can therefore hardly be heard to say that there was no attachment subsisting in these months. It must accordingly be held that any attachment at his instance was actually inadmissible in these months. This is, therefore, not a case where the Postmaster-General could (as we now know the facts) be said wrongfully to have returned the writ of attachment taken out by the petitioner. There was no reason why the Court should not have replied to his enquiry of May 28, before June 12, when the petitioner's writ of attachment was issued to him. In returning the writ he showed the previous attachment; and he carried out the orders of the Court in paying the judgment-debtor and making deductions from his pay in July and August. Taking all the circumstances into account, I am not satisfied that this is a case for interference in revision. The application is accordingly dismissed.

OUDH CHIEF COURT

Second Civil Appeal No. 278 of 1940

BENNETT, J.
SWAMI DAYAL—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
RAM BAHADUR SINGH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS

Court-fee—Suit for declaration that sale-deed was fictitious and did not affect plaintiff in realising his decree—No prayer for cancellation of deed—Suit is mere declaratory and involves no consequential relief.

A suit was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that a sale deed was fraudulent and fictitious and does not stand in his way in realising the amount due in respect of a decreee obtained by him, without any request for the cancellation of the deed, is merely of a declaratory character and involves no consequential relief. No ad valorem court-fee is therefore, payable on the amount for which the deed was executed.

[Case-law referred to.]

S. C. A. against the order of the Civil Judge, Rae Bareli, dated April 17, 1940.

Mr. Mohd. Ayub, for the Appellant.

Judgment.—In this case it has been reported by the office that there is a deficiency of Rs. 4-8 on the appeal in this Court, and a deficiency of Rs. 57-8 in the trial Court, and of the same amount in the lower Appellate Court.

A suit was brought by the appellant for a declaration that a sale-deed was fraudulent and fictitious. It is suggested that this involves cancellation of the sale-deed and that the case accordingly falls under s. 7 (iv-A) of the Court Fees Act as amended in 1938. Consequently, court-fee is payable in this Court on one fifth of the amount for which the instrument was executed. the plaintiff not being a party to it. On this calculation there is a deficiency in this Court of Rs. 4-8. As regards the Court below, the Amendment Act of 1938 does not apply as the suit was instituted and the first appeal preferred before that Act came into force. But it is suggested that the suit was under s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act, and therefore ad valorem court-fee should have been paid.

The office report is contested, and learned Counsel for the appellant has referred to certain cases of this Court as showing that such a suit is merely of a declaratory character and involves no consequential relief.

In Ram Dayal v. Baldeo Prasad (8 O. W. N. 124) (1) it was held by a Single Judge of this Court that a suit to declare a deed of gift and a sale-deed fictitious and void, and that the property covered by these deeds was capable of being attached and sold in execution, was purely a declaratory suit inasmuch as the prayer that the property covered by the deeds was to be declared to be capable of being attached and sold was implicit in the prayer that the deeds conveying the property should be held to be void. The facts in the present case are somewhat similar as the appellant also asked for a declaration that the sale deed does not stand in his way in realising the amount due in respect of a decree obtained by him.

In a more recent case of this Court, Ori Lal v. Rahim Zadi (1940 O. W. N. 389) (2) it was held that where the plaintiff filed a suit for the cancellation of a sale deed before the Amendment Act of 1938, came into force, on the ground that it was obtained from her by fraud and undue influence and that she herself was in possession, she could not be required to pay ad valorem court-fee on the market value of the property.

In a case which came before a Bench of this Court recently, Mashriqunnissa v. Parmeshwar Dayal Upadhya (F. C. A. No. 8 of 1937) a suit had been brought for a declaration that a certain deed of gift was fictitious and void, and court-fee was paid for declaration only and not for consequential relief. The adequacy of such court-fee was not challenged.

The office have referred to a case of the Allahabad High Court, Kalu Ram v. Babu Lal (1932 A. L. J. R. 684) (3) but the ruling in this case is merely to the effect that a suit for the cancellation of an instrument under s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act is not a declaratory suit, and that it involves a consequential relief.

This ruling would not be applicable in the present case if it is considered that the suit is not a suit under s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act but rather a suit under s. 42 of that Act. No request was made by the appellant for the cancellation of the instrument, and his Counsel argues that if the deed of sale be found to be fictitious as alleged, it is void ab initio and cancellation is not necessary.

Some support for this view is to be found in a Bench case of this Court, Baij Nath Singh v. Sri Nath Kuar (1939 O. W. N. 184) (4). In that case a suit was brought for a declaration inter alia that a will was void. It was contended that as the will was challenged on the ground of its not being genuine and not being registered under the law, it was not necessary for the plaintiff to ask for its cancellation. It was said with reference to this argument:

"This argument would perhaps have held good if the plaintiff had attacked the will as void only; but he also challenges it, in the alternative, as being voidable on account of having been brought about by undue influence, and the fact that the plaintiff was not content to challenge it on the ground of its being void, itself shows that he is not sure of the will being void as he alleges."

There appears to be no such complication in the present case. There is an express allegation that the will is fraudulent and fictitious which would imply that it was void ab initio. I think therefore that there is ground for holding that the suit involves no consequential relief. It is true that s. 39 of the Specific Relief Act provides for suits to have a written instrument adjudged void or voidable and also provides that the Court may, in its discretion, so adjudge it, and order it to be delivered up and cancelled. But the suit was not in the present case brought expressly under this section, and the section leaves it to the discretion of the Court to cancel the instrument. I do not consider in these circumstances, that I should be justified in finding that the present suit necessarily involves a consequential relief.

I accordingly reject the office report and hold that the proper court-fee has been paid.

PESHAWAR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT

Criminal Revision No. 250 of 1940

September 18, 1940

ALMOND, J. C.

DOST MUHAMMAD QUTAB DIN—

PETITIONER

MUNICIPAL COMMITTEE, HARIPUR HAZARA—RESPONDENT

Punjab Municipal Act (III of 1911), ss. 228, 172—Municipal Committee giving sanction in general terms for prosecution of petitioner for offence set out in sanction—Offence not mentioned by section but by facts constituting offence under s. 172—S. 228 held sufficiently complied with—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 242, 537—Object of s 242—Complaint fully giving details of offence—Accused specifically asked to explain case—Non-compliance with s. 242 held mere irregularity curable under s. 537.

The sanction of the Municipal Committee for a prosecution was given in general terms without mentioning any section but after reciting the facts which the committee considered to constitute an offence and which were found to constitute an offence under s. 172, Punjab Municipal Act. These facts were that the petitioner had built on municipal land without permission, that he had been served with a notice to demolish the building within two days and had not complied with it. The complaint prayed that the accused be punished for these acts:

Held, that in these circumstances the committee sanctioned the prosecution for such offence as might be found proved on the facts stated by them. Therefore, there was no defect of non-compliance with the provisions of s. 228 of the Act which were sufficiently complied with.

The primary object of the proceeding prescribed by s. 242, Criminal P. C., is to determine whether the accused pleads guilty to the charge or demands to be tried.

The facts on which the complaint was made were clearly stated in the written complaint. Detailed evidence of the facts alleged by the complainants was given by the prosecution witnesses. The accused himself after the close of the case for the prosecution was specifically asked to explain the case:

Held, that in these circumstances failure to comply with the provisions of s. 242, amounted merely to an irregularity which could be cured under s. 537. 140 Ind. Cas. 113 (4), relied on, 99 Ind. Cas. 411 (2), not approved, Subramaniya Iyer v. Emperor (3) and 100 Ind. Cas. 227 (5), referred to.

Cr. R. against an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Peshawar at Camp Abbottabad, dated May 25, 1940.

Sheikh Abdulla, for the Petitioner.

Lala Asa Nand, for the Respondent.

The Advocate-General, for the Crown.

Order.—The petitioner in this case, Dost Muhammad had been convicted of an offence under s. 172, Municipal Act, for building a verandah in front of his shop which encroaches on a public street. He petitioned for revision of his conviction to the Sessions Judge who dismissed his application and he now petitions this Court for revision of his conviction and sentence. It has been suggested by learned Counsel for the petitioner that the verandah in question has been built on the petitioner's own land, but there can in my opinion be no doubt whatsoever that the decision of the trial Court on this point is correct. There was formerly litigation between the Municipal Committee of Haripur and this petitioner respecting the land between his shop and the drain running along the street which was eventually decided by this Court in review application No. 4 of 1926. In that case it was definitely held that the petitioner's property did not extend up to the street drain. It is proved from the evidence of the municipal overseer that the present encroachment has been built up to the drain.

The principal arguments of the learned Counsel for the petitioner have been directed to legal points which are two in number. He contends that there was no sanction of the Municipal Committee to the prosecution of the offender under s. 172 of the Act as required by s. 223, and that the Municipal Committee by its resolution really intended to prosecute the petitioner for refusal to comply with a notice issued to him to demolish the building within a period of two days. In connexion with this part of his arguments learned Counsel has referred to some cases but only one of them appears to me to have any bearing on the question and that is a case reported in Gobind Ram v Emperor (1). The facts of that case are, however, distinguishable from the facts of the present case. In that case sanction for a prosecution specifically under s. 172 had been given and the accused was convicted of an offence under s. 219 of the Act. In the present case the sanction was given in general terms without mentioning any section but after reciting the facts which the Committee considered to constitute an offence. These facts were that the petitioner had built on municipal land without permission, that he had been served with a notice to demolish the building within two days and had not complied with it. The complaint prayed that the accused be punished for these acts. It appears to me in these circumstances that the Committee sanctioned the prosecution for such offence as might be found proved on the facts stated by them. I am, therefore, of opinion that there is no defect of non-compliance with the provisions of s. 228 of the Act. It has also been suggested in connexion with this part of the arguments that the conviction under s. 172 could not be maintained as only two days' notice to demolish the building was given whereas under s. 195 of the Act 30 days' notice was required. It is apparent, however, as pointed out by the trial Court that no notice to demolish is required at all where a building has been erected on a public street and a prosecution can be instituted forthwith without giving any notice to demolish at all.

The second legal point which is taken is that the provisions of s. 242, Criminal P. C., were not complied with. It is admitted that there was no compliance with this section of the Criminal P. C. In a case reported in Gopal Krishna Saha v. Motilal Singh (2) which was decided by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court it was held that failure to comply with the provisions of that section vitiated the trial on the principles laid down in the Privy Council ruling reported in Subramaniya Iyer v. Emperor (3). In a later case before the Judicial Commissioner's Court of Nagpur reported in Lahani v. Khushal (4), a contrary view was taken by the Judicial Commissioner who considered both, the Privy Council ruling reported in Subramaniya Iyer v. Emperor (3), and the Calcutta case (2), as well as subsequent pronouncement of the Privy Council reported in Abdul Rahman v. Emperor (5). In the case reported in Subramaniya Iyer v. Emperor (3), it was held that the trial of an accused person on a multiplicity of charges expressly prohibited by the Criminal P. C. vitiated the trial. In the later Privy Council case, it was held that failure to read over the depositions of witnesses under s. 360, Criminal P. C, was merely an irregularity. In my opinion the view which was taken by the Judicial Commissioner of Nagpur is the correct one. The primary object of the proceeding prescribed by s. 242, Criminal P. C., is to determine whether the accused pleads guilty to the charge or demands to be tried. In the present case, the facts on which the complaint was made were clearly stated in the written complaint. Detailed evidence of the facts alleged by the complainants was given by the prosecution witnesses. The accused himself after the close of the case for the prosecution was specifically asked whether he had encroached upon Govt. land and constructed a verandah without permission. He was further questioned as to whether he had failed to comply with the notice given to him. When all the evidence had been completed, it appears that the Court began to see the difficulty in recording a conviction under s. 219 of the Act in view of the fact that no legal notice had been given to the petitioner, and he called upon the Counsel for the complainants to justify the issuing of a notice for demolition within a period of less than 30 days and it was clearly because the complainants' Counsel was unable to justify the legality of the notice that there was no conviction under s. 219. The facts on which the case under s. 172 was based, however, were fully set out by the prosecution and the accused was specifically asked to explain that part of the case. I am of opinion that in these circumstances, failure to comply with the provisions of s. 242, Criminal P. C. amounts merely to an irregularity which can be cured under s. 537, Criminal P. C., and that there has as a matter of fact been no miscarriage of justice from this irregularity. For these reasons, I am of opinion, that there is no case made out for interference and accordingly dismiss this application.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 65-A—Mortgage before s. 65-A but lease after it—Section has no application—Lease by mortgagor for unusual term to defeat creditors, is void—Lessee has no right to redeem.

Where the mortgage took place before s. 65-A was introduced in T. P. Act, that section would not apply, even if the lease was actually after s. 65-A was introduced.

A lease is void, unless it is one granted in the ordinary course of management. A lease by the mortgagor for an unusual term to defeat the creditors is void and would not be binding on the mortgagee. The lessee in such a case will have no right to redeem. 164 Ind, Cas. 241 (6), dissented

Mr. B. V. Ramanarasu, for the Appellant.
Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Respondents.

Judgment.—The appellant was a simple money creditor of defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who executed a mortgage deed in favour of defendant No. 1 on June 20, 1923 which contained a covenant against leasing the property. Defendant No. 1 was also an unsecured creditor of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and obtained a simple money decree against them. Defendant No. 1 attempted to execute his decree in 1932; but by that time defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had filed an insolvency petition, and so the execution petition was struck off. The insolvency petition was subseqently dismissed; and before defendant No. 1 filed another execution petition against defendants No. 2 and 3, the plaintiff, in order to satisfy his own decree, had persuaded defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to execute a lease of the property for ten years. He then filed E. A. No. 2847 of 1933 in the execution petition of defendant No. 1, claiming that the equity of redemption could be sold only subject to his lease. That petition was dismissed; and the plaintiff thereupon filed the present suit for a declaration to that effect. The lower Appellate Court dismissed his suit on the ground that under s. 65-A, T. P. Act, such a lease would be void in view of the covenant against leasing the property. It is argued here that s. 65-A would not apply because the mortgage took place before s. 65-A was introduced into the T. P. Act. It is however contended on the other side that although that is true, the lease was actually after s. 65-A was introduced and that s. 65-A therefore applied. On this point I agree with the learned Advocate for the appellant. It is not contended that s. 65-A has any retrospective effect. Its effect was that whereas leases in contravention of a covenant was not void before the amendment, they became void afterwards. In effect, therefore, it added an implied term to the contract, which it could not do to a contract already executed on the date of the amendment.

Before s. 65-A was enacted, some Courts were inclined to apply the strict Law of England to mortgages in India also but the view that finally prevailed was that the mortgagor did have a right to lease and that although it was usual to introduce terms into the mortgage prohibiting the mortgagor from leasing lands, yet that condition was honoured as often in the breach as in the observance. It was accordingly held that a mortgage in breach of a covenant was not void, Radha Pershad v. Manohur Das (1) Ali Hassan v. Dhirja (2) and Niader Singh v. Ram Chandar (3) are authorities for that position; and it is not seriously disputed here that within certain limits leases can be granted. The above cases proceeded largely on the interpretation of s. 66, T. P. Act, which, by implication, gives the mortgagor a great deal of freedom in the management of his lands and even allows him to commit waste provided that the security is not thereby rendered insufficient. It is argued for the appellant that the only test of the validity of a lease is whether it renders the security insufficient and that before a lease can be declared to be invalid, it is necessary for the person seeking to avoid the lease to strictly prove that the security has been rendered insufficient.

In Niader Singh v. Ram Chandra (3) the amount of property leased was very small and it made no appreciable difference to the mortgage security. In the present case, however, the lease, as already observed, was for a period of ten years; which means that even if the property is sold, the purchaser, whether he be the mortgagee or a third party, can have no hope of getting possession for many years to come. Moreover, although the lease was bona fide in the sense that it was for consideration and that the appellant was working only to obtain satisfaction of his own decree, there can be no doubt that he had in view the position of his rival creditors and that this lease was brought about for the purpose of defeating the attempt of defendant No. 1 to proceed against the lands for the satisfaction of his own decree. The learned Judges who decided M. P. M. S. Firm v. Ko Pyu (4), were of opinion that a lease could not operate unless it was made in the ordinary course of management and that if it was one on exceptional terms, it ought not to operate. Pandalai, J., in Moidunni Haji v. Madhavan Nair (5) reviewed all the cases on this question and came to the conclusion that a lease is void, unless it is one granted in the ordinary course of management. Page, C. J. in M. P. M. S. Firm v. Ko Pyu (4) thought that s. 65-A was a statement of the then existing law. Following Pandalai, J. in the above case I hold that the present lease cannot be held to be valid either against the mortgagee or against the other creditors affected by it. The case in Moidunni Haji v. Madhavan Nair (5) is sought to be distinguished on the ground that there it was an action on the mortgage, whereas it is a mere accident in the present case that the preson who is seeking to execute his money decree against the equity of redemption should be the mortgagee. It is no doubt true that we must regard defendant No. I not as a mortgagee but as a simple money creditor executing his decree; but if the lease is a vaid one, he cannot be bound by it.

The remaining question is whether the appellant is entitled to redeem. It was held in Basanta Kumar v. Adarmani (6) that even where a lease was void, the lessee would be entitled to redeem. With all due respect to the learned Judge who decided that case, it is difficult to see how if a lease is void, (as it was in that case, because it related to a mortgage after the passing of s. 65-A, T. P. Act), it could confer any right at all; but that case was decided largely on the authority of Tarn v. Turner (7). I do not however consider this last case an authority for that position. That case was naturally one of an English mortgage, in which the ownership of the property passed by law to the mortgagee, leaving the mortgagor no legal title. The mortgagor therefore had no right left in law to deal with the property and a lease would therefore be technically void. It was however pointed out that although in law such was the position, yet equity recognized what was 'vulgarly known as an equity of redemption' which was regarded in equity as an estate. If it was an estate, then the mortgagor could transfer a part of it or the whole of it, and the transferee would therefore have some right in the property which would entitle him to redeem. Such a lease, if it had taken place in India, would not have been void at all. If a lease is declared to be void by a statue then the lessee can acquire no right at all.

The learned Advocate for respondent No. 1 argues that there was a merger of his mortgage with the equity of redemption which would prevent the lessee from redeeming. He points out that under s. 101, T. P. Act, only a subsequent encumbrancer can redeem. At the relevant time, however there could not have any such merger; for the suit relates to a time when the mortgagee was seeking to execute his simple money decree by sale of the equity of redemption. It is pointed out by respondent No. 1 that the plaint does not contain a prayer for redemption; and that therefore this Court should not allow the plaintiff to redeem. Both for that reason and on the ground that the lease by the mortgagor for an unusual term to defeat the creditors would not be binding on defendant No 1, the appeal is dismissed with costs. Leave to appeal is refused.

Special Bench
Civil Ref. No. 13 of 1939

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Stamp Act (II of 1899), ss. 40 (1) (a) 33, 42—Collector's certificate under s. 40 (1) (a), if can be reviewed either by himself or by any other authority — Collector's endorsement that document is properly stamped—Court, if can refuse to admit it on the ground that it is not properly stamped — Civil Court admitting document under proviso (a) to s. 35 and granting certificate under s. 42 (1) — Collector, if can impound that document again under s. 33 (1) or proceed to assess further deficiency and penalty under s. 40.

Where the Collector is of opinion that the instrument is duly stamped or is not chargeable with duty and gives a certificate to that effect, that certificate is final and the decision cannot be reviewed either by the Collector himself or by any other authority or by another Collector before whom the document appears. Reference under Stamp Act, Section 57 (1), relied on. [p. 370, col. 1.]

It is clear from the terms of s. 42 (2), Stamp Act, that the Court at any rate cannot refuse to admit a document in evidence on the ground that such document is not properly stamped where the Collector's endorsement appears that it is properly stamped or that the duty has been levied on it. [p. 370, col. 2.]

When a Civil Court has collected the deficiency and penalty which appears to the said Court to be due on any document and has admitted the document in evidence under proviso (a) to s. 35 of the Act, and has granted a certificate under sub-s. (1) of s. 42 of the Act that the proper duty and penalty have been levied in respect of the said document, it is not open to the Collector, on the document being subsequently produced before him in the performance of his official functions, to impound the same under sub-s. (1) of s. 33, Stamp Act, and to proceed thereafter to assess further deficiency and penalty under s. 40, Stamp Act. 47 Ind. Cas. 299 (2), referred to.

C. Ref. by the Financial Commissioner, Punjab, Lahore.

Mr. V. N Sethi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. Sleem, (Advocate-General), for the Crown.

Mr. A. N. Chona, for pro forma Respondent (Rajkumari).

Dalip Singh, J.—This case arises from a reference made by the learned Financial Commissioners under s. 57 Stamp Act. The facts of the case are that one Ganga Ram was the owner of certain shares, namely 30 shares in the Punjab Sugar Mills Co. Ltd.; their paid-up value was Rs. 1,500 the face value was Rs. 3,000 and the market value has been assessed at Rs. 8,445; 10 shares in the Nawab Ganj Sugar Mills, their paid up value was Rs. 750, the face value was Rs. 1,000 and the market value has been assessed at Rs. 1,270; one share in the Basti Sugar Mills; its paid up value was Rs. 100, its face value was also Rs. 100 and it market value has been assessed at Rs. 206. Thus the total paid up value was Rs. 2,350 the total face value was Rs. 4,100 and the total market value assessed was Rs. 9,921. On the death of Ganga Ram succession certificate proceedings were taken by his widow Mst. Har Devi in 1933. To these proceedings his mother Mst. Malawi Bai and his daughter Mst. Rajwanti were parties. While these proceedings were pending Mst. Malawai Bai applied for grant of letters of administration in 1934. On February 1, 1935, a compromise was entered into between the parties by which the shares were given to Har Devi. On May 15, 1935, Mst. Har Devi transferred the shares by deed to Nand Lal. The stamp on this document of transfer was Rs. 12-12-0, parties evidently considering that the stamp was to be paid on the paid up value, namely, Rs. 2,350. Nand Lal brought a suit on the basis of the transfer deed and the compromise deed was put in also. Both instruments were impounded but this reference is not concerned with the compromise deed at all. The transfer deed was impounded on October 16, 1935.

On November 5, 1935, the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held that the stamp should have been on the face value namely, Rs. 4,100. He accordingly demanded Rs. 18-12-0 as stamp deficiency and Rs. 187-8-0 as penalty, a total demand of Rs. 206-4-0. This was paid and a certificate, not exactly in the terms required under s. 42 was endorsed by the Court on the back of the document. An application was made under s. 39 to the Collector for refund of the penalty levied by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge. The learned Collector appears to have called for the original instrument from the Court, and, as far as can be made out from the record, the Court sent him the original instrument. The Collector then appears to have considered an enquiry necessary whether the stamp should have been on the face value of the shares or on their market value. It was held, after a report had been called from the Revenue Assistant, that the market value was Rs. 9921 and on May 15, 1937 the Collector accepted this report and agreed as to the market value of the shares. A revision was taken to then Commissioner who forwarded it to the Financial Commissioners on July 15 1938, and the Financial Commissioners have referred a certain question, which will be stated later, under s. 57 of the Act. It appears that while the proceedings were still pending before the learned Collector an application was made to the Commissioner under s. 45 for refund of the penalty on June 20, 1936. This applicatian however, was rejected on October 8, 1936. The question that has now been referred by the learned Financial Commissioners is stated by them as follows:

"Whether when a Civil Court has collected the deficiency and penalty which appears to the said Court to be due on any document and has admitted the document in evidence under proviso (a) to s 35 of the Act, and has granted a certificate under sub-s. (1) of s. 42 of the Act that the proper duty and penalty have been levied in respect of the said document, it is open to the Collector on the document being subsequently produced before him in the performance of his official functions, to impound the same under sub-s. (1) of s. 33 Stamp Act, and to proceed thereafter to assess further deficiency and penalty under s. 40, Stamp Act, notwithstanding the fact that when a copy of the document with the certificate of the Court was forwarded to him under sub-s (1) of s. 38 of the Act the Collector took no action under s 61 of the Act to apply to the appellate Court concerned for a declaration that some higher rate of duty is chargeable on the document than was at first assessed by the Civil Court under proviso (a) to s. 35 of the Act?".

The question referred assumes that a proper certificate was given under sub-s. (1) of s. 42 of the Act and I do not think it is open to this Court to go into the question whether the terms of the certificate actually granted did or did not comply with the provisions of sub-s. (1) of s. 42. Assuming therefore, that the proper certificate was given by the Court under the provisions of s. 42 (1) the question arises whether this certificate is final for all purposes or whether the Collector can re-assess the document on the ground that the Court had made a mistake in the assessment and the instrument was really chargeable with a larger stamp duty. This question assumes again that the document came before the Collector in the performance of his functions within the terms of s. 33. As has been pointed out above, the Collector appears to have sent for the original document from the Court and it might be open to argument as to whether the Collector in so acting caused the instrument to come before him in the performance of his functions. But as this point has also not been referred to us, I do not think it is open to this Court to go into this question or pronounce any decision on it. I, therefore, proceed to consider the real question arising in the case namely, whether the certificate given by the Court under s. 42 (1) is final or not.

Now, there is no doubt that if one looks purely at the language of s. 33 (1) it would seem as if the Collector was bound to impound the document whenever it was produced or came before him if, in his opinion it was not a properly stamped document. No exception is made in the language with regard to an instrument which has already been the subject of assessment of stamp duty either by a Court or by a Collector before whom the document was previously produced or before whom it had come in the performance of his functions. Under s. 40 (1) the Collector is then to take one of two courses: If he is of opinion that such instrument is duly stamped or is not chargeable with duty, he should certify by endorsement thereon that it is duly stamped, or that it is not so chargeable as the case may be. If he does so then under s. 40 (2) this certificate is conclusive evidence of the matter stated therein. It seems, therefore, clear that where the Collector is of opinion that the instrument is duly stamped or is not chargeable with duty and gives a certificate to that effect, that certificate is final and the decision cannot be reviewed either by the Collector himself or by any other authority or by another Collector before whom the document appears. This has been so held on high authority of Reference under Stamp Act, Section 57 (1).

(1) 25 M 752.

The next procedure provided by s. 40 (1) (b) is, if the Collector is of opinion that such instrument is chargeable with duty and is not duly stamped, he shall require the payment of the proper duty together with a penalty. In s. 42 (1) it is provided that where the duty and penalty (if any) leviable in respect of any instrument have been paid the Collector shall certify by endorsement thereon that the proper duty or, the proper duty and penalty (stating the amount of each) have been levied in respect thereof, and under s. 42 (2) every instrument so endorsed shall thereupon be admissible in evidence, and may be registered and acted upon and authenticated as if it had been duly stamped, and must be delivered to the person from whose possession it came into the hands of the officer impounding it if he so applies or to any person whom such person may direct it to be delivered. There is a provision that where the instrument has been admitted under s. 35 that is by a Court on payment of duty and penalty it shall not be delivered to the person from whose possession it came for one month or if the Collector requires it to be detained further until the Collector who has certified that it shall be further detained, has cancelled such certificate. It is sought to be contended by the learned Advocate-General that the absence of any clause, as appears under s. 40 (2), as to the conclusive nature of the document in s. 42, means that the decision of the Court or of the Collector can be varied or need not be considered final with reference to s. 33 when the instrument again comes before any Court or any Collector. So far as a Court is concerned, however, the terms of s. 42 (2) make it perfectly clear that the Court could not refuse to receive any such document in evidence. This is quite apart from the provisions embodied in s. 35 which do not refer to the admission of a document after payment of duty or penalty as the case may be. It seems clear from the terms of s. 42 (2) that the Court at any rate cannot refuse to admit a document in evidence on the ground that such document is not properly stamped where the Collector's endorsement appears that it is properly stamped or that the duty has been levied on it. The contention, therefore, of the learned Advocate-General on this point cannot be sustained. His main argument rests indeed on the language used in s. 33 and in s. 40. This argument no doubt has force, but it seems to me considering the general scheme of the Act that the arguments against giving this interpretation are even stronger.

The first argument which appears to me to be of weight is that if a Court has levied what in its opinion is the proper duty and penalty to be paid on the document provision is made in s. 61 whereby the Collector, to whom a copy of the document has been sent, can require the appellate Court to take the order of the Court into consideration and the appellate Court may give the Collector a declaration that a higher duty and penaly than those paid were due on the instrument, yet s. 61 does not provide that this higher duty can be levied from the person concerned in the matter at all. On the contrary, s. 61 (4) provides only that a prosecution may be launched by the Collector upon the instrument and it is provided that the prosecution shall not be launched if the penalty and duty is paid as declared by the higher Court unless the Collector thinks that an offence was committed with an intention of evading payment of the proper duty. Secondly, s. 61 (4) (b) provides expressly that the declaration made by the appellate Court shall not affect the validity of any certificate granted under s. 42. The learned Advocate-General contended that this merely meant that for the purposes of s. 42 (2) the instrument will still be good but that it did not affect the question where a further duty would not be levied under s. 40. But s. 40 does not say that the Collector while impounding an instrument under s. 33 or receiving an instrument under s. 38 (2) can also deal with an instrument sent to him after impounding under s. 61 (3). It therefore follows that there is no process by which the higher duty and penalty declared by the appellate Court to be chargeable on the instrument can be recovered from the person concerned. He may pay it voluntarily in order to avoid prosecution but that is a different question and the validity of the certificate appears to me to mean that the terms of the certificate still hold good, namely that the proper duty and penalty have been recovered from the person in terms of the endorsement required under s. 42 (1). In other words that for all purposes the document must be held to be properly stamped.

Another argument which appears to me to have force is that the Legislature could hardly have contemplated that the Collector should be able to differ from the finding of a Court and from the finding of a previous Collector. If the contention that the terms of s. 33 merely refer to the opinion of the Collector and do not exclude documents which have been the subject of previous decision by a Court or a Collector were correct it would follow that a number of Collectors might come to different conclusions about a document and the duty and penalty leviable thereon. It could hardly have been contemplated by the Legislature that every time a document reached a Collector he should be able to review (for that is what it practially amounts to) the decision of his predecessor. Further, if each Collector when deciding would have to endorse on the document that proper duty and penalty had been levied the document would then have a series of differing endorsements that the proper duty and penalty had been levied thereon. This could hardly have been contemplated by the Legislature. Thirdly, there does not appear to me any good reason why if the Collector is of opinion that the document is properly stamped the opinion should be final under the terms of s. 40 (2) but that the opinion of the Collector or the Court that the document has been properly stamped after payment of any deficit duty and penalty levied should not be final. There is a Full Bench ruling on this point reported in Khubchand, In the matter of (2), but as the ruling appears, with great respect, to confuse the provisions of s. 42 (1) with the provisions of s. 40 (1) (a), I do not propose to lay any great stress on it. Nevertheless the conclusion reached is the same as the conclusion to which I have come. I am therefore of opinion on the point referred that the answer of the Court should be that the Collector cannot impound the document again under the provisions of s. 33 (1) or proceed to assess further deficiency and penalty under the provisions of s. 40, Stamp Act, where the Court has granted a certificate under s. 42 (1) of the Act having admitted the document into evidence under the provisions of proviso (a) of s. 35.

Criminal Revision No. 392 of 1940

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 139-A —S. 139-A not complied with by Magistrate—Effect.

Where a Magistrate has not complied with the provisions of s. 139-A, Criminal P. C., his order should be set aside. 190 Ind. Cas. 879 (2), followed.

Cr. R. from an order of the Sessions Judge of Darbhanga, dated May 14, 1940.

Mr. K. Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha and R. Choudhari, for the Opposite Party.

Order,—This rule must be made absolute. It arises out of proceeding under Chap. X. of the Criminal P. C. The Magistrate made an order under s. 133 in respect of a well which has been found to be public. Section 139-A of the Criminal P. C. required the Magistrate who was dealing with the case, on the appearance before him of the person against whom the order was made, to question him as to whether he denied the existence of any public right in respect of the place in question, and if he did so, to enquire into the matter before proceeding under ss. 137 or 138. Why s. 139-A is so repeatedly overlooked it is not easy to imagine, for the section has been in the statute for over 16 years. In the present case, however, the matter seems to have been handled by more than one Magistrate, none of whom seems to have any idea of the procedure at all. One of them went on fixing dates for the evidence of party II and of party I on successive dates, but actually examined what he calls P. Ws. No. 1. It was after this that the second party, the petitioner before me, made an application asking to be allowed to adduce evidence in support of his denial of the public right alleged by the other side, and the Magistrate adjourned the case for the evidence of the parties after "I have decided the point raised." Now as it happens, he never decided that point at all, and then another Magistrate dealt with the case under s. 137.

Mr. Hareshwar Prasad Sinha who appears for the opposite party before me has cited a case from Manohar Singh v. Emperor (1), in which Mr. Justice Boys considered the question of what to do in a case in which s. 139-A had not been complied with, and instead of setting aside the order of the lower Court, allowed to the party who was found not to be supported by evidence six months to obtain an order in his favour from the Civil Court. The learned Advocate has urged that the same course may be followed in the present case, as the finding is that the well is a public well. It appears, however, that the current of decisions in this Court runs in a different direction and quite recently in Criminal Reference No. 30 of 1940 (Muni Lal Agarwala v. The Public of Bhagalpur) (2). Mr. Justice Agarwala overruled the contention that an order should not be set aside merely because the Magistrate did not comply with the provisions of s. 139-A. "That however", said the learned Judge,

"is to overlook the whole object of the provisions of that section. Those provisions are clearly designed to ensure that where there is reliable evidence in support of the denial of the existence of the public right, the Magistrate shall have no jurisdiction to pronounce on the cogency of that evidence but must refer the matter to a Civil Court. When the Magistrate does not direct his mind at all to ascertaining whether there is any evidence in support of the denial of the existence of the public right, and takes upon himself to decide the question whether a public right exists or not, he usurps the function of a Civil Court and deprives the party concerned of the right to have the matter decided by that Court."

This, if I may respectfully say so, is the proper way of approaching the matter; and when that is done, there cannot be any question that the order of the lower Court must be set aside. The Magistrate is directed to re-hear the proceeding as from the state where the second party should have been asked under s. 139-A (1) whether he denied the existence of the public right.

Rangoon City Municipal Act (VI of 1922), s. 194—Applicability—There must be tax claimable—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to decide whether person is in arrears of municipal tax—Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (II of 1876), ss. 55, 56—Question as to arrears of land revenue or defaulter or both—Jurisdiction of Civil Court to decide—Suit to set aside sale by Township Officer for arrear of land revenue—Civil Court, if can entertain—Government purchasing land at revenue sale and setting holder as licensee—Suit to set aside sale—Government, if necessary party—Pleadings—Amendment—Suit to set aside revenue sale—Amendment of plaint at stage of second appeal to the effect that ss 55 and 56, Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act (II of 1876), are ultra vires, cannot be allowed.

Before s. 194, Rang. City Municipal Act comes into operation there must be arrears of tax or some fee or money claimable. There is no statute which says that the fulfilment or non-fulfilment of this condition precedent is to be decided by any person so that his decision is to be final and the jurisdiction of the Court is to be ousted. Accordingly the Court may enquire whether a person is in arrear with payment of a municipal tax, for, if he is not, the Land Revenue Acts have no application.

With regard to the assessment and collection of land revenue the (Lower) Burma Land and Revenue Act, 1876, specifically applies. It is not necessary to make any enquiry to see whether it does so or not. There is no preliminary question of whether arrears exist before the case is taken up by the Revenue Officer, and accordingly this question is one for him to determine. The Civil Court has no jurisdiction in view of ss. 55 and 56, Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, to decide the question as to arrears of land revenue or defaulter or both and, therefore, it cannot entertain suit to set aside a sale held by Township Officer for land revenue arrears. 181 Ind. Cas. 590 (2), relied on, 180 Ind. Cas. 234 (1) and 139 Ind. Cas. 566 (3), distinguished.

Per Dunkley, J.—Government is a necessary and proper party to a suit to set aside a revenue sale, where the purchaser is the Govt. who settles the holder of the land as a licensee. To such a case s. 56, would apply. 30 Ind. Cas. 772 (4), referred to.

In a suit to set aside a sale held by Township Officer in Lower Burma, the plaintiff cannot be allowed to amend his plaint at the stage of second appeal, to the effect that parts of ss. 55 and 56, Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act are ultra vires.

Mr. U Sein Tun Aung, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. T. Leong, for Respondents Nos. 1. to 11.

Roberts, C. J.—The plaintiffs brought this suit to set aside a sale held by a Township Officer in Lower Burma for arrears of land revenue. The Sub-Divisional Court thought that it had jurisdiction to entertain such a suit and it is contended, upon the authority in Maung Thaung v. Shaik Abdul Gani (1), that such a conclusion was right. Section 194., Rang. Municipal Act, provides that any arrears of tax or any fee or other money claimable by the Corporation thereunder may be recovered as if they were arrears of land revenue. Before this section comes into operation there must be arrears of tax or some fee or money claimable. There is no statute which says that the fulfilment or non-fulfilment of this condition precedent is to be decided by any person so that his decision is to be final and the jurisdiction of the Court is to be ousted. Accordingly the Court may enquire whether a person is in arrear with payment of a municipal tax, for if he is not, the Land Revenue Acts have no application. But with regard to the assessment and collection of land revenue the (Lower) Burma Land and Revenue Act, 1876, specifically applies. It is not necessary to make any enquiry to see whether it does so or not. There is no preliminary question of whether arrears exist before the case is taken up by the Revenue Officer, and accordingly this question is one for him to determine. Section 56 provides (inter alia) that no Civil Court shall exercise jurisdiction as to any matters, claims and questions mentioned in proviso 1 to s. 55. When these are examined it will be seen that the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts is ousted as to any questions of liability of any person under ss. 37 and 38; questions as to whether any revenue, tax or rate is in arrear; questions as to the legality of process in recovering sums in arrear: and questions as to the validity of any sale under s. 45 or proclamation under s. 47 of the Act.

In other words in land revenue cases Revenue Courts deal with such matters to the exclusion of Civil Courts; in cases to which land revenue proceedings are made applicable for the recovery of arrears of moneys due, it must first be ascertained that arrears exist. Baguley, J., pointed out in Ko Cheik v Secretary of State (2), that s. 53 (2) (xii) of the Upper Burma Land and Revenue Regulation bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts with regard to all claims in connection with collection of revenue. The Act in Lower Burma is no less explicit. The appellant's Counsel desires to show that the land Revenue Officer did not comply with various provisions of the Act in reaching his decisions he says that there was no "defaulter" within the meaning of s. 44 and that there was no sum "in arrear" but these are matters which we are expressly precluded by the terms of the Act from considering. Two lines of argument were pursued on behalf of the appellants. First it was urged that a suit to set aside a sale by a Township Officer for arrears of land revenue was maintainable in Bengal; the reason for this is that the Bengal Land Revenue Sales Act, 1859 is quite different from the law in this country If a plaintiff can show that he has suffered substantial injury when such a sale has taken place contrary to the provisions of that Act s. 33 of the Act expressly permits to Civil Courts to intervene; but there is no such provision in the law in Burma. It follows that the long line of authorities sought to be invoked under the Ben. Act can be of no assistance in this country.

(1) (1938) Rang. 603; 180 Ind. Cas. 234; A I R 1939 Rang. 30; 11 R Rang. 395.

(2) (1939) Rang. 275; 181 Ind. Cas. 590; A I R 1939 Rang. 160; 11 R Rang. 473.

Secondly it was contended that we should assume that ss. 55 and 56, Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act, which has been in operation for over sixty years deprives a party aggrieved of his rights to property. It is enough to say that it does not follow that because a person aggrieved cannot file a suit in the Civil Courts to set aside a sale under the Act he has no other remedy; not only does he have the rights of appeal given him by the Act itself but he may be advised in certain cases of other remedies as well. It is suggested that we ought to permit an amendment of the pleadings at this stage in order to change the cause of action and to substitute for it a suit for a declaration that parts of ss. 55 and 56 of the Act are ultra vires. That is not a proposition to which we can assent. Some attempt was made to employ arguments which were used in a recent case which came before this High Court by way of an application for a writ of certiorari. But the present proceedings stand on an entirely different footing. As I have pointed out they were brought in a Sub-Divisional Court to set aside the acts of a Revenue Officer, and to determine questions which the Act says are not to be determined by the Civil Courts. Accordingly this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Mosely, J.—I agree.

Dunkley, J.—I agree with my Lord, the Chief Justice, that this second appeal must be dismissed with costs, as the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in regard to the subject-matter of the suit is ousted by the provisions of s. 56, Lower Burma Land and Revenue Act. The two Burma cases which have been cited by learned Counsel for the appellants are clearly distinguishable. In Trustees for the Development of the City of Rangoon v. G. S. Behara & Sons (3), the question was the recovery of an arrear of a tax imposed under the Rangoon Development Trust Act, 1920. The relevant provision of this Act is s. 86 (1), which enacts that:

"Any sum of money, or any tax, or fee due to or claimable by the Board (i. e. the Board of Trustees) may be recovered by the Board as if it was an arrear of land revenue."

(3) 10 R 412; 139 Ind. Cas. 566; A I R 1932 Rang 123; Ind. Rul. (1932) Rang. 195.

In Maung Thaung v. Shaik Abdul Gani (1), the question was the recovery of an arrear of municipal taxes and the City of Rangoon Municipal Act, 1922, the relevant section of which is s. 194 (1), which enacts that:

"Any arrears of tax or any fee or other money claimable by the Corporation under this Act may be recovered as if they were arrears of land revenue."

Consequently, in both these cases the provisions of the Land and Revenue Act for the recovery of arrears of revenue do not come into play until there is an arrear of tax claimable from the person from whom the trustees of the Corporation of Rangoon as the case may be, are claiming it. As Page, C. J., said in the former case (3), (at p. 433*), it is in such cases a condition-precedent to the right of the authorities concerned to have recourse to the special procedure prescribed in the Land and Revenue Act that a sum has fallen due, and that it is due from the person from whom it is being claimed. These are, therefore, questions which can be decided by the Civil Courts, and with respect to which the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts has not been ousted. But in the case of an arrear of land revenue, the provisions of the Land and Revenue Act alone have to be considered, and the arrears fall to be recovered by the procedure laid down in that Act only; and under the Land and Revenue Act, the questions as to whether any revenue is in arrear, and by whom it is payable, are to be decided by the Revenue Courts, and the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in such matters is ousted by the provisions of s. 56. I agree with my Lord that the law in regard to the jurisdiction of Civil Courts in such a matter has been correctly laid down by Baguley, J. in Ko Cheik v. Secretary of State (2).

Reference has also been made to the line of cases of which Maung Naw v. Ma Shwe Hmat (4), is the leading case, in which it was decided that the prohibition contained in s. 56, Land and Revenue Act, does not extend to disputes between private individuals regarding the right to occupy land. The answer to this point is that the Govt. of Burma was a necessary and proper party to this suit, and the suit could not succeed without joining Govt. as a party. The appellants seek to set aside a revenue sale at which Govt. was the purchaser, and the predecessor-in-interest of the respondents, Maung Po Ni, is a mere licensee of Govt. Hence this suit, which was to set aside the revenue sale and to put the appellants into possession of the land, could not be decreed unless Govt. was made a party to the suit.

MADRAS HIGH COURT

Criminal Appeal No. 265 of 1938
January 20, 1939
PANDRANG ROW, J.
In re BALAM PATEYYA AND OTHERS —APPELLANTS

Criminal trial—Joint trial—Large number of offences—Joint trial, when can be held—Proper procedure in such case, stated—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 297—Riot—Which party started riot, doubtful—Warning to jury against acting on uncorroborated evidence of interested witnesses and to treat such evidence with caution, is necessary—Failure to warn is misdirection—Vandalism or theft and dacoity are different—Failure to point out difference to jury amounts to misdirection.

Unless all the offences for which a joint trial is held are parts of the same transaction, there can be no joint trial held according to law in respect of all the offences. A joint trial in respect of very large number of counts is very much to be deprecated even though the law may not prohibit it. Such a trial not only prejudices the accused but also works havoc in the minds of the jury and makes it very difficult if not impossible for them to express any rational opinion on the matters remitted to them for judgment. No doubt, joint trials would be legal in certain circumstances, but the general rule is that there should be a separate trial in respect of every separate charge. It is the exceptional cases which contemplate joint trials in respect of a number of charges, and there is no rule of law which compels a Judge to hold a joint trial. Even where a joint trial is permitted by law, it is open to him, to hold separate trials. The usual course to be adopted in cases of large number of counts is for the Public Prosecutor to be asked to select what he considers to be the best case from his point of view and to try that case first and leave the other charges to be tried if necessary later on after the result of the first trial is known. [p. 377, col. 2; p. 378, col. 1]

Where the parties were at bitter enmity and so far as the question of motive was concerned, either of the parties might have started the riot, it is obviously incumbent on the Judge to warn the jury not once, but more than once wherever the evidence was very scanty and lacked corroboration, where corroboration was available, to treat the uncorroborated evidence offered on behalf of the Crown with caution and to accept it only after a careful examination thereof. The failure of the Judge to so warn the jury amounts to misdirection. [p. 378, col. 2; p. 379, col. 2]

Vandalism is one thing and dacoity and theft are quite different, and hence the failure of the Judge to point out the difference between vandalism and dacoity or theft to the jury when asking them to give their verdict on counts relating to dacoity and theft amounts to misdirection. Cr. A. against an order of the Sessions Court, West Godavari Division, in C. C. No. 6 of 1938.

Messrs. K. S. Jayarama Iyer and G. Gopalaswami, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. Venkataraghavachariar, for the Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Judgment.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Sessions Judge of West Godavari dated May 7, 1938, in S C. No, 6 of 1938, on his file. The case related to certain occurrences which took place in the village of Mukkumala on August 15, 1937. The trial in the Sessions Court began only on March 21, 1938, and went on for nearly a month and a half. There were 24 accused and the number of witnesses examined for the prosecution were 51 and a fairly large number of exhibits were filed on both sides. To add to the complexity and the difficulty which the case must have presented to the jury who in respect of some of the counts acted as assessors and also to the trial Judge, the charges against the accused were on no loss than 66 counts and the occurrences related to about fifteen different places, the first occurrence being at the hamlet of the Edigas in the village known as the Edigagudam, the next being the gingelly fields near it, the third occurrence being between the washerman's hut and Edigagudam and the remaining occurrences having taken place in various houses belonging to the Kammas in the village, the houses being twelve in number. The first count was in resect of rioting with deadly weapons against all the twenty-four accused; counts 2 to 7 related to offences of causing grevious hurt with dangerous weapows, i. e., ofiences under s. 326, I. P. C, some of the counts being against a few of the accused and the others being against the rest constructively by the operation of s. 149, I. P. C. counts 8 to 29 related to hurt with a dangerous weapon, an offence under s. 324, I. P. C. some of the counts being under that section alone against some of the accused and the others being against the remaining accused constructively by the operation of s. 149, I. P. C., counts 30 to 44 were in respect of the offence of mischief punishable under s. 440, I. P. C., against all the accused in the various houses in which mischief is said to have been committed. So far as this offence is concerned, it must be mentioned that there was no charge under s. 149, I. P. C. Counts 45 to 56 were counts relating to the offence of housebreaking punishable under s. 455, I. P. C., against all the accused in the respective houses referred to in the counts; counts 57 to 62 related to the offences of dacoity punishable under s. 398, I. P. C., against all the accused in respect of the various houses referred to in the counts; the remaining four counts 63 to 66 related to the offence of a theft in a building against all the accused in the respective houses referred to in the counts. Counts 45 to 66 were tried with the aid of a jury and the jurymen acted as assessors in respect of the other charges which were triable with the aid of assessors.

The entire trial was held jointly and there was no separate trial in respect of any counts. In the result thirteen out of the twenty four accused were convicted on various counts—six Edigas and seven Malas, and these are the appellants in this appeal. Most of the appellants have been convicted under a very large number of counts ranging from 13 to 24. The sentences have however been ordered to run concurrently in all cases and the longest sentence was only three years on the ground as stated in the judgment that though the offences were grave, the rioters had behaved with moderation and they had been on remand for several months and also because most of the offences were practically parts of one transaction. This observation of the learned Judge that most of the offences were practically parts of one transaction shows that the learned Judge himself was not quite sure that all the offences were actually parts of the same transaction. It is obvious that unless all the offences were parts of the same transaction, there could have been no joint trial held according to law in respect of all the offences. This point will have to be considered at greater length later on after giving a brief description of the facts of the case.

It is not disputed that there had been trouble between the Kamma community on the one hand and the Ediga and Mala communities on the other, in the village for some time before the occurrence. The trouble was mainly due to a dispute about wages, the Kammas being generally speaking, employers, and the Edigas and the Malas being generally labourers employed by the Kammas. A fairly accurate account of the state of affairs about a week or so before the occurrence is to be found in the special report sent by the Sub-Inspector to the Joint Magistrate (Ex. B) on August 8, 1937. As observed by him, the fight by the labourers against their employers had already begun and here were complaints made to the authorities by both parties. The Sub-Inspector warned both parties and asked for instructions. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate appears to have been of the opinion that the state of affairs did not warrant any action on his part. To this effect he made an endorsement on the report on August 13, 1937. On the same date the Inspector of Police appears to have sent a report to the joint Magistrate (Ex. E 1) praying for action to be taken under s. 107, Criminal P. C., against ten members each of the two parties on the following grounds :

"The strike is formed about one and a half months ago and is getting from bad to worse day by day. The Sub-Inspector, Tanuku, enquired into this and tried his best to arrange a compromise but invain. The Kammas are rich and obstinate. The Edigas are poor but desperate. Their feelings are highly strained and they are trying to avenge each other. Even in my enquiry both parties abused each other and the situation is serious. Unless both parties are bound over they are determined to commit a breach of the peace."

Unfortunately, for reasons which are not discoverable on the record the Joint Magistrate does not appear to have taken any action in the matter as requested by the Inspector of Police, and two days after the date of the report the trouble came to a head, and there was undoubtedly a serious breach of the peace in the village owing to the clash between the warring communites in the village. There can be no doubt that the beginning of the clash was provoked by the unwarranted action of some of the Kamma community in going to the hamlet of the Edigas and searching the house of one of the Edigas on the pretext that certain hay had been stolen and was secreted in the house. No attempt has been made before me on behalf of the Crown to justify this action on the part of the village Munsif and there is no doubt that it was this raid into the house of one of the Edigas by the village Munsif and some of the Kammas that was the immediate cause of the clash. The clash was thus sudden and was not the result of any previously concerted action on the part of the appellants and it is impossible to say that the events that took place at Edigagudam and even the events that took place in the gingelly fields immediately afterwards in which two or three people were beaten are parts of the same transaction as the events that followed after a large number of Edigas and Malas had collected subsequent to these events and made a rush to the village in which the Kamma houses were situated.

There was in my opinion no justification for regarding all the events that took place on that day in the village as parts of the same transaction, and it was not right to try the cases in respect of all these occurrences in one trial. The danger of the joint trial in this case is indeed apparent on the most cursory examination of the judgment itself. The large number of the counts on which the trial was held led to a lengthy trial spread over nearly a month and a half and must have necessarily confused the minds of the jury the members of which also acted as assessors in respect of some of the counts. The result of such confusion is apparent, for it is clear from a mere perusal of the verdict of the jury on some counts and the opinions of the jurymen as assessors in respect of the connected counts arising out of the same occurrences, that they are absolutely inconsistent. To put it in other words, even where the occurrence is one and the same in the sense that it took place in the same house and the evidence regarding the occurrence was the same but different offences were committed, for instance, hurt, mischief and housebreaking and dacoity, the members of the jury gave a verdict which is inconsistent with their opinions as assessors in respect of the counts on which the trial was with the aid of assessor. This is absolutely inexplicable except on the supposition that their minds were so confused by reason of the length of the trial, the volume of the evidence and, if one may say so without meaning any disrespect to the learned Sessions Judge, the very lengthy and not very clear charge which he delivered to the jury. The summing up appears to have lasted from 11 in the forenoon till about 7 in the evening, an ordeal which most people would find it difficult to stand without some untoward reaction in their minds.

It is very difficult in a case where the trial has lasted for more than a month, and a number of witnesses were examined, for the members of the jury to carry in their minds any clear idea either of the demeanour of the witnesses or of the particular charges to which the evidence of a particular witness relates and this inability to remember is not removed by the long charge a charge so long that before one got to the end of it, one must necessarily have forgotten something of the beginning or the middle. The difficulty was increased by reason of the fact that the ordinary precaution of stating to the jury the evidence as against each of the accussed was not followed in this case. The evidence was undoubtedly marshalled and ably marshalled, by the learned Judge as regards each particular count or connected sets of counts, but unfortunately no attempt was made either at the beginning or at the end to indicate to the jury what was the evidence against each particular accused and in respect of each particular count. It is not known whether the members of the jury were furnished with a copy of the counts or whether a translation was furnished to them, and one can very well imagine the state in which their minds were at the end of the charge, and the clearest indication of that state is furnished by the inconsistency between the verdict of the jury and the opinions of the same gentlemen as assessors in respect of the same occurrence backed by the same evidence.

A joint trial in respect of very large number of counts is very much to be deprecated even though the law may not prohibit it. It is one thing to say that a joint trial was legal but quite another to say that it was proper in the circumstances. No doubt, joint trials would be legal in certain circumstances, but the general rule is that there should be a separate trial in respect of every separate charge. It is the exceptional cases which contemplate joint trials in respect of a number of charges, and there is no rule of law which compels a Judge to hold a joint trial. Even where a joint trial is permitted by law, it is open to him, and in a case like this it would have been expedient also to have held separate trials. The usual course adopted in such circumstances is for the Public Prosecutor to be asked to select what he considers to be the best case from his point of view and to try that case first and leave the other charges to be tried if necessary later on after the result of the first trial is known. This practice is in accordance with common sense and does justice to the accused and does not result in the confusion that we find in the present case as a result of the joint trial held in respect of so many as 66 counts.

After going through the charge to the jury, I am of opinion, that it has not been fair to the accused and that it contains several misdirections. There has also been an improper exclusion of relevant evidence which was attempted to be left in on behalf of the accused. The learned Judge did not lay sufficient stress on the fact that all the witnesses for the prosecution were interested, when he was charging the jury as to the evidence on particular counts. I wish to mention an instance or two as examples, as there are several such instances to be found in the charge. For instance, in dealing with counts 33, 47 and 60 in paras. 65 to 67 of the charge, the learned Judge first of all points out that the witnesses who speak to those counts are P. Ws. Nos. 18 and 47. Towards the end of para. 67 he points out that P. W. No. 47 does not speak with any personal knowledge as to what happened. It was thus clear that there was only the evidence of P. W. No. 18 in respect of these counts. He has pointed out at the same time that according to the evidence of P. W. No. 18 the events in the house were witnessed not only by himself but also by his wife, his daughter, his brother's wife and his brother's daughter who were in the house at the time of the occurrence. None of these have been examined. The witness also spoke to the commission of dacoity in his house, the dacoity consisting in the fact that a sum of Rs. 100 is said to have been demanded by the accused under threats and that actually he was beaten thereafter. Fortunately for the accused so far as the count of dacoity was concerned, the learned Public Prosecutor stated that the accused were entitled to the benefit of the doubt; otherwise I should not have been surprised if the jury had returned a verdict of guilty in respect of this count also.

The verdict of the jury was (by a majority of one) a verdict of guilty in respect of count 47 and in respect of count 33 they gave their opinions as assessors, as follows: four of them to the effect that none of the accused was guilty and one to the effect that accused Nos. 6 and 13 were guilty. This verdict and these opinions are, in my opinion, directly attributable to the failure on the part of the learned Judge to have warned the jury against acting on the uncorroborated testimony of an interested witness like P. W. No. 18, whose evidence about a part of the same occurrence namely the dacoity, was such that the Crown itself was prepared to advise that the accused were entitled to the benefit of the doubt. On the same evidence, it is impossible to justify the verdict of guilty by 3 to 2, while in respect of another part of the same occurrence backed by the same evidence the majority was 4 to 1 to the effect that none of the accused was guilty. It is impossible to my mind to account for these extraordinary aberrations, so to speak, of judicial opinion delivered by members of the jury in their dual capacity, except on the ground that they did not know what they were doing because of the length of the trial and the length of the charge and the complexity of the case occasioned by the joint trial on a large number of counts. Such a trial not only prejudices the accused but also works havoc in the minds of the jury and makes it very difficult if not impossible for them to express any rational opinion on the matters remitted to them for judgment. On the other hand, instead of warning the jury in respect of the remaining counts namely 33 and 47—count 60 having been practically abandoned by the Crown—that it was not safe to convict in view of the interestedness of the witness and the absence of corroboration, the learned Judge thought it fit to dismiss the argument to this effect by the accused's Counsel in the following words in para 67 of his judgment:

"One of the arguments of accused's Counsel was that in every case in which there was no corroboration, it would be safer for you to reject the testimony. Such a condemnation of uncorroborated testimony is not correct. There is no principle which debars you as judges of fact from relying upon such testimony. No particular quantum of proof is required to prove any fact. In order to hold any fact proved you require only such evidence as would satisfy a reasonable man that the fact is true".

While these observations cannot be said to be erroneous in law, they were undoubtedly not calculated to lead to a correct or just decision in a case of this kind. This was not a case in which these observations should have been made to the jury, which appear to have encouraged instead of discouraging them to accept the uncorroborated testimony of an interested person while the prosecution had given no reason for not examining a number of other witnesses who were available at least for the purpose of corroboration though they were equally interested. Similar observations can be made in regard to a number of other counts dealt with in the charge of the learned Judge. It is not as if any particular observation was not in strict accordance with law or with the evidence in the case, but throughout it appears that wrong guidance was given to the jury by the learned Judge; where caution ought to have been imposed on the jury encouragement was given to them to accept evidence which was obviously to be treated with considerable caution. According to the learned Judge the parties were at bitter enmity and so far as the question of motive was concerned, either of the parties might have started the riot. When such was the position, it was obviously incumbent on the learned Judge to have warned the jury not once, but more than once wherever the evidence was very scanty and lacked corroboration, where corroboration was available, to treat the uncorroborated evidence offered on behalf of the Crown with caution and to accept it only after a careful examination thereof. In several places the learned Judge himself remarks that even as regards the material portions of the prosecution story the truth had not been placed before the Court by the prosecution. For instance in para. 95 of his judgment, he says that he has no hesitation in discrediting the story related by the prosecution as regards theft of hay. He did not accept the broad case for the prosecution that there was an unlawful assembly of the Malas and Edigas from the very beginning whose common object was not only to beat the members of the Kamma community but also to invade their houses, break the doors and windows, cause hurt to the inmates and to commit theft, dacoity, etc. So far as the first part of the occurrence is concerned, he appears to have come to the conclusion in para. 95 of his judgment that there must have been a free fight between the Malas and Edigas on the one hand and the Kammas on the other in Edigagudam in the course of which both parties sustained injuries, and that it was only thereafter that the Edigas and Malas gathered in large numbers and marched into the village and committed several acts of vandalism. Vandalism is one thing and dacoity and theft are quite different, and the learned Judge failed to point out the difference between vandalism and dacoity or theft to the jury when he asked them to give their verdict on counts relating to dacoity and theft.

In several places in his judgment, it is very clear that a good portion of the prosecution evidence was disbelieved by the learned Judge. He concedes in para. 101 of his judgment that all the material prosecution witnesses are Kammas and that it was possible for the prosecution to obtain the testimony of disinterested witnesses belonging to Brahmin and Vysia communities in the village. He says that while this is a ground for scrutinizing the evidence with care, it is not proper to condemn the evidence as a whole. The charge delivered by the learned Judge does not however show that the jury were asked to scrutinize the evidence with care, and if there was any scrutiny, the result of the scrutiny by the jury and by the Judge shows that the scrutiny must have been exceedingly slipshod. Otherwise there would not have been the numerous inconsistencies that are to be found between the opinions of the jury as jurymen and as assessors, and also between what the Judge stated in his judgment and the convictions recorded by him. As an instance of the latter, I might mention that while in para. 142 the learned Judge has recorded the opinion that there was no identification of any of the accused as regards count 43, he has actually convicted a number of accused under that count. He has moreover convicted various accused persons under ss. 440 and 149 I. P. C., while as a matter of fact there was no charge under s. 149 in respect of any of the counts relating to s. 440, I. P. C. It would also appear that the judgment and the finding are inconsistent so far as count 42 is concerned.

I shall go on to indicate briefly the various other defects which are to be found in the charge. The learned Judge omitted to tell the jury that there was no mention of the commission of any house breaking or dacoity in the first report of the occurrence Ex. F. He also omitted to mention to the jury that even in the charge sheet only one dacoity was mentioned whereas in the evidence no less than six dacoities were spoken to. The result of this is seen in the fact that in the case of two dacoities (counts 57 and 58) the jury returned a verdict of guilty by a majority. The inconsistencies between the verdict of the jury as a jury and the opinions of the members of the jury as assessors are to be seen in the following instance On counts 57 and 58 by a majority of 3 to 2 the jury returned a verdict of guilty against accused Nos. 1 to 4, 7, 13, 14, 17 and 18. On the count 34, that is to say, the count relating to the occurrence in the same place regarding which the evidence is the same, the opinion of the assessors was in the case of two not guilty and in the case of two other assessors, that accused Nos. 1 to 3 and 13 were guilty and in the case of the remaining assessor that accused Nos. 1 to 3 were guilty. These opinions and the verdict are not reconcilable. In respect of these very counts also, the leared Judge omitted to direct the jury that the accused implicated by the witnesses were only accused Nos. 1 to 3, 13, 14 and 17. If this had been pointed out, it is not likely that the jury would have returned a verdict even by a majority against accused Nos. 4, 7 and 18 who were not implicated by the witness in the dacoity.

Then again in respect of count 45 which relates to house-breaking, the jury found by a majoriiy of 3 to 2 that all the appellants were guilty, while in respect of the same incident dealt with in count 31 which relates to mischief three out of the five assessor expressed the opinion that none of the accused was guilty, the evidence being the same. In respect of the same count 45 the only eye-witness who speaks to it namely P. W. No 41, mentioned only accused Nos. 1, 3 4, 14 to 16, but this was not specifically mentioned to jury in the charge. The result was that, accused Nos. 15 and 16 who were mentioned by the sole witness were acquitted, whereas, several others who were not mentioned, namely No. 2, 7, 13, 17 and 18, were found guilty by the jury. This again is an inconsistency which deprives, in my judgment, the verdict of the jury of any real value as a judicial verdict. It is impossible really to treat a verdict of this kind with any respect when the same gentlemen in their capacity as assessors on the same evidence have expressed absolutely different and inconsistent opinions. Verdicts of this kind were really not entitled to acceptance, and unless the learned Judge who tried the case was himself in the same boat so to speak, with the jury, it is impossible to account for his acceptance of such verdicts in the face of the opinions of the jurymen as assessors given at the same time. A mere comparison of the opinions with the verdicts would have indicated to him the necessity of expressing his disagreement with the verdict of the jury and making a reference to the High Court. The acceptance of the verdicts in these circumstances shows that there has been a disregard of the duty of the Judge to consider the verdicts carefully before he expresses his agreement with them or decides not to express his disagreement. Instances of this kind may be multiplied, and they are all found in the memorandum of appeal: vide particularly paras. 13, 14, 15 and 16 of the grounds of appeal. I may here mention that the learned Public Prosecutor has not attempted any explanation of these inconsistencies when the appeal was argued before me and indeed no explanation seems to be possible. The inconsistencies are so gross and so glaring that the only explanation would be though it would hardly be a satisfactory explanation that all those who were connected with the trial were so confused at the end of it that they did not know what they were doing. Such an explanation would certainly not be very useful from the point of view of the prosecution. I come next to the contention that relevant evidence was excluded by the learned Judge during the triel. In the case of P. Ws. Nos. 23 and 24 there is specific proof that certain evidence was excluded : see pp. 96 and 100 of the printed record. P. W. No. 23 who speaks to the commission of various offences in his house in respect of which covictions have been recorded, was asked in cross-examination

"when you went and reported to the Sub-Inspector at 1 o'clock you did not mention the names of any of the culprits ?"
